Some days ago we saw a handsome fabric, a dark fancy mixture, which would attract the instant attention of good dressers.

Suits made from it would retail easily at $20; it looked and felt very good; the majority would say it was good.

But it showed by test at least forty per cent of cotton; the actual looks-value of a suit of it would be not over $5.

You see perhaps, why we say "the mercerized cotton cheat"; that fabric is a fraud, whatever the maker's intention may have been. The fraud is in fact, not in intention, in this case.

We congratulate ourselves, and the multitude of clothes-wearers whose confidence we have gained, that our label is a sign of security against such things; that it is never associated with "mercerized cotton." That label is a small thing to look for, but a big thing to find.

To the Public:

Now that the clamor of misrepresentation concerning the gas business in New York City has temporarily exhausted itself, and nothing, beyond informing gas consumers of the truth, can result from their publication, the following undisputed facts from the testimony taken by the recent Joint Committee of the Senate and Assembly respecting public and private lighting in the City of New York, are printed for your information.

COST OF GAS.

The cost of gas to the Consolidated Company at the burner, for the past five years, was as follows:

1903..63.04 cents, with 10 cents reserve.....	73.04 cents
1902..62.02 cents, with 10 cents reserve.....	72.02 cents
1901..61.70 cents, with 10 cents reserve.....	71.70 cents
1900..63.16 cents, with 10 cents reserve.....	73.16 cents

(Senate Document No. 30, pp. 372-77.)

This cost included only 3.66 cents per thousand for interest for 1904, and substantially nothing previously, the $20,000,000 of Debentures for Astoria construction not having been issued until 1904.

THE 10% RESERVE FUND.

The 10c. per thousand feet for a reserve or contingent fund is fair. The New York State Senate Committee of 1886 recognized and suggested the propriety of a reserve fund of 10% on the capital invested, out of the profits, in addition to dividends (Senate Document 45, p. LXXX.)

The necessity of a reserve fund of 10c. per thousand is conceded. In the Massachusetts Gas investigation of 1905, 10c. per thousand, with no extraordinary contingencies then apparent, was testified to without a word of contradiction. During that investigation it appeared that by one explosion the Boston Gas Light Co. suffered a loss equal to 10c. per thousand for four years on its output, and had been compelled to suspend dividends because no reserve fund had been provided for such an emergency.

The Consolidated Company of New York is facing an extraordinary situation at this moment in replacing and unifying at Astoria the plants now scattered over Manhattan Island.

It will cost to replace the Consolidated's present manufacturing capacity at Astoria $10,400,000 more than the abandoned property now occupied for similar uses on Manhattan Island will realize.

The result of going to Astoria, as affecting cost of production, is problematical, but the effect upon public comfort on Manhattan Island is certain. It is hoped to there reduce the holder cost, but the cost of distribution, on account of distance, and the expense of the tunnel under the East River, will be increased.

CAPITAL AND DIVIDENDS.

The capital of the Company is $80,000,000.

It stood at $39,078,000 until 1900, since which time it has been increased to $80,000,000.

A considerable portion of this increased stock was issued at $232 per share, in payment of the Company's indebtedness. None of the remaining shares of this increased stock was issued at less than $150 per share in cash, and some of it was issued at nearly $200 per share in cash. The premium thus paid in by stockholders in cash, (exclusive of that realized upon stock issued for indebtedness) amounted to $14,322,000, which, added to the par value of the stock makes a total of $94,322,000.

1886	3%	1896	8%
1887	4%	1897	8%
1888	4%	1898	8%
1889	5%	1899	5½%
1890	5%	1900	6%
1891	5%	1901	8%
1892	6%	1902	8%
1893	7½%	1903	8%
1894	8%	1904	8½%

Dividends at these rates during the past five years have only been possible by using part of the surplus, accumulated prior to the reduction of the price of gas to $1.00 per thousand feet.

The recent rate of 10% has been expressly approved in this State and elsewhere as legitimate for this kind of business, considering its great hazards, as instanced above in the Massachusetts accident. It was distinctly approved by a Committee of the Senate of this State in 1886 and was there coupled with the recommendation of a Reserve Fund of 10%. In the State of Massachusetts, in the year 1900, in discussing the situation of the New England Gas & Coke Company and the dividends which might be permitted to be paid by it, if brought under the jurisdiction of the Gas & Electric Light Commission, the Legislative Committee referred to such return as "The 10% heretofore recognized by custom." (House Document No. 1405 of 1900.)

The minutes of the investigation made by the Massachusetts Gas & Electric Commission in January, 1905, indicate that many prominent cities in Massachusetts under their jurisdiction are permitted to pay at least 10 per cent. on their capital stock, including the following:

Fall River	15%	Lynn	10%
Attleboro	12%	Milford	10%
Beverly	10%	North Attleboro	10%
Cambridge	10%	Springfield	10%
Lowell	10%

The rate of 8% is wholly insufficient as a maximum rate for a business of this kind. If it is to be fixed at that figure for the most prosperous period of a company's business, what will happen when bad years, from strikes, increase of cost of material, decrease of consumption by depression or possible competition of other illuminant shall come?

THE PRICE OF GAS OUTSIDE OF NEW YORK CITY.

In no other City of this State is there a uniform one dollar rate.

The average rate paid for light in all communities in New York State is gross $1.70 and net (for prompt payment) $1.57 per thousand feet.

No City of over 500,000 population in the United States has a rate lower than $1.00. The three or four smaller cities in the United States able to shave the dollar rate all have special advantages, such as location in or close to coal fields where they pay but a fraction of New York's prices for coal. The difference on this account amounts in instances to from 12 to 18 cents per thousand.

All of the facts so far stated relate to the Consolidated Gas Company, which distributes about 13,000,000,000 out of the 21,000,000,000 cubic feet distributed in the Boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx.

OTHER COMPANIES IN NEW YORK CITY.

The cost of gas to other companies than the Consolidated (as shown by their records in evidence), including interest on bonds, but no dividends, is as follows:

NORTHERN UNION	92.94 cents.
NEW AMSTERDAM	90.99 cents.
MUTUAL	84.00 cents.
CENTRAL UNION	80.12 cents.
STANDARD	64.39 cents.

The average of cost on this basis, including the Consolidated at 74

New York Scores Well-Earned Victory Over Pittsburg by 7 to 1.

Strong and safe batting by the National League champions caused the downfall of the Pittsburgs yesterday by a score of 7 to 1, but it was only in the eighth inning that the victory was made certain. Up to that inning it was either team's game, although the New Yorks had the slight advantage of having scored two runs to one.

Little Robertaille had one damaging inning, the first, but after that the champions were kept guessing until the eighth. The Pittsburg pitcher had been beautifully supported, Wagner making two sensational catches, the first one of Donlin's hit in the first inning, when, with outstretched arms and on a full run he caught the ball far back of third base, and Roger Bresnahan suffered a similar fate in the sixth inning.

While the Pittsburgs had been playing an excellent all-around game, Taylor had kept the visitors' hits well scattered, but a couple of mistakes made affairs look pretty serious for the champions. In one instance, the fourth inning, after the first two men had been retired, Devlin's poor attempt and fumble of Clancy's hit was responsible for the filling of the bases, but Carisch was not equal to the emergency, and he was thrown out by Dahlen to McGann. The Pittsburgs were more successful in the seventh inning, when they escaped a shut-out in Gilbert's failure to field Robertaille's rather easy hit. Leach hit safely, but Carisch's fly was captured by Mertes. Then came Gilbert's fumble, followed by Manager Clarke's nice hit to left field, which enabled Leach to tally.

In addition to his effective pitching, Taylor's heavy batting helped materially to swell the total for New York. After striking out in the second inning he caused the spectators to rise from their seats and snout by hitting to left field for two bases, and in the batting soiree in the eighth he placed a ball to the left-field fence, which bounded away from Clarke, and the runner landed on third.

The champions opened on Robertaille in a lively way, after Donlin's fly had been so surprisingly taken by Wagner. Browne made the first hit, a ball to the right field, and after stealing second cleverly was sent across the plate by McGann's stroke to centre. Bresnahan advanced the runner to second on a safe hit, but McGann, with poor judgment, attempted to steal third, and was stopped by Carisch's good throw. Taylor's double and Donlin's single tallied Taylor in the fifth, and then there was a lull in the run-getting until the eighth inning, when five more men reached home. Ritchey attended to Gilbert's fly. Taylor hit for three bases, but Donlin was sent to first on called balls, much to his disappointment. Browne's single to left field gave Taylor a run, and McGann's one base hit scored Donlin. Browne tallied on Bresnahan's hit, and after Carisch had made a really great catch of Mertes's foul, he made a horrible throw to the plate to catch McGann, and the result was that two men came home. Clarke wound up the inning by making a brilliant catch of Dahlen's hit.

Chicago took the second game of the series from the Brooklyns yesterday, but it required ten innings to decide which team had won. The score was 2 to 1, and Brooklyn had the better of the contest up to the end of the sixth inning, when Chicago tied the score in the seventh and won in the tenth, after one was out, on a base on balls to Evers and Kling's three-base hit. AMERICAN LEAGUE.

Greater New Yorks Bunched Their Hits and Shut Out St. Louis.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., May 19.—The New York team shut out the locals to-day, 3 to 0, and broke even on the series of four games. Powell pitched superbly, and in the ninth inning, with the bases full, retired the St. Louis team without allowing a single run across the plate. Howell, his opponent, pitched well, striking out nine men, but the visitors made their hits when they counted. Howell accomplished the feat of pulling out the side on strikes, Kleinow, Powell, and Dougherty the victims.

New York scored once in the second, when Chase reached first, stole second, took third on Yeager's sacrifice, and scored when Kleinow singled. In the third inning, Dougherty began with a two-base hit. Keeler sacrificed him to third, and Williams singled, allowing Dougherty to trot home. Howell added a wild pitch and Anderson followed with a safe hit, Williams scoring.

After the third inning Howell pitched effectively, Kleinow and Keeler being the only two men to reach second after that. Yeager had much to do with saving the game in the ninth, when he made a good stop of Gleason's hit. Had he not made the stop, the ball would have gone for two bases, and Rockenfield, who reached first on a single, would have scored.

WON AND LOST IN DETROIT.

DETROIT, May 19.—Detroit and Washington broke even in the first American League double-header of the season. In the first game Kitson was always effective, and the Washingtons were at his mercy. The locals bunched four hits, with two bases on balls in the second inning, knocking Hughes out. In the second game Mullin was wild and easy to hit. Jacobsen was a puzzle all through. Scores:

CLEVELAND, 11; BOSTON, 4

CLEVELAND, May 19.—Cleveland had no difficulty in defeating Boston in the only game of the series that the two teams were able to play. Tannehill was hit hard and received miserable support. On the other hand, Hess pitched steadily with men on bases, except in the ninth inning, and received good support. Jackson of Cleveland was hit by a fly ball in the face in the "sun field" prior to the game and was unable to play. The "bus" carrying the Boston players to the grounds was struck by a street car at the corner of Euclid and Dunham Avenues. The players were badly shaken up, but none was seriously hurt. Score:

NEWARK, 7; ROCHESTER, 0.

Special to The New York Times.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., May 19.—Newark had a walk-over to-day, shutting out the Rochesters and making seven runs on a combination of free passes and errors. Pardee held Rochester down to six scattered hits, and fast fielding did the rest. Faulkner was not in form. Kennedy's three costly errors in the second gave Newark the lead and the game. The score:

MONTREAL, 4; PROVIDENCE, 1.

Special to The New York Times.

MONTREAL, Quebec, May 19.—The Montreals won to-day in the first and second innings. Miller walked, advanced on Bannon's hit, ad reached home on Meaney's out to right field. While Rock missed Lachance's grounder, Bannon came in on a wild throw to home, and Lachance got around on a stolen base and Dyer's out. McCarthy singled in the second inning. Miller hit for two bases, and McCarthy came home. Two double plays by Montreal enlivened the proceedings. Score by innings:

THE FREEDOM OF THE TONGUE.

A correspondent writes us to know if there be not a law to punish a man for trying to injure the credit of his country in foreign lands, since it is the act of a public enemy, and, if there be no such law, should there not be one. Our answer is that there is no such law, so far as we are informed, and that none could be devised that would not do more harm than good.

The enormity of the offense is clear enough. In the vast and complex operations of modern business the exchanges of the world are largely made through credit. They are necessarily so made; if they were made on a cash basis or anything approaching it, their volume, their value, their utility to the millions on millions who share in them would be reduced by a proportion that it is not easy to calculate, but which would certainly set the work of the world back practically as the abolition of telegraphy would set it back. If it were possible for some malicious or insane person so to shake the confidence of even one great people in the working of their business institutions that on a given day they should demand the instant settlement of all claims, there is no picturing the ruin and distress that would ensue. No material disaster, no outbreak of the forces of physical nature, whirlwind, earthquake, tidal wave along the coast of a continent, would inflict such widespread and overwhelming mischief. And it is reasonable enough to think that any man who should deliberately seek to bring about such a calamity, or should spread in foreign lands the prediction of it, in the hope and with the intention that the prediction will be believed, may very properly be described as, at least, wishing to be a public enemy, and as such deserving restraint and punishment by law.

There is, as we have said, so far as we know, no law that can be appealed to to restrain such a creature or punish his offense. In part the absence of such legislation is due to the feeling that in ancient Rome kept the tables of the law clean of any mention of the crime of patricide. But mostly it is due to the old Anglo-Saxon conviction that freedom of speech, freedom of even the most venomous or most crazy tongue, renders it—not harmless certainly, but capable of less harm than would flow from efforts forcibly to silence it. In that regard we have inherited the English tradition, the English mode of reasoning. We have on the one hand stout confidence in the ability of the truth to take care of itself in an open fight with error and falsehood. When a man arises among us who, from whatever motives, assails the honesty and soundness of our whole fabric of finance, and proclaims that he can and will so terrify our people that on a certain day they will demand instant payment of some eleven billions of their deposits, his wild boast excites rather to contempt than to uneasiness. And when he circulates these fearsome vaticinations in the foreign press the readers thereof, seeing in the same papers that the affairs of eighty millions of Americans are moving quietly and prosperously, merely wonder what form of eccentricity our fertile and energetic national intellect will next produce.

But back of our deep-seated trust in the power of the truth to resist the assaults of error and wanton falsehood lies a still deeper sentiment of distrust as to the actual working of any practical political agency in the regulation and repression of freedom of speech. Between such a monstrous case as we have referred to and perfectly rational discussion of the financial situation there is, of course, a wide gulf. But in the mid-region there is a debatable dividing line between what is and what is not permissible which we as a people will not commission any Legislature or even any court to define save in the distinct effort to provide protection for well-defined injury to personal rights. We have the rooted opinion that vague powers are arbitrary powers, and that arbitrary powers are a source of endless abuse. To punish falsehood about the credit of the country the courts or some equivalent agencies must decide what is falsehood. For that task no men chosen by any method yet discovered are surely fitted, and that undefined, portentous, risky function the American people will place in the hands of no officials they have ever known or can imagine themselves selecting.

HELPLESS PHILADELPHIA.

Everybody, at least outside of Philadelphia, has by this time smiled at the local application of BYRON'S saying to the Philadelphian who "awoke—and found himself famous." Now it is the whole community which is awake, is, in fact, undergoing one of the most acute attacks of insomnia which it has ever known. That must be some extraordinary occasion which induces respectable citizens of the City of Brotherly Love to crowd the galleries and corridors and even the floor of the meeting room of the committee which had announced a public hearing, and of the Council Chambers of the city, and loudly denounce as "thieves" the members of the Municipal Legislature who were taking action on a matter undoubtedly within their competence and jurisdiction. A more impressive exhibition of the breakdown of municipal government under the pressure of machine politics has never been furnished in any American city, not even in New York thirty-odd years ago, in the high and palmy days of the Tammany ring.

> This flagrant betrayal of public rights and interests can be justified on no considerations of expediency or necessity. It is crime so daring and outrageous that to most honest people it has seemed incredible. It surrenders a well-considered, satisfactory, and profitable lease, with assured income and control, and turns over the public property and franchise absolutely to a private corporation, with the unrestrained monopoly of selling gas to the community at an exorbitant and oppressive rate, for three-quarters of a century. The pretended consideration is a sum of money less than is assured the city under the existing lease, for which the city abandons all claim upon the gas works or upon the income derived from them for two generations to come.

There is no dispute about the facts. No voice or pen for which the speaker or writer avows responsibility seems to be raised in favor of this mortgaging of the destinies of two generations of unborn Philadelphians to a corporation which will have no single representative now alive when the mortgage expires by its own limitation. The question is, What is the remedy? There is talk of "an appeal to the courts." But if the local Legislature has acted within its legal powers, of which there seems to be no real question, such talk seems futile and idle. The only present remedy our Philadelphian contemporary from which we have just quoted is able to suggest is that the Mayor, himself a creature of the machine for relief from which his intervention is invoked, shall use the powers of his office, not merely to veto the contract thus entered into, which it is assumed that he will do, but to prevent the execution of it in spite of him by clearing out of the municipal service all the subordinate creatures of that machine. By doing this, or by threatening to do it, it is expected that he will be able to prevent the consummation of this "most filthy bargain" by which the local legislators of Philadelphia threaten to sell not only their own birthright, but the birthright of their fellow-citizens and of two generations of Philadelphians still unborn, in return for a mess of present pottage to be distributed among them or divided with them by their boss, in such proportions as to him may seem good.

Doubtless this is good counsel for the immediate emergency. Mayor WEAVER does seem to have an opportunity to make a great civic reputation for himself while rendering a great civic service. But it is intolerable that a community should hold its most important communal rights and interests by so frail a thread as the possible faithfulness of its Mayor against the probable unfaithfulness of its municipal lawmakers. The ultimate moral for Philadelphia is the same as the moral which experience has taught us to draw for New York, and as every great American community has learned to draw for itself. That moral is that to reduce to the minimum the powers of a local Legislature constituted as that of New York is, or as that of Philadelphia is, is the only real safeguard against the abuse of those powers, and that, in particular, a New York Board of Aldermen, or a Philadelphia Common and Select Council, should have no power in the granting of public franchises to private corporations.

MORE REVENUE.

The United States Treasury deficit for the current fiscal year up to the close of business yesterday amounted to $36,645,020. The Government must have more revenue. The large excess of expenditures over receipts is a very potent argument in support of tariff revision. If in directing the purchase of Panama Canal machinery and supplies in the cheapest market President ROOSEVELT intended to announce an Administration policy of tariff revision the present situation of the Treasury would be one of his justifications.

The short way to increased revenue lies in a reduction of duties on imports. All of the Dingley duties are high, some of them are prohibitory, many of them are no longer needed for the protection of any legitimate industry. The "stand-patter" in the Senate or House who, while leaving the Dingley duties untouched, should advocate the imposition of new internal revenue duties to provide the needed revenue would be regarded with interest and curiosity as an example of supreme audacity and hardihood. He would have to be unusually callous to withstand the fire not merely of public criticism but of public ridicule and resentment. The Treasury situation must be faced, more revenue must be provided. Other than by reduction of duties there is no revenue-producing measure that would stand a moment's examination in the presence of candid men.

Secretary of Commerce METCALF in his address at the banquet of the National Association of Manufacturers in Atlanta on Friday evening dwelt, according to the press reports, "upon the slow progress of exports of manufactured goods from this country." There is another potent argument for the President's policy. By reason of largely increased home consumption and through the competition of other grain-growing countries our exports of breadstuffs have of late shown a tendency to diminish in a degree which has been the cause of some uneasiness in official and economic circles.

There is no occasion for uneasiness—quite the contrary—provided we have something else to sell to foreigners in place of breadstuffs. We ought to sell to them our manufactures to the extent of much more than double the present volume of manufactured exports. But the growth in this branch of our foreign trade is slow, as Mr. METCALF pointed out. One thing that retards it is the perfectly inexcusable policy of putting duties on raw materials, thereby enhancing the cost of our manufactured goods, which must be sold at low prices in order to make their way in foreign markets, as has been somewhat conspicuously pointed out in the Panama Canal matter. A considerable part of the manufacturing interests, indeed all the enlightened part, which has come to understand that productive duties may hinder as well as help, will be behind the President if he insists upon an amendment of the tariff law.

THE DIFFERENTIALS ARBITRATION

The opinion rendered by the Inter-State Commerce Commission as to the preferences given to Philadelphia and Baltimore on exports of flour and grain is favorable to New York, so far as it goes. The reduction in the preferences recommended will, if carried out, undoubtedly correct some of the injustice heretofore done to this port.

But the opinion and the reasons for reaching it are a curious illustration of the working of the Commission's mind. In the present instance the result is simply a suggestion to the railroads concerned, but if it were an order, and if the Commission had the power to enforce the order, the conclusion would have been reached by the same process. That process is an attempt to decide how a substantially uniform rate of freight from the interior to Liverpool, including rail and ocean charges, can be secured. In making this attempt the Commission considers that the routes to the Southern ports are shorter and the facilities for ocean transport are not so good. Therefore the New York roads must charge more freight. They may be willing and able to carry goods at less cost than the roads to Philadelphia and Baltimore, but they must not be permitted to do so, or "competition" by the latter will be restricted. A more complete non sequitur we cannot imagine.

THE CHICAGO STRIKE.

That the Chicago strike is breaking up is evident from the fact that negotiations are in progress which usually precede surrender. It is not proposed to declare the strike at an end nor to lift the boycott against the concerns which have incurred the displeasure of the unions; but the strikers will quietly slip back into the places still open for them and defeat will be confessed without any demonstration. No doubt this is just as good as any other method, if it will put an end to rioting and violence, permit the business activities of Chicago to be resumed, and stop the widespread public demoralization inseparable from the conditions which now exist.

One of the conditions which the strikers seek to make, that those who have disregarded the Federal injunction shall not be prosecuted, will be very difficult to make effective, even if the employers promise it. No such promise should be given, and if given it should not be respected by the Federal authorities. Disobeying an injunction is much too serious a matter to be condoned by private agreement. The leaders are naturally anxious for their own safety, but should have no encouragement to believe that having danced to their own satisfaction they do not rest under the same obligations as common mortals to pay the piper.

The case of Mr. BOWEN, our Minister at Caracas, is very simple. If he reported even the gossip of Caracas respecting the procedures of his predecessor at that capital confidentially and for the exclusive information of the State Department, it seems that he was not only within his rights, but in the line of his duties, even though the gossip might, on examination, turn out to be malicious and absurd. It is true that, even in this case, Mr. BOWEN would not have shown a high degree of diplomatic discretion, seeing that the subject of the gossip had become a high official of the department to which Mr. BOWEN was to report, and even, at the time the reports reached it, to some extent in charge of it. The reporting might be expected to strain the personal relations between Messrs. LOOMIS and BOWEN. But if, on the one hand, Mr. BOWEN made himself anywise responsible for accusations which had no basis in fact, or if, on the other, he was responsible for the public promulgation of such charges, whether they had any basis in fact or not, then it is evident that his usefulness as a diplomatic representative is permanently impaired. It is these questions that the President may be assumed to be investigating, and not at all the question whether Mr. LOOMIS was in fact guilty of the performances of which Mr. BOWEN is accused of accusing him. The public is already satisfied that there was nothing in the charges, and Mr. LOOMIS is not on trial.

The backward Spring is certainly not favorable to as large a harvest of wheat as the May forecast indicated, but it would be easily possible to attach too much importance to the gloomy predictions which are being used on the Chicago Board of Trade to "bull" the price of wheat for the advantage and interest of the speculators. This grain is now heading as far north as Southern Illinois and Indiana, and while the low temperature may retard the harvest, it is not likely materially to affect the total yield, unless it should continue into June, for which the meteorological records of recent years give no precedent. As a whole, the wheat crop is in promising condition, and since the first of May has shown satisfactory progress.

Not being a common carrier or a public utility, and not enjoying in his capacity of a freeholder any franchise privileges, the landlord is probably at liberty to discriminate against any applicant for permission to occupy his house whom he may consider unacceptable. Hence the resolution adopted by the City Council of Boston, directed against landlords who decline tenants with children, is wholly academic. It sets forth that:

> In the opinion of the City Council of Boston such discrimination is hostile to the safety of the city, the State, and the Nation, and worthy of the condemnation of all good citizens, as well as of such legislation as the General Court may properly undertake.

The General Court may feel great interest in the matter, but just how that interest can find expression in legislation does not appear.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

"In the Presence of the Unexplained."

A lecture to which the London papers gave considerable space and to which a large audience that included several more or less eminent people gave a curiously patient hearing was recently delivered before the Society for Psychical Research by Prof. CHARLES RICHET on so-called "automatic writing" in languages unknown to the writers. The professor, it seems, has been devoting a good deal of his valuable time of late to study of the case of a woman who claims to have no slightest knowledge of classic tongues, but who goes into "trances," and while in that state writes futile sentences in very bad Greek. Here are some specimens of those that have proved translatable: "Human wisdom is of small account, and, indeed, is nothing." "Lo, I am about to leave you." "When the sun is declining or rising the shadows grow longer." "Greeting, I am the all-powerful, by name ANTOINE RENOUARD. Give thanks to GOD." The last of these imbecilities proved particularly interesting to Prof. RICHET for the reason that the name in it is that of an ancestor of his who published several editions of the Greek authors. By laborious research the professor has been able to find most of the other sentences—or something like them—in various books, some of them rare, or given to illustrate definitions in the Greek-French and French-Greek dictionary of BYZANTIUS and COROMELAS. And yet, instead of concluding therefrom that his "Mme. X." is a lady who finds it amusing—as, indeed, it must be—to humbug the amiable members of the Society for Psychical Research, or that at best she innocently set before them fragments of what may be called forgotten memories, the professor eliminated as untenable the theory of intentional fraud and would not even admit that the hypothesis of unconscious remembrance was worth consideration. Much to the disappointment of many of his hearers, however, he also dismissed the so convenient assumption of "spirits," as supported by nothing he had seen, and declared that it was enough to say that "we are in the presence of the unexplained." It seems hardly worth while to research psychically if one is to come up out of the murky—and slightly malodorous—waters with no better reward than that. Yet it was all he had to give his auditors, who included Sir OLIVER LODGE—a real scientist, even if he does permit a queer lot to shelter their absurdities in the shadows of his name—and "Mrs. VERRALL, Prof. BARRETT, Mr. PODMORE, and Mr. WALTER LEAF," all of whom are mentioned by The London Times among the "also presents," and therefore must be credited with some degree of notability of some sort or another.

Monkeying with the Flag.

We are again moved to ask the rather presuming people who claim to be inspired by an especial and peculiar love of peace quite lacking in the sanguinary barbarians they seem to think the rest of us are, not by what right, for they have none, but with what faintest excuse, they venture to symbolize their private aims and notions by putting a white border around the American flag. Our affection for that flag has never degenerated into fetich-worship of a piece of bunting, and we have been able to endure not a few uses of it which more sensitive admirers have regarded with ululating horror, but these peace folk do try our patience hard when they sew a strip of white all around an already sufficiently variegated banner and tacitly demand our admission that the addition is an improvement. It's nothing of the kind. The American flag, as ordained by the statutes, does stand for peace, now, as always, but now as always it stands for lots of things besides peace, and one of the other things for which it stands is righteous and necessary war. It has streamed, not out of place, on many a battlefield, and we, at least, can easily imagine a crueler determination of the fates than that it should stream there again. So far as our observation of these peace people extends they are themselves a particularly pugnacious group, particularly inclined to the use of violent language and the calling of harsh names that tend toward conflict. That they have coolly violated the law which forbids any mutilation or change of the flag may seem to them of as small moment as does the implication of all their speeches that nine-tenths of our National heroes were bloodthirsty savages, and that better men—the members of the Peace Societies, for inevitable instance—would have made much finer work of running the country. Their course has a different appearance to some who, hating war fully as much as they do, yet deem it only common sense to keep in mind that the millennium has not yet dawned and is not to be expected—confidently—for several years to come.

Chicago the Vivacious.

It needed only the development in Chicago of an inclination on the part of sympathizers with the non-union drivers to stone and club the members of the union who have been allowed to remain at work to make the state of affairs in that remarkable city entirely fantastic and uncomprehensible. Perhaps the municipal authorities know what they are about and where they are coming out, but to remote observers the situation is just a little complex. Everybody, apparently, is taking impartial cracks at every head in sight, and the rights and wrongs of the case are steadily passing further and further out of view. Soon there will be none left in the city who has not become guilty of sins either of commission or omission, and then, no doubt, the Weather Bureau will prophesy that "brimstone showers are to be expected this afternoon and tonight in the Lower Lake Region." The fulfillment of that prediction would excite general interest, and there would be no end of admiration for the fireworks in the evening.

PARK VANDALS AT WORK.

Complaint of the Neglect of Morningside Park.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Will you permit me, through your columns, to call attention to the utter neglect of the Park and Police Departments to protect Morningside Park from the hordes of young vandals who overrun that beautiful spot daily, stealing flowers, destroying shrubbery, and committing nearly every other form of devilry that maliciousness can invent? If the police, who are never at hand, will station themselves at the exits of the park any day after 4 P. M., they will see children coming out loaded with flowers and branches torn from the shrubbery.

The grass in the park is being worn bare by dozens of footpaths running in every direction, and altogether Morningside Park, which has cost the city several million dollars, is going to the dogs generally. Does Commissioner Pallas know it, and if so, does he care?

MORNINGSIDE.

New York, May 17, 1905.

Sympathy from England.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have the pleasure to inclose a resolution unanimously passed at the last meeting of this Executive Council in reference to the interference by the Supreme Court of the United States invalidating laws of the State of New York, limiting hours of labor, and I shall be glad if you will kindly insert the same.

"That if the incredible news be true that the Supreme Court of the United States has invalidated laws of the State of New York limiting the hours of labor on the pretext that such limitation is an unconstitutional interference with the freedom of contract, we hereby express our warm indignation at such monstrous chicanery and pettifogging hypocrisy, and we tender to the organized labor of America the assurance of our deepest sympathy and concurrence in any measures which they may adopt against this prostitution of justice in the corrupt service of an inhuman capitalism."

Didn't Act for Austrian Consul.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Under the heading, "Mosaic Marriages Illegal," in to-day's TIMES you mentioned my name as a representative of the Austrian Consul. I beg to inform you that I did not act as such representative, but as a private party.

Sad, Indeed.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

While watching the funeral of the late Hiram Cronk I heard one near say: "He was in the Mexican war of 1812." Another contradicted him and said it was the civil war of 1812, and a third said it was the Revolution of 1812. Not one in the crowd thought for a moment that it was the second war with England. What a sad thing for people not to know their own country's history!

"Rotary" Lunch in Paris.

From The London Telegraph.

PARIS, May 6.—Some sporting men have been having a lunch party of a new kind, which can best be described as "rotary." They sat down round a table laid in car of the Big Wheel. The word "Go!" being given the wheel began to turn, and the party fell to on the hors d'oeuvres. By the time the car had accomplished one revolution there were radishes, olives, or shrimps left, and the chablis had run out. A halt of a few seconds sufficed for bringing on turbot and more chablis, and the wheel went round again. The lunch proceeded in this way to the end. The third revolution ushered in the third course, filet a la Richelieu and Macon. During the fourth duck and green peas were disposed of, with some Pontet-Canet. The first champagne cork was let go when the fifth round began and the entremets was served and champagne continued during the sixth with the dessert. When coffee and liqueurs came on the diners decided to go round no more, but to sit perfectly still on the solid earth for some minutes.

The Office Seeks the Man.

From The Philadelphia Record.

HOAX—Do you believe the office should seek the man?

JOAX—The tax office generally does.

ETIQUETTE.

The gossips tell a story of a Sparrow and a Cat,
The Feline lean and hungry, and the Fowl exceeding fat.
With eager, famished energy, and claws of gripping steel,
Puss pounced upon the Sparrow and prepared to make a meal.

The Sparrow never struggled when he found that he was caught,
(If somewhat slow in action he was mighty quick of thought,)
But chirped in simple dignity that seemed to fit the case,
"No gentleman would ever eat before he'd washed his face!"

For cats are great observers of the niceties of life—
He paused a breath and licked his paws, the proper thing to do,
When, chirruping derisively, away the Sparrow flew!

In helpless, hopeless hunger, at that Mocker on the bough
Poor Pussy glowered longingly, then vowed a solemn vow:
"Henceforth I'll eat my dinner first, then wash myself!"—And that's
The universal etiquette for educated cats.

NEEDS OF AGED CLERGYMEN.

Minister's Comment Inspired by the Suggested Rockefeller Gift.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

"A hint at gift of John D. Rockefeller of $10,000,000 for the fund that cares for the old ministers of the Baptist Church."—From THE NEW YORK TIMES.

One man in ten millions has at last hit the nail on the head. There are some things at home which require looking after before we feed and clothe the naked heathen. It is a shame and a disgrace to the Episcopal Church to-day that she suffers her old men to go unprovided for. Mr. Rockefeller has seen this in his own society, and has the heart to feel it, and, seeing and feeling, he says: The old ministers first; then, after that, missions.

True charity begins at home. Take care of the fathers and make ample provision for their comfort, then go on to conquer other fields. There must be at least 600 of the clergy who are on the ragged edge of destitution in the Episcopal Church to-day. Think of it, ye millionaires, ye women of wealth, who sit at ease in Zion, ye clergy who are rich and enjoying large incomes, do you imagine this is according to the will of God whom you affect to serve? Can you expect God's blessing on your endeavors in other lines when you permit the men who have grown old in the Master's service to suffer such humiliation, such destitution?

WRONG GAS FIGURES.

Mount Vernon's Rate Was Misstated, a Correspondent Declares.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

A day or two ago there appeared in your advertising columns a table of figures alleged to be a comparison of the prices charged for gas at all the cities, towns, &c., of this State.

Of course, it goes without the saying that this advertisement is merely a bid on the part of the gas monopoly of this city to curry favor with consumers, many of whom, after a casual glance at the figures published, will possibly say: "We are not so badly off, after all." To those who give the matter a moment's thought, however, it will be at once apparent that the figures given by the gas company have no merit or value at all, even if they are correct, as seems doubtful, from the fact that the cost of gas at Mount Vernon is stated to be $1.50 per 1,000 cubic feet, whereas, as a matter of personal knowledge, the rate in that city is but $1 per 1,000 cubic feet, unless it has been increased within the past year, which I doubt.

Again, there are undoubtedly many cities and towns included in the published list where a discount of from 25 to 33 1-3 per cent. is allowed on gas bills settled within ten days from date rendered, but the trust has made no allowance for such discounts.

The Dust Nuisance.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I am glad to see that you are still allowing your readers to record their grievances against the dust nuisance. Several times lately the porters in the elevated stations near where I have been standing have been sweeping up clouds of dry dust, and each time I have begged them to ask for garden watering pots and a small supply of water to allay the dust before sweeping in the ordinary way.

Of course, that is a crude way of dealing with it, but better than forcing us to swallow it. I can imagine an invention somewhat on the order of our carpet sweepers, to brush the dust, without raising it, into receptacles, or, better still, to suck it, pump fashion, into a box, where it would be harmless until burned. Would one of our elevated Directors earn undying gratitude from the public, or at least save this same public from many attacks of grip, or even worse diseases, by instituting the use of a "sucking pump dust destroyer," which he might patent?

The Inexpensive Auto.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

For about a year or two we have read a great deal about a new invention of a certain Mr. Edison, an invention permitting the inexpensive and practical storing of electric power in a new kind of storage battery. This invention was to make automobiles as cheap, almost, and as popular as bicycles used to be. Since then we have heard nothing but silence. Would it not be of interest to more than one of your faithful ones if you sent one of your men out to Orange to find out what the trouble is? It would interest me, and I know it would interest the man living on the floor below, south side, and so I naturally conclude that it also would interest several others.

An Appreciated Policeman.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The mounted policeman on lower Broadway whose shield number is 4,194 is certainly a credit to the mounted squad. He is very courteous to citizens, and very amiable to the poor dumb horses. If all the force were the same as this individual I am sure there would be less dismissals.

Italy's "Tax on Imbeciles."

From The London Pall Mall Gazette.

ROME, April 24.—The State lottery is one of those questions about which much has been written in Italy, and about which animated discussions are constantly going on. The opinions are much divided. Some say it is immoral and dishonorable that the State, instead of setting a good example, should be an incentive to gambling, while others, independently of the large amount which this institution brings in to the budget of the country, maintain that after so many centuries it is impossible to abolish it, as, if it were done, it would merely abandon the people into the hands of private speculators, who, besides keeping up the gambling habit, would not surround it with the guarantees of honesty insured by the Government. Foreigners do not perhaps know exactly in what this "scandal" consists. Out of the numbers of from 1 to 90 every Saturday five winning numbers are extracted. For the player to win it is necessary to draw one or more of these numbers. If you draw one right you gain fourteen times what you paid—that is 86 probabilities in favor of the Government. If you draw two numbers you gain 250 times what you paid, but you have only 10 probabilities in your favor, while the Government has 3,995; if you draw three, you gain 4,250 times what you risked, but while the probabilities in your favor are still 10, those of the Government are 117,470. The same proportion is maintained if you draw four or all the numbers, so that the Socialist paper "Avanti" calls this lottery the "TAX on the Imbeciles."

From The Philadelphia Public Ledger.

The mother of the small boy had been trying to instill within him an idea of conscience. She described it as a little voice which whispered inside one when he was doing wrong.

"I never heard it," said the small boy, cynically, and in the tone of one who shrugs his shoulders.

A little later the small boy did something he had been told not to do, and was sent to sit on a chair, and ordered not to get off until the powers that be gave him leave.

Ten minutes later he came into the room where his mother was sitting, jubilant.

"I've heard it, mother," he exclaimed.

"Heard what?" asked his perplexed parent.

"Heard the little voice. It said, 'Sam Smith, you get off that chair. Don't you care what other says!'"

NEWSGIRLS OF THE SUBWAY.

Have a Nine-Hour Day Now—The Luncheon Hour Question.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The public, through letters written to the New York City Consumers' League, has expressed its interest in the agitation started by the league against the long hours of work of the girls employed at the news stands in the Subway.

It might be of interest to many to know that on account of this agitation the mercantile law has been enforced and girls under twenty-one years of age are at present not employed over nine hours a day.

When an interest is shown by the public in a matter of this kind the law is enforced, and those who have been active in this matter may congratulate themselves on the immediate result of the interest in these girls.

There remains one other point of law in regard to which the Department of Health is awaiting the advice of the Corporation Counsel. It is required that every employe of a mercantile establishment be allowed 45 minutes in which to eat her noon-day meal. This is ordinarily understood to mean freedom from her work. The girls at the Subway newsstands, however, are required to remain at their stands and attend to possible customers during these forty-five minutes. Surely it is most important that all women working in the Subway should, if they so desire it, be free to come out into the air during their noon-day hour, and it would seem that in this particular the mercantile law is not at present being observed.

The question is still before us: Should any women over twenty-one years of age be required to work in a Subway more than ten hours a day? At present women are working in the downtown Subway stations twelve hours a day and eleven hours in the uptown stations. The law protects only those under twenty-one years of age. Women cannot work in any factory more than ten hours a day, and though the mercantile law does not at present provide such protection for women over twenty-one years of age the Consumers' League believes that public opinion should be in advance of the law, and asks for the support of the public in its effort to shorten the outrageously long working day of these employes.

President of the Consumers' League.

STREET CARS AND VENTILATION.

Not Enough Some Days and Too Much on Others.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

My wife on her way home yesterday from a shopping tour boarded a closed Jerome Avenue trolley car. The day being warm and sultry she, with other passengers, requested the conductor to open the windows, which were all closed, but he declined in the manner characteristic of the conductors on this line, saying it was against the rules. One of the ladies then requested him to open the front doors. After consulting the motorman as to the advisability of so doing, he finally opened them a few inches, whereupon the lady mentioned proceeded herself in person to open the doors to their full width, allowing a free current of air to pass through the car, to the intense relief of the passengers.

In my own personal experience I have very often met with just the reverse conditions, closed cars with windows wide open or open cars, running in cold, raw, and damp weather. I make bold to say that a majority of the car-riding public will agree with me that such a condition of affairs is simply intolerable. Surely the Board of Health has some jurisdiction in this matter.

AMERICA TO ENGLAND.

Read at the Lotos Club Dinner to Whitelaw Reid.

The youngest of the nations,
Grown stalwart in the West,
Yearns back to where each morning
Glows o'er the ocean's crest,
And cries: "O Mother Country,
Ours is your ancient pride,
And, whate'er may befall you,
Our place is at your side."

Ours are the old traditions
Of Saxon and of Kelt;
We visit rare Westminster
And kneel where you have knelt.
Your restful country places,
Hills, lakes, and London town—
Their memories we inherit
And share in their renown.

Your Avon is our Avon;
Song knows no border line;
The stars their radiance mingle
Which in one heaven shine.
Within your "Poet's Corner"
Longfellow's gentle grace
With all the august shadows
Is given a welcome place.

Your mighty men of science
Who've made the world anew,
Transforming earth and heaven,
Wrought not alone for you.
From Newton up to Darwin
Each, from his truth-built throne,
Nods greeting to our homage—
We claim them for our own.

You fought the fight for freedom
And taught mankind the creed;
Long ere our "Declaration"
There was a Runnymede.
We won at Appomattox,
But you had won before;
Our Bunker Hill and Yorktown
Look back to Marston Moor—

Our Washington and Lincoln
Were of your sturdy stock—
Cut out of Milton's quarry,
One piece with Cromwell's rock.
Our Pilgrims learned the lesson
That English means the free,
And through the wintry weather
They brought it over sea.

Here in the West grown mighty,
Though we alone might win,
We look back to the Home Land
And feel the thrill of kin.
Then let us stand together
Till over all the earth
Our manhood and our freedom
In every land have birth.

One vision let us cherish—
That as the years increase,
We two may teach the nations
To love and welcome peace.
But should the war-cloud gather
O'er Neva or the Rhine,
And should the threatening navies
Wheel into silent line—

Then, when the peaceful heavens
Are darkened in eclipse,
May our two lightnings mingle
One thunder from our ships.
We need but stand together
To hold the world in fee,
And to the noblest issues
Control the age to be—

Then let this glorious vision
Along our pathway gleam
As up the future leads us
The Seer's, the Poet's dream.
One race and one tradition,
English, American,
And one high inspiration—
The destiny of man!

A STRENUOUS SUNDAY ON THE BIGGEST LINER

Four Hours the Baltic Lay Helpless in a Storm.

SO HUGE SHE HARDLY ROLLED

Brings a Modest Duke, a New Ambassador, and Sousa's Band Home in Triumph—Story of Her Voyage.

The White Star liner Baltic, with every stateroom in her saloon filled and with a full complement of second-cabin and steerage passengers, reached Quarantine at 8 o'clock yesterday morning, and the passengers told the story of her strenuous Sunday in mid-Atlantic. With a southwest gale blowing sixty-five miles an hour, the biggest ship in the world lay for four hours on that day in the trough of the sea, her engines stopped, while a break in her machinery was repaired.

So big is the Baltic, though, that while she lay helpless as far as moving was concerned, in the huge seas, her passengers ate luncheon not uncomfortably. The crockery slid about some, but there were no breakages. There were even few absentees from the meal.

While she was forcing her way through the big waves they had swept the forward half of the lowest of her three promenade decks—that is the seventh of her nine, counting from the bottom upward—and had thrown showers of spray around her giant smokestacks, ninety feet above water mark. But while she lay still the big combers barely rolled her, and never reached her open decks. The passengers said that oil was used to calm the rollers around the ship, but the officers said that the Baltic was big enough to be steady without it.

She had had three days of good weather, when early on Sunday she ran into the gale. It sent the green combers rolling over her bow, drenching the library windows three decks above, and as they rolled past her, for the first time since her huge bulk began to cleave the Atlantic, her twin propellers were left bare.

Just after noon, in applying the reversing gear to check the racing of the propellers, the clutch was so badly bent as to render the gear useless. The Baltic was then going full speed ahead and making fair weather of it.

The liner was stopped at once while the reversing gear was disconnected. Two black balls, signifying "Not under control, but need no assistance," were hung in the fore rigging. At the same time a notice signed by Capt. Smith was posted on the saloon bulletin board announcing that the ship would be stopped for four hours "for repairs to starting gear," and the passengers were assured that there was no danger. There was no visible diminution in the amount of luncheon consumed. In fact, the passengers agreed that the storm was a fine spectacle.

Late in the afternoon the Baltic got under way again, but for the rest of the day she went at three-quarters speed while the engine room force worked overtime at the damaged machinery. The storm and the delay caused by the break brought her day's run from the usual average of about 400 miles down to 237.

In the course of the night the gale blew itself out and the liner went full speed again. Her next day's run was 388 miles; on the following day she made 415, and the next, through a heavy fog, she covered 407.

Yesterday morning the fact that news of the exact nature of the vessel's mishap had reached shore through a wireless dispatch to THE TIMES became known to those on board. Messages of inquiry began to come by wireless. Folks ashore were more exercised about the Baltic than were those on board, for when the inquiries were coming in an exciting game of cricket between rival cabin and single saloon passengers was being played on deck. Replies from the ship passed through a censorship, that nothing alarming might reach the world ashore.

The biggest liner had 389 passengers, the largest number she has ever carried in her saloon. Among them were the Duke of Sutherland, who with two friends is off on a tour to the Pacific Coast; Charles M. Schwab of the Bethlehem Steel Company, Mrs. Schwab, and Mr. Schwab's physician; John Philip Sousa and his band, F. A. Dwyer, the racing man, and two jockeys, Martin and Clark, who have been riding in England and France and are to steer the Dwyer Brothers' horses here this season; Joaquim Aurrelio de Arenjo, the first Ambassador that the Republic of Brazil has sent to Washington; General Manager A. H. Smith and Superintendents D. B. McCoy and F. E. Herriman of the New York Central Railroad; Reginald C. Brooks, Prof. J. J. Henry, Henry L. Wasserman, Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Roelofs of Philadelphia, R. C. Morse, General Secretary of the Young Men's Christian Associations in the United States and Canada, and Lieut. Shigekane Tada of the Japanese Navy.

Sousa and his band played the Baltic away from the Liverpool landing stage and the Liverpoolians assembled thereon responded with loud cheers to "Auld Lang Syne" and "The Star Spangled Banner." On Tuesday night the band gave a concert in the Baltic's saloon at which $25 was collected for the Seamen's hospitals in New York and Liverpool, and the Duke of Sutherland distinguished himself by making the shortest speech on record as Chairman of such an entertainment. Estimates of the number of words in which he commended these charities to the consideration of his audience varied from seventeen to twenty-five, but it was agreed that nothing of importance was left out.

The Duke also aroused serious misgivings in the minds of a few sartorially correct male passengers by wearing tan shoes with his evening clothes on that occasion. It was explained by the Britishers abroad that he was not only a very modest Duke, but one disinclined to concern himself about mere conventions, as such. He is the largest landholder in Scotland, and is coming to see the United States. "Very much as your busy men find time occasionally to see our country," he said.

A huge crowd assembled to see the Baltic dock. In spite of her strenuous voyage she was only a few hours beyond her usual time of arrival. Everybody inquired about the racing yachts, but she had sighted none in the fog of the last two days of her voyage.

SOUSA HOME AGAIN.

Band Leader Found Welsh Religious Revival Counter-Attraction Abroad.

John Philip Sousa, the conductor, says that his fourth European trip, which ended yesterday with the arrival of his band on the Baltic, was a very successful one, and he will certainly go again. He comes back to find his Summer programme—evening concerts in New York after a short season at Willow Grove, near Philadelphia—already made. It was arranged by cable while he was abroad.

The band, since it sailed away last January, has given more than 200 concerts in England, Ireland, and Scotland. It did not go on the Continent this year. For three weeks the band played to crowded audiences in Queen's Hall, London. The poorest audiences it had were in Lancashire and Wales. In Lancashire the bad times in the cotton industry have naturally affected the public appetite for amusements. In Wales the religious revival is absorbing interest to the exclusion of everything else.

"It was the first time," Mr. Sousa said laughingly, "that I had had a serious counter attraction to meet over there."

It is an interesting fact that "The Stars and Stripes Forever" is the favorite Sousa march in England. "The Diplomat," the composer's newest, runs it close in popularity, he says.

Mr. Sousa brought back an English setter, a Gordon setter, and a black retriever as souvenirs of his trip, all dogs of high degree for which special kennels were provided aboard ship.

POLICE LOOP FOR PRISONERS.

Brady Chases Strikers Around Block, Getting One Each Time.

To run around a block three times after a disorderly crowd and at each round capture a man, turn him over to a brother policeman, and again overhaul the fugitives, is the example of speed set by Policeman Brady of the West Sixty-eighth Street Station. Brady's run was witnessed by a crowd of spectators and boxholders in the windows of Central Park West residences and flathouses, and each time he caught a man and started off again a cheer went up. After his last capture a woman emerged from a house at the corner of Ninety-third Street and handed him a glass of something good, with a smile of appreciation, too.

Yesterday morning Brady and Policeman Cavanagh were standing together near an excavation at Ninety-third Street and Central Park West when they saw an excited mob of Italians peering down into the hole and pitching stones. A few stones rattled back from the hole accompanied by groans. It was a union attack upon non-union workmen. The attacking party ran. Men climbed out of the hole. They had been cut by the stones and they demanded that somebody be arrested.

"All right," said Brady, starting to pursue the Italians.

Cavanagh, who is strong but heavy, soon became winded. Brady told him to go back and wait. Then Brady chased the Italians through Ninety-fourth Street to Columbus Avenue and back through Ninety-third Street. At the Park corner Brady caught one and tossed him to Cavanagh. The other Italians kept running around the block, being kept from leaving the track originally set by them by spectators and policemen at the corners. When Brady caught the third prisoner he stopped the chase, because Cavanagh had only two hands and already had two prisoners.

The three prisoners, who said they were Louis Rotello, Cornello Cirtello, and Dominick Romello, were later arraigned in the West Side Court and fined $2 each for disorderly conduct.

MOVE IN HUMMEL CASE.

Codnsel Notify Jerome of Action to Have Indictment Quashed.

Nicoll, Annable & Lindsay, counsel for Abraham Hummel, who is under indictment for subornation of perjury and conspiracy, served notice yesterday on District Attorney Jerome that they will move Tuesday next, before Justice Davy, in the Criminal Branch of the Supreme Court, to have the indictment quashed. The motion will be made on the ground that, under the Constitution and State laws, neither the Grand Jury nor the court has any jurisdiction, power, or authority in the premises, because Mr. Hummel was compelled to testify against himself before the Grand Jury "in violation of his rights, privileges, and immunities under the Constitution."

The notice served on the District Attorney's office consists of thirty printed pages and contains all of Mr. Hummel's evidence before the Grand Jury and also a copy of the charges which District Attorney Jerome has filed with the Bar Association, with a view to the disbarment of Mr. Hummel.

Indicted with Mr. Hummel, all in the famous Dodge-Morse divorce imbroglio, are ex-Supreme Court Justice Edgar L. Fursman, Benjamin Steinhardt, Charles F. Dodge, and Edward F. Bracken, a private detective.

TO WRITE PLAY ON LINER.

Frederic Thompson Going Abroad to Find Hippodrome Novelties.

Frederick Thompson, of the firm of Thompson & Dundy, managers of the Hippodrome and owners of Luna Park, will sail to-day on the steamship St. Louis of the American Line, and expects to spend two months in Europe working on the next production at the Hippodrome and obtaining new acts. Mr. Thompson will be accompanied by his mother, his sister, Mrs. T. H. Hamlin, and Mrs. E. S. Dundy.

"I am not going on a vacation," he said last night, "as I expect to write the next production for the Hippodrome aboard ship going across. I find that there is no place in the world like an ocean steamer to work, as there you haven't a thousand and one persons running in and out to bother you. I have already outlined the next production for the Hippodrome, which will be put on late next Fall or in the early Winter. I expect to tour the Continent to get acts, and I am also going to arrange to have Alfredo Edel, who designed the costumes for the present production, come to New York again. My mother, sister, and Mrs. Dundy will spend the greater part of the Summer season at Carlsbad; I will return about Aug. 1."

WALTER DAMROSCH'S CONCERTS.

The Summer concerts of the New York Symphony Orchestra under Walter Damrosch will begin to-night on the roof garden of the New York Theatre, to continue three weeks. Concerts will be given every evening. Every Monday will be "symphony night," and every Friday "Wagner night." Mr. Damrosch has a number of novelties in preparation for these concerts that will interest many music lovers. The programme for this evening will be as follows:

Overture, "Spring" ..... Goldmark
Waltz from "The Doll's Fairy" ..... Bayer
Procession of Pilgrims ("Harold" Symphony) ..... Berlioz
Flute Solo—
(a) Madrigal from "L'Enfant Prodigue." ..... Widor
(b) Scherzo ..... Widor
M. George Barrere.
Suite from "L'Arlisienne" ..... Bizet
Overture, "Tannhauser" ..... Wagner
Prize Song ("Die Meistersinger") ..... Wagner
Caprice on Danish and Russian airs for flute, oboe, clarionette, and piano, (new, first time) ..... Saint-Stens
Messrs. Barrere, Addimando, Finkelstein, and Damrosch.
(a) Rigaudon ..... Dubois
(b) Aubade Printaniere ..... Lacome
Waltz, "Ever or Never" ..... Waldteufel

ACTS FOR THE NEWSBOYS.

Ernest Hogan, the Negro Comedian, Tells Them He Once Sold Papers.

Ernest Hogan, the negro comedian, assisted by a dozen or more negro students from Memphis, Tenn., gave an informal show at the Newsboys' Lodging House last night. Thirty-five years ago the comedian was a bootblack and sold newspapers in Louisville, Ky.

"Comrades," said Hogan, "I just butted in to feel an old feeling. I used to be a newsboy. I'm not much to look at yet, but I guess I'm as well paid as any comedian of my color on the stage. I tell you that so that you won't be discouraged by the tough life of shinin' shoes and selling wuxtries. If you have the goods, boys, you'll make good. In old Louisville, I knew how to sell a yesterday's pape as well as any boy."

Then the show began and the boys enjoyed it immensely.

THEATRICAL NOTES.

There was no performance by the Russian players at the Murray Hill Theatre last evening because of the illness of the leading woman. The theatre, however, will be open this evening.

Edgar L. Davenport is to appear at the Empire Theatre in Boston on May 29 in a new one-act play by Stanislaus Stange, entitled "The Only Way."

Charles A. Taylor, author of a number of melodramas, will leave New York next Tuesday to produce a number of his own plays in the West, under the direction of William Russell, of Russell and Drew of the Third Avenue Theatre. The company will begin its season at Seattle on June 4.

Prof. Young Is Only Seventy.

In the report sent from Princeton to The Associated Press on Thursday of the dinner in honor of Prof. Charles A. Young, who has just returned from the Chair of Astronomy in Princeton University, Prof. Young's age and length of service were given incorrectly. Instead of eighty years of age, Prof. Young is only seventy, and instead of having served twenty years in the astronomical department of the university he has served twenty-eight.

THE HOLDING OF OWEN; A TALE FOR MARINES

A GREAT WRONG RIGHTED

It Took Months, but the Army Finally Groveled for Its Insult to the Marines.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 19.—Second Lieut. C. S. Owen of Pennsylvania has been an officer of the Marine Corps only about a year, but has already become a person of distinction. He has become an issue, and the Marine Corps and the army have been all wrought up over him. The whole machinery of the Government has been creaking over him, and the upshot is that hostilities between the two branches have been averted by an apology tendered by the commander of the army to the commander of the Marine Corps.

Second Lieut. Owen enlisted in the corps in 1903, and on April 1 of last year he became a Second Lieutenant. He was then sent to the Midway Islands. It was on his way back that he got on the roll of Fame.

The transport had arrived at San Francisco and the gangplank was thrown ashore. Second Lieut. Owen, wearing a suit of khaki, loomed up in front of the gangplank and stood there with folded arms, contemplating the United States. The sailors found him in their way, and the officer in charge invited Second Lieut. Owen in unparliamentary language to depart from the vicinity.

The officer did not know who Second Lieut. Owen was. Second Lieut. Owen, on his side, thought his khaki uniform ought to identify him. But it seems that along the wharves of San Francisco a man who does not wear khaki and try to have himself taken for an army officer is set down as a foreigner. The uniform, therefore, conveyed nothing to the officer in charge.

Second Lieut. Owen felt that the entire Marine Corps had been affronted. He withered the officer in charge with a look. The officer in charge thereupon directed that Second Lieut. Owen be taken up by the arms and legs and thrown into the hold, which order was gleefully carried out by several lusty tars.

It was several hours before Second Lieut. Owen succeeded in getting out of the hold and being haled before the commander of the transport. By that time he was a human caldron of seething wrath. He made himself known, whereupon the commander apologized and set him at liberty.

But the wrath of Second Lieut. Owen was not appeased. He felt that the whole Marine Corps had been insulted. He reported the facts, with this view thereof, to Gen. Elliott, commander of marines.

Gen. Elliott straightway charged his system with wrath, too. He, too, felt that the whole Marine Corps had been thrust aside, laid hold of, and imprisoned, and he so notified Gen. Chaffee.

Then the ponderous wheels of government began to revolve. Gen. Chaffee referred it to the Adjutant General, who in turn passed it along, and it wended its way down the line, accumulating indorsements, reports, and recommendations as it went. The General commanding the Pacific Division was called on to explain, and the papers finally got to the officer who had caused the hurling of Second Lieut. Owen.

The officer reported that he did not know Second Lieut. Owen, and had no idea of affronting the Marine Corps, which he greatly admired. He had taken Owen for a civilian who was interfering with the sailors. This report traveled gradually back to Washington, accumulating the regular number of indorsements and recommendations, till it reached Gen. Chaffee, who reported the facts to Gen. Elliott and apologized on behalf of the army.

If the wrath of Second Lieut. Owen is appeased it is probable that the matter will be dropped.

SHAW'S USEFUL COMPENDIUM.

How to Address the President and the Honorable the Secretary.

Copies of Treasury Decisions, the official journal of the Treasury Department, reached the different bureaus of the department yesterday in New York. Included in the pamphlet there is a long order, signed by Secretary Leslie M. Shaw, giving in detail just how the correspondence of the department must be carried on—just how to begin all letters and how to end them, what dictionaries and gazetteers are to be regarded as authorities in the spelling and meanings of words, and exactly how to fold the paper and put it in the envelopes.

It is also officially described, over the signature of Secretary Shaw, how the various officers of the Government should be addressed in these communications. Among the higher officials the following are the forms Mr. Shaw desires used:

The President.
The Speaker of the House of Representatives.
The President of the Senate.
The Chairman, Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.
The Chairman, Committee on Appropriations, United States Senate.
The Honorable the Secretary of the Treasury.

JURYMAN FINED $50.

Belden Was Grossly Intoxicated, Recorder Goff Declared.

It cost Charles Belden, who was foreman of a jury in a case before Recorder Goff on Thursday, $50 yesterday for forcing a mistrial. He was held by the Recorder to have been in contempt of court.

Recorder Goff made a long speech, severely reprimanding Belden.

"I regret to have to call you before me in this public manner," said the Recorder, "and I would not do so if all I had to consider was my own interests. I have, however, to take into consideration the gravity of the case, something which affects public justice very deeply.

"You were foreman of a jury in a case that had lasted two days and in which a man's liberty was at stake. On the first day I saw indications of something unusual in your condition. It disconcerted me, but I said nothing about it because I did not know the cause. After the afternoon recess yesterday, however, when you took your seat you were in such a grossly intoxicated condition that I could not overlook it.

"If a Judge appeared in court as you were, he would be liable to impeachment and be driven from the bench.

"To obtain integrity in the jury system I cannot overlook your conduct. You were grossly intoxicated and manifestly unfit to determine the case before you. You were a serious obstruction to public justice. I am constrained to adjudge you guilty of contempt of court, but I will be extremely considerate. I will fine you $50 or sentence you to ten days in prison."

Mr. Belden was paroled to get the money to pay the fine.

NEW YORK SCHOOL OF ART.

Annual Exhibition of Work by Pupils During the Past Season.

A festal air reigns throughout the classrooms of the New York School of Art, otherwise known as the Chase School, at 57 West Fifty-seventh Street. The various rooms have been cleared of easels and platforms, and the walls are lined with unframed pictures and sketches in oils and water colors, in pastels and charcoal. Some exhibit the work of the classes in arts and crafts, including woven work, basketry, wood carving, and designs for wall paper and textiles, costume studies, and suggestions for metal work and jewelry.

Painting is under the special care of Messrs. William M. Chase, Robert Henri, and Douglas John Connah. Notable work in the composition class in painting is offered by Rockwell Kent, whose mountain landscapes have been admired at the regular annual shows during the past Winter; by Julius Golz, Jr., Edward Hoppen, and Miss Kate Clark. Drawings of special interest for composition in charcoal are those by Henry Dougherty, who has a suggestion of Gavarni in his lively groups of schoolboys quarreling, mocking each other, or fighting rough and tumble; his scenes from street life with figures pushed to the verge of caricature, his fantastic combinations of odd types of humanity. Other interesting pieces are from J. R. Koopman, Robert Bowie, Miss Edith Bell, and Miss Hilda Belcher.

Illustration classes under Messrs. F. Luis Mora, Lucius W. Hitchcock, Edward Penfield, and Kenneth Hayes-Miller make a brave showing in the first gallery. Here George Barrett Humphries, Richards, G. O. Coleman, Thompson-Stevens, and Mrs. J. D. M. Spiro show promising designs in charcoal and colors. In the drawing classes, Homer Dean Boss and Arthur Cedarquist, Miss J. Ohlhoff, and Miss van der Hoof carry off the honors. Modeling is taught by Mr. Michel de Tarnowsky, and water-color drawing is under Messrs. Hitchcock and George H. Shorey. The director in charge is Mr. D. J. Connah.

This school arranges two Summer terms, one at Bayport, L. I., under Messrs. Henri and Connah, the other in the city, with Kenneth Hayes-Miller and Miss Elisa A. Sargent in charge. It has a system of scholarships by arrangement with various out-of-town schools of art, whereby the latter send in work for a competition and the winner receives his or her tuition free of charge. Thus the schools of art at Cleveland and Columbus, Ohio, and at Minneapolis, the Art Clubs of Richmond, Va., and Nashville, Tenn., and the Art School at Denver, Col., are authorized to contend each for a scholarship.

In addition to the scholarships for students in these six out-of-town schools there are sixteen free scholarships annually decreed to those pupils who do the best work in four different departments. The life classes have six scholarships allowed them, the illustration classes four, and the portrait and normal art classes two each. Another couple of scholarships are awarded to advanced students for all-round work of special excellence.

The New York School of Art is a very democratic organization, practically by the students themselves with all the liveliness and scorn of parliamentary procedure which used to obtain years ago in the academy schools and later in the foundation which grew into the Art Students' League. The responsibility thrown on the pupils has the effect of making them very patriotically inclined toward their own, which they consider in some respects a better means to a thorough art training than the league, not to speak of the Academy School, which they regard as hopelessly fettered by academy red tape. The buoyant spirit of the scholars here is reflected in their classroom work, which has a "go" that one rarely sees in the output of pupils. Not that the visitor is spared many an oil and charcoal nude of some woman or man who appears to have been chosen as a model for her or his freakish ugliness. In getting flesh tones and parts of the anatomy much that is hideous in form is to be overlooked. But the repulsive is in the minority, and one rarely sees so many sketches and designs together of which so large a proportion shows a grasp of the difficulties which confront the cleverest.

The scholarships will be decided to-day.

WHAT IS DOING IN SOCIETY.

With the exception of a small wedding or two, and the coaching trips, there will be nothing of interest in town to-day, for the many house parties over the week-end take people out of town on Friday night or Saturday morning, so that even the smart restaurants seem deserted by fashionables.

There will be many departures to-day on the steamers for Europe. On the St. Louis, among others, are booked Mrs. James Russell Soley and Miss Soley, Mr. and Mrs. W. Bayard Cutting, Sr., and Lady Sibyl Cutting, wife of W. Bayard Cutting, Jr.; Mrs. F. R. Coudert and Miss Coudert; Mr. and Mrs. Edward C. Post, Jr., and Mrs. Herbert Robbins, Mrs. F. H. Benedict, R. Hall McCormick, Mr. and Mrs. James Elverson of Philadelphia, and Miss Elsie De Wolfe.

Booked on the Vaderland among others are Mrs. H. Holbrook Curtis and Miss Curtis, Mrs. Gardiner Van Nostrand and Miss Anabel Van Nostrand, Mrs. John L. Lamar and family, Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Benedict, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Beresford, Mrs. Paul Dahlgren and Miss Dahlgren, Dr. F. F. Kinnicutt and Mrs. Kinnicutt, and Mr. and Mrs. Rhinelander.

Mr. and Mrs. Clement A. Griscom, Miss Frances Griscom, and a party of guests left Philadelphia Thursday evening on the private Pullman car Rocket en route to California, and will sail from there for the Far East. They purpose taking a steamer to Yokohama and from there will go on to Tokio. They will visit Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Griscom while in Japan and will make a number of short trips, including, probably, a run to Manila before their return here. They planned this trip some time ago, but the war between Russia and Japan delayed it.

Harry T. Peters gave last evening at Delmonico's his bachelor dinner. His guests included his best man, Harold H. Weekes, and his ushers, Lewis Iselin, H. O. Havemeyer, Jr., David Wagstaff, Albert Gray, Harry L. Nichols, and H. B. Williams, Jr. Mr. Peters's marriage to Miss Natalie Wells is set for Thursday next. Miss Wells will have Miss Marian Fish as her maid of honor, and the bridesmaids are to be Miss Margaret Bush of Newport, Miss Louisine Peters, sister of Mr. Peters; Miss Maria Moran, and Miss Janet Fish.

E. Victor Loew chartered the coach Venture yesterday and his guests to the races were Mr. and Mrs. Oliver G. Jennings, the Misses Gerry, Miss Jean Reid, Miss Marguerite Loew, Mrs. Richard Trimble, Peter G. Gerry, Worthington Whitehouse, James Lee, and Bradish Johnson. Robert G. Gerry tooled the coach.

A bazaar will be held this afternoon and evening at the Pascal Institute, 576 Lexington Avenue, by the pupils, the proceeds of which will go to a fund to create a scholarship.

W. C. Whitney's Estate in England.

LONDON, May 19.—The value of the estate in the United Kingdom of the late W. C. Whitney of New York has been sworn at $125,000.

STAGE HISTORY, $6,664; ONCE BELONGED TO DALY

Evert Jansen Wendell Sells the Famous Work by Ireland.

HIGHEST PRICE FOR DICKENS

Manuscript of "Sketches of Young Gentlemen" Brings $5,300—$230 Price of Lincoln's Speech.

Evert Jansen Wendell, the old-time Harvard athlete and one of the largest collectors of stage literature in the country, sold the celebrated Augustin Daly copy of Ireland's "History of the New York Stage," yesterday at auction for $6,664. This work, which was continued by J. S. G. Hagan, contains complete records of the New York stage from 1750 to 1870.

Mr. Daly had the work enlarged to forty-nine volumes by the addition of over 8,000 rare prints, autograph letters, old play bills, and other interesting material. The work was richly bound in red levant morocco, and, it is said, the entire work cost over $30,000. At the Daly library sale in 1900, the volumes brought $6,125, being considered cheap at that price. Mr. Wendell has owned the work since that time. George D. Smith, the old book dealer, was the purchaser yesterday. The work was bound in large folio volumes, every page being inlaid by Augustus Toedteberg, one of the most expert masters of the art.

This memorial of the Daly library was one of a number of unusually rare books and manuscripts sold yesterday afternoon and evening in the Anderson auction rooms, 5 West Twenty-ninth Street. A part of Mr. Wendell's dramatic library was sold, but there were other offerings that attracted fully as much attention.

The original manuscript of Charles Dickens's "Sketches of Young Gentlemen," published in 1838 by Chapman Hall, sold for $5,300. This is the record price for a Dickens manuscript in this country, if not in the world. George D. Smith was the purchaser.

The manuscript contains 109 pages of large quarto paper, inclosed in a morocco box. With the manuscript was a letter from Frederick Chapman of the London publishing firm attesting to the authenticity of the manuscript.

Still another rare manuscript was the original of Robert Browning's "Dramatic Personae." It was written in ink, on 205 pages, containing a number of corrections and unpublished readings. Dodd, Mead & Co. got it for $3,050. The original autograph manuscript of Elizabeth Barrett Browning's "Aurora Leigh," written on twelve pages of octavo paper, was purchased by the same firm for $250.

"The Life and Letters of David Garrick," enlarged to six volumes by the addition of 381 prints and views, handsomely bound in green levant morocco, and originally from the Daly collection, sold for $1,200.

That prices for Washington Irving material are increasing was shown in the payment of $145 for the manuscript of the author's story of "Communipaw." This was written for Lewis Gaylord Clark, editor of The Knickerbocker Magazine.

A rare Lincoln paper, the manuscript of his speech in 1859 concerning the formation of the Republican Party, was bought for $290 by George D. Smith. A document signed by Lincoln while he was President, appointing John E. Brown Vice Consul of Denmark in 1863, went for $14.

Edgar Allen Poe's manuscript of an unpublished poem, containing nine lines, sold for $110, and an autograph letter from him to his uncle, William Poe, sold for $18. A letter of Longfellow, written in 1841, and announcing that he was obliged to be paid for what he wrote, went for $20.

An autograph letter of Thomas Gray, the poet, went for $29. An autograph letter of Charles Dickens, inviting Sol. Eytinge, the illustrator, to come out with him to see the darker side of London life, sold for $25, and "The Posthumous Papers of the Pickwick Club," a presentation copy from Charles Dickens, sold for $130.

MAY END RECEIVERSHIP.

Judge Would Allow Haight & Freese to Give Indemnity Bond.

PHILADELPHIA, May 19.—Judge McPherson, in the United States District Court, after hearing testimony on the motion to dissolve the temporary receivership for the Haight & Freese Company, stock brokers, decided that unless further evidence is forthcoming to-morrow the receivership of the concern would be dissolved, on condition that the company gives $10,000 bond as surety against any suit that may be brought by Ridgway Bowker of Camden, N. J.

The receivership proceedings were instituted by Bowker on a claim of $3,500.

BALTIMORE, May 19.—Addison E. Mullikin was to-day appointed receiver for the brokerage firm of Haight & Freese Company. The receiver was appointed upon a bill of complaint filed May 12. At that time Judge Dennis signed an order requiring Haight & Freese Company to show cause by May 18 why the receiver should not be appointed. This the defendants allowed to go by default.

Duc Decazes's Autobcat Found.

PARIS, May 19.—The autoboat Quand-Même, owned by the Duc Decazes, which was abandoned on May 14 in the storm which overtook the autoboats racing from Algiers to Toulon by way of Port Mahon, has been found off the coast of Sardinia. She was only slightly damaged.

THE WEATHER.

WASHINGTON, May 19.—Fair weather is indicated for Saturday and Sunday except for the Rocky Mountain region and the Southwest, where showers and thunderstorms are probable. There will also be showers Sunday in Kansas, Missouri, and the west portion of the plains States.

Temperatures will rise slowly in Central and Northeastern districts.

The winds along the New England and Middle Atlantic Coast will be fresh west to northwest, South Atlantic and East Gulf Coasts light and variable, West Gulf Coast fresh southeast, on the lower lakes fresh west, upper lakes light and variable, mostly north.

Steamships departing Saturday for European ports will have light to fresh west winds and fair weather to the Grand Banks.

FORECAST FOR TO-DAY AND SUNDAY.

Eastern New York and New England, fair Saturday and Sunday, fresh west winds.

BERESFORD'S MOTHER DEAD.

Dowager Marchioness of Waterford Was Married in 1843.

LONDON, May 19.—Christiana, Marchioness of Waterford, died in London this afternoon.

The venerable Dowager Marchioness of Waterford was mother of Admiral Lord Charles Beresford, who has just returned home after one of his frequent visits to this country; of the late Lord William Beresford, who married the Dowager Duchess of Marlborough, formerly Mrs. Hamersley of this city; of Lord Marcus Beresford, manager of King Edward's thoroughbreds, and of Lord Delaval Beresford, who was recently in America.

The Marchioness was Miss Christiana Leslie, daughter of an Irish Member of Parliament, and married the fourth Marquis of Waterford in 1843. Her eldest son, the fifth Marquis, who succeeded his father in 1868, died in 1895, and the present Marquis is her grandson.

Was Half Sister of President's Mother.

MORRISTOWN, N. J., May 19.—Mrs. Susan Elliott West, wife of Dr. Hilborne West, died at the Paxton House, this city, last night, aged eighty-five years. Mrs. West was a half sister of President Roosevelt's mother. She lived for a time in Savannah, Ga. She is survived by her husband. Interment will be in the family plot in Philadelphia.

DEATH LIST OF A DAY.

Jacob H. Asch, M. D.

Dr. Jacob H. Asch, one of the best-known German physicians in this city, died yesterday, aged sixty-five years, at his home, 780 Lexington Avenue. He came to this country as a young man, having received his degree from the University of Berlin, Germany, in 1864, and settled down to the practice of his profession in this city after a brief residence in Philadelphia. At his death he held a commanding position in the profession at large, some of its leading members in this city being among his close friends and collaborators. He leaves a widow, who was a Miss Karfunkel of Breslau, Germany, and three children. The funeral will take place from the residence to-morrow morning. The burial will be at Mount Pleasant Cemetery.

Le Droiet Langdon Barber.

Le Droiet Langdon Barber, son of Amzi L. Barber, Chairman of the board of the Barber Asphalt Company, died yesterday at West End, N. J. He was thirty-two years old. Mr. Barber was born in Washington, D. C., in May, 1873. He was President of the Ardsley Electric Company and the Ardsley Water Company, Vice President of the Lorena Company, Clavena Company, and Statena Company. He was also a member of the New York Yacht Club, Sons of the American Revolution, Ardsley Club of Ardsley-on-Hudson, and the Society of Colonial Wars of the District of Columbia. The funeral will take place in Washington.

The Rev. Archibald A. Murphy.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., May 19.—The Rev. Archibald Alexander Murphy, pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church of New Brunswick, from 1895 until 1904, died at his home here this morning of heart disease. He was born in Philadelphia fifty-six years ago, and had charges at Carbondale, Penn.; at the Spring Garden Church, Philadelphia; at Springfield, and at New Brunswick. He was a member of the University Club of New York.

Obituary Notes.

J. EDWARD COFFIN, a cartoonist and newspaper writer, died at Manchester, N. H., yesterday, of typhoid fever, at the age of forty-five years. He was a native of Minneapolis, but had lived in Manchester since 1870.

ISAAC WARDWELL, died last night at Stamford, Conn., at the age of ninety. Up to the time he was stricken with paralysis Monday he was able to attend to his business affairs. He leaves a twin sister and four children.

ALBERT K. MUNDHEIM of Seventh and M Streets, Washington, D. C., died suddenly yesterday at the Manhattan entrance of the Brooklyn Bridge from heart failure. Mr. Mundheim was forty-five years old and for the last twenty-five years had been employed in the Government Printing Office, where he started as an apprentice. Mr. Mundheim had been visiting his sister, Mrs. Eppstein of 2,014 Seventh Avenue.

REFEREES' NOTICES.

SUPREME COURT, COUNTY OF NEW York.—ROSE ANN SMITH, plaintiff, against TERENCE P. SMITH, individually and as executor, &c., and MARY McGARRY, individually and as executrix, &c., defendants. In pursuance of an interlocutory judgment of partition and sale duly made and entered in the above-entitled action and bearing date the 13th day of May, 1905, I, the undersigned, the Referee in said judgment named, will sell at public auction, at the Exchange Salesroom, Nos. 14 and 16 Vesey Street, in the Borough of Manhattan, City of New York, on the 8th day of June, 1905, at 12 o'clock noon on that day, by Bryan L. Kennelly, Auctioneer, the premises directed by said judgment to be sold, and therein described as follows:

All that certain lot of ground, and the buildings thereon erected, situate in the County and State of New York, and bounded and described as follows: Beginning at a point on the southerly side of 26th Street, at a point distant 100 feet westerly from the southwesterly corner of the Seventh Avenue and 26th Street; and running thence westerly along the southerly side of 26th Street 23 feet 4 inches to the middle of a party wall; thence southerly at a line parallel with said Seventh Avenue and through the middle of said party wall 98 feet 9 inches to the middle line of the block between 25th and 26th Streets; thence easterly along said middle line and parallel with said 26th Street 23 feet 4 inches; thence northerly on a line parallel with Seventh Avenue 98 feet 9 inches to the southerly side of 26th Street at the place of beginning. Being known by the street and Number 206 West 26th Street, in the Borough of Manhattan, City of New York.

Dated New York, May 16th, 1905.

BANKRUPTCY NOTICES.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT, SOUTHern District of New York.—In the matter of THE EAGLE OXYGEN COMPANY, Alleged Bankrupt.—Present: Honorable George C. Holt, United States District Judge.

Whereas, a petition was on the 20th day of April, 1905, filed herein, praying that, the above-named Eagle Oxygen Company, a corporation, be decreed an involuntary bankrupt, and it appearing to this court by the affidavit of James F. McNaboe, verified the 11th day of May, 1905, that there are no officers of the said corporation within this district upon whom personal service of a subpoena, issued by this court, and the petition filed therein, may be served.

Now, on motion of Thomas & Oppenheimer, Attorneys for the Receiver herein, it is ordered

That the said Eagle Oxygen Company, its officers, or attorneys appear, plead, answer, or demur to the involuntary petition herein on or before the 30th day of May, 1905, and

It is Further Ordered, That personal service of this order upon an officer of the above-named bankrupt or a creditor thereof be dispensed with, and that this order be published in The New York Times, a newspaper published in the City of New York, in the district aforesaid, once a week for two consecutive weeks, the last of said publication to be on the 20th day of May, 1905.

GEO. C. HOLT,
U. S. District Judge.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE United States for the Southern District of New York.—In Bankruptcy.—In the matter of CHARLES H. WOLFF and STILLMAN R. WALKER, individually and as members of the firm of WOLFF & WALKER, Bankrupts.—No. 7,841.

To the creditors of Charles H. Wolff and Stillman R. Walker, individually and as members of the firm of Wolff & Walker, of the City, County, and State of New York, and district aforesaid, bankrupts:

Notice is hereby given that on the 16th day of May, A. D. 1905, the said Charles H. Wolff and Stillman R. Walker were duly adjudicated bankrupts, and that the first meeting of creditors will be held at my office, No. 71 Broadway, City and County of New York, N. Y., on the 2d day of June, A. D. 1905, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon, at which time the said creditors may attend, prove their claims, appoint a trustee, examine the bankrupts, and transact such other business as may come before such meeting.

STANLEY W. DEXTER,
Referee in Bankruptcy.

Dated New York, May 20th, 1905.

REFEREES' NOTICES.

SUPREME COURT, KINGS COUNTY.—THE PEOPLES TRUST COMPANY, as Trustee, Plaintiff, against THE KNICKERBOCKER STEAMBOAT COMPANY and others, Defendants.

In pursuance of the judgment of foreclosure and sale, and order, duly made and entered in the above entitled action, dated respectively April 28th and May 3d, 1905, the undersigned referee in said judgment named will sell at public auction at the auction rooms of Burdett & Dennis, 29 Burling Slip, in the Borough of Manhattan, City of New York, on the 25th day of May, 1905, at 11 o'clock P. M. on that day, by Burdett & Dennis, auctioneers, the following property described in said judgment:

All of the above described property will be sold in one parcel, and subject to all claims, civil or maritime, which may have been or may be made against the plaintiff as mortgagee of such steamboat, or against the said steamboat, or on account of any matter arising in connection with the operation by the plaintiff of such steamboat as such mortgagee since August 20, 1904; and the purchaser or purchasers at such sale will be required to assume the same, and to indemnify the plaintiff from all claim and demand by reason thereof. The upset price is $35,000, and no bid will be accepted for less than that amount.

Dated New York, May 3, 1905.

EDW. SWANSTROM, Referee.

WINGATE & CULLEN, Attorneys for the Plaintiff, 29 Nassau Street, Manhattan, New York City.

Court Refuses to Reinstate Union Man

Batista Berna was a member of the Range Mounters, Setters, and Kitchen Outfitters' Union, and on Dec. 17, 1904, he alleges that he was expelled from membership, and as a result was unable to obtain employment. He brought proceedings in the Supreme Court for a mandamus to compel the union to reinstate him. The matter came on for hearing before Justice O'Gorman in the Supreme Court yesterday, and on the argument Alfred and Charles Steckler, counsel for the union, contended that the proceedings sought were without legal right, and that the court had no power to grant the mandamus under the law affecting cases of this kind. Justice O'Gorman upheld the contention.

Northern Pacific Officers.

The newly elected Board of Directors of the Northern Pacific Railway Company organized yesterday by re-electing the former executive officers, as follows: Howard Elliott, President; Daniel S. Lamont, Vice President; Henry A. Gray, Controller; Charles H. Clark, Treasurer; George H. Earl, Secretary and Assistant Treasurer; R. H. Relf, Assistant Secretary; E. L. Stetson, General Counsel in New York, and C. W. Bunn, General Counsel in St. Paul.
The following Executive Committee was elected: Robert Bacon, G. F. Baker, W. P. Clough, J. N. Hill, and J. S. Kennedy.

Consolidated Broker Suspends.

J. M. Ely, a trader on the Consolidated Stock and Petroleum Exchange, suspended yesterday. He was long about 500 shares of stocks, which were traded in for his account under the rules. The suspension is considered of minor importance.

Whisky Dutiable at Time of Entry—Other Decisions.

In a decision written by Judge Somerville, the Board of United States General Appraisers yesterday overruled a claim filed by Philip Godley of Philadelphia, and held that imported whisky which has been entered in bond for warehouse is properly assessable for duty on the quantity ascertained at the time of entry in bond, and not upon the quantity shown by the gauge at the time of withdrawal from bond. It appears that Godley entered whisky in bond for warehouse at Philadelphia on Feb. 11, 1902. This whisky at the time of withdrawal from the warehouse, which occurred Jan. 31, 1905, was assessed for duty by the Collector on the gauge of the spirits as ascertained at the time of entry in bond. As the whisky had lost in quantity during the period it was in the warehouse, the importer maintained that the duty should have been levied on the quantity at the time of the removal of the article from the warehouse.
Other claims overruled yesterday were by Gray Brothers, Hirsch & Kaiser, Lehrmann & Co., Hensel, Bruckmann & Lorbacher, Sidney Blumenthal & Co., Kupfer Brothers, C. B. Richard & Co., Robert G. Winny, L. M. Blumstein and others, International Hide and Skin Company, J. W. Hampton, Jr., & Co., Zinkeisen & Co., New York; R. B. Book & Co. and others, G. W. Sheldon & Co., Weiken & McLaughlin, Chicago; C. H. Wyman & Co., St. Louis; Kohnstamm & Co., New York. Protests sustained were by D. Carlisle and others, George Borgfeldt & Co., G. Sidenberg & Co., Theodore Tiedemann & Son, New York; Yow Lee, Philadelphia; Chapin & Core, C. Jevne & Co., Chicago; F. H. Shallus, Baltimore.

CHICAGO QUOTATIONS.
Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, May 19.—New York exchange was par. Time and call loans, 3½ @4½ per cent. In the dull local trading, which found stocks weakened because of the selling in the Eastern market, the bull market in Chicago Subway continued a feature, with the new high record price of 61⅝. Can preferred weakened to 67¾ early, and Biscuit common flinched and sold as low as 59⅝ before a rally set in. Swift's sold at 106¾. South Side Elevated was firm at 92.
In the afternoon there were sales of Pneumatic Tool bonds at 70 and 71, compared with recent sales at 75. It is understood that some of the recent buying in Subway has been by original Pennsylvania investors in the tunnel project.

THE FINANCIAL MARKETS

Stocks Continue Weak; Call Money Easy, 2¼@2½%.

There was a marked contrast yesterday between its news and its prices. Perhaps as important as anything was the arrival of the anticipated contradiction of the crop damage stories. In some cases they were exaggerations, and in others they were forgeries. Naturally produce prices lost almost all their gain of Thursday, and fell most where they had risen most, that is, in the source of the canards, Chicago. A crop of wheat equal to 1903 was the standard hoped for yesterday. The iron trade authorities were stalwart in their assertions that conditions were as good as ever, and better than might be expected under the depressing talk, which they set against their order books, with preference of the latter. The iron bar makers reaffirmed their prices, and the Carnegie plate mills announced they were refusing orders, their capacity being sold for 1905. The Chicago strike, an influential cause of the beginning of the reaction, was reported as approaching its close. The money market retained entire placidity despite a forecast of the bank statement indicating a loss of some six millions due to repayments to the Treasury. How far the decrease of requirements of reserve will offset the loss of reserves evades calculation. The week opened with unusual shifting of loans, and ends with liquidation of stocks to a considerable amount on foreign orders. Naturally there was strength in sterling, but no anxiety will attach to this while foreign discounts are lower than our own.

The day's poor news came from abroad. Baron Rothschild was reported ill; a German operator was embarrassed, and foreign markets were more disturbed than ours by events here, which naturally they understood even less than ourselves, being more distant from the source of information. The result was that our market had to take foreign sales of, say, 100,000 shares, largely concentrated in the Steel stocks. As the sales were not well taken domestic offerings increased and prices yielded almost throughout the list. The only exception of significance were the tractions, Metropolitan especially being helped by the improved prospect for its getting a subway franchise. Otherwise there was not much distinction in the degrees of weakness among standard stocks. Some specialties suffered exceptionally, but the average decline added a point to Thursday's fall of about 2 points. The averages are now at the year's low point, and the Street is filled with gloom. London will not do business to-day, nobody wants to carry commitments over Sunday, and to-day's market is expected to be a good preparation for a weak Monday. An argument might be made to show that this is all wrong, but it is useless to argue with markets. Nothing is more consolatory or compensatory than that they usually change when everybody is of one mind about them. There is no doubt which way sentiment is running now.

TRADE CONDITIONS.

Discussing present conditions in trade Dun's Review says in to-day's issue:

Unseasonable weather is the chief cause of complaint, both as to distribution of merchandise and agricultural development. At many leading cities retail trade in Spring and Summer wearing apparel is falling behind expectations, and there is less than the customary re-order business in wholesale and jobbing departments. Although no actual reduction in the crops is yet assured, sufficient uncertainty has appeared to render dealers in the farming districts somewhat cautious regarding the accumulation of supplies beyond current requirements. Otherwise the trade situation is satisfactory; fundamental conditions are sound, payments reasonably prompt, and failures below the average. Manufacturing activity is fully maintained, the percentage of idle machinery being smaller than at any recent date, and the textile industries make notable progress under the stimulus of advancing raw materials. The few strikes now in progress cause little interruption and some of the July 1 wage scales have been adjusted, but others are still under discussion.

Structural shapes have taken the position of prominence in the iron and steel industry. Building operations that were retarded by inclement weather are now under way, and the tonnage of steel required will keep mills fully occupied for some time. In addition to numerous extensive office buildings and manufacturing plants there are special railway terminals that swell the volume of business to a remarkable aggregate. Motive power and rolling stock for the railroads cannot be delivered as rapidly as required, and these sections of the industry are crowded to their utmost capacity. In several other departments, however, there is more or less irregularity, and the possibility of demands for higher wages on July 1 tends to generate conservatism in the acceptance of long-term contracts at current quotations.

Bradstreet's says:

Adverse weather conditions are a leading source of complaint this week, but clearing skies now reported throughout a large area of the country, bid fair to reinforce existing optimistic views as to late Summer and Fall trade. Cold or rainy weather, except in a few sections, has affected general trade, further retarded an already late corn and cotton planting season, given rise to rather less optimistic Winter wheat crop reports, and bullishly stimulated grain, pork, and cotton prices. The great barometer of trade and industry, the iron trade, is less active for the cruder forms despite price concessions, but the disposition is usually well-informed quarters is to regard this as an instance of the general breathing spell which is noted in many lines of wholesale business.

Railway earnings continue exceptionally good despite the smaller cereal movement, the first quarter of 1905 showing a gain of 7 per cent. in net on a gross gain of 5 per cent. For nine months of the fiscal year net returns have increased .7 per cent, on a gross gain of 3 per cent.

Bank clearings for the week ending with May 18 aggregate $2,971,718,254, 1.8 per cent. over last week and 31 per cent. in excess of last year. Exchanges outside New York City total $926,225,956, 2 per cent. larger than last week, and a gain of 16 per cent. over last year.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

Another Bad Break in Market—Steel Stocks the Feature.

With transactions of more than a million shares, the stock market suffered another bad break yesterday. Prices in many instances declined below the low level reached on May 4, and the industrial issues especially seemed to be under pressure. Two weeks ago the railroad issues were those which attracted the greatest attention, but yesterday the centre of the stage was held by the Steel stocks. United States Steel common and preferred were under pressure all day, and they closed very near the bottom. All market observers agreed that there was steady liquidation in these stocks, but no one was able to advance any indisputable reason to explain the weakness. Steel men asserted yesterday that the bookings of new orders continued heavy, and that the hue and cry raised over the falling off in pig iron consumption was foolishly exaggerated.

Steel Men Bullish.

The point was raised yesterday that the steel men themselves could not well be anything but bullish on the situation. The fact is that the first cry about a slackening in the iron trade was made by a trade authority, who during the depression in that business a year ago was caught napping, and who then gave voice to bullish sentiment long after even the steel trade men had admitted the existence of a depression. This authority is evidently bound not to be caught on the wrong side again, and this is believed to explain a good deal of the recent utterances about the slackening in the trade. A high official of the Steel Corporation is authority for the statement that if such talk should be persisted in long enough it might result in deterring consumers from putting in their orders in expectation of lower prices, but that it could not stave off a really urgent demand for any length of time.

Tariff Reduction Talk.

What the men high in financial and business affairs fear most, according to a statement made yesterday by one of them, is not so much the actual reduction of the tariff as the agitation for such a reduction. "President Roosevelt," said the official of one of the most important industrial corporations, "has started the agitation about the tariff six months before Congress can meet to discuss the matter. This period is so long that it will permit of protracted agitation, which cannot fail to disturb the business community. First proposals for legislation are generally much more radical than the final laws which are passed, but this does not diminish the uneasiness with which conservatism naturally receives the first proposals. It is this anticipation which in my opinion is hurting the market now."

Foreign Influence.

The great interest which Europe took in our market some months ago, and which then materially aided the bull movement, is now showing its effect on the other side of the book. A few days ago the failure of a London broker made a distinct impression on prices here. Then the death of a Paris financier who had heavy commitments on the long side caused some selling for foreign account. Yesterday there was heavy selling of American stocks for London which was said to represent liquidation of speculative accounts which were overextended and which had to be cleared. The reports of the illness of Baron Rothschild in Paris and the disappearance of a prominent financier in Frankfort-on-the-Main also had their effect. Thus the broadening of New York's influence as a financial centre brings with it a growing sensitiveness to occurrences in foreign centres, thereby greatly increasing the dangers of speculation even while extending its scope and its possibilities.

Three Drives at Market.

Three distinct drives were made at the market yesterday, and during each of them the steel issues were the centre of attack. For this reason traders expected to see the first sign of a rally in these stocks. Their watch for such a sign was, however, in vain. The steel shares rallied less than the rest of the market, and their continued grogginess prevented any upward reaction from going further than a fraction of a point. When the third drive was made, shortly after 2 o'clock, the market appeared to show a fair amount of resistence, and some thought that the limit had been reached. But just before the last five minutes prices again gave way and the close was at the lowest of the day. The rallies after every drive were weak and feeble. This encouraged the short interest, which is now said to be of unusually large proportions.

Unusual Cotton Failure.

The uncertainties of speculation were well demonstrated yesterday by news from Liverpool that an operator in the cotton market there had been forced to suspend because he was caught short of 8,000 bales of cotton for delivery to one of the mills. He was unable to buy this cotton in at a price which his capital would permit him to pay. It is in itself nothing unusual for a broker to go under because he was long or short of cotton, but the curious part of this failure is that the man had to suspend because he was short of cotton in a year when the crop exceeded all former records, approaching nearly 14,000,000 bales, a circumstance which would appear to make a short sale of that commodity as safe a speculation as possible.

BULLION AND MINING.

Bar silver was quoted in London at 26⅞d per ounce and in New York at 58¼c per ounce. Mexican dollars were quoted at 44½c.

On the Consolidated Exchange 800 shares of Alpha sold at .11@.12, 1,000 Comstock at .08, 500 Cripple Creek Consolidated at .08, 100 Consolidated California and Virginia at 1.75, 200 Elkton at .53, 100 Granby at .05¾, 1,000 Independent Tonopah at .03½, 300 Lone Star at .18, 200 Overman at .14, 300 Orinal Bull Frog at .36, 1,000 Pharmacist at .05, 100 Portland at 2.15, 100 Sandstorm at .50, 200 Savage at .57, and 200 Utah at .06.

CURRENCY MOVEMENT.

Reviewing the movement of currency this week The Wall Street Journal says in its issue of to-day:

The reported movements of currency this week indicate a loss in cash held by the banks of $6,347,900. They received from the interior $5,764,700, and sent to the interior $3,858,600, including $1,827,000 to National banknotes to Washington for redemption. The gain from the interior was $1,906,100.

Receipts of new gold were $792,000, namely, $763,300 on New York Assay Office checks, $6,500 on San Francisco Mint checks, and $22,200 on Seattle Assay Office checks.

Ordinary disbursements by the Sub-Treasury were $20,001,000; payments by banks to the Sub-Treasury for customs, internal revenue, 5 per cent. redemption fund, and return of United States deposits, &c., were $27,090,000. The loss on Sub-Treasury operations proper was $9,046,000.

The total gain, from the interior, $1,906,100, and new gold, $792,000, was $2,698,100; deducting this from the loss on Sub-Treasury operations proper, $9,046,000, the net loss was $6,347,900.

The gross receipts and net gain from the interior were larger than in the preceding week, but smaller than in the corresponding weeks of prior years. This indicates that payments for interior banks to the Sub-Treasury in returning United States deposits were made from funds previously placed with New York correspondents of such banks. The decrease in gross receipts, as compared with prior years, appears also to prove that there is more use for money in the interior than at this time in former years.

The large loss on Sub-Treasury operations was expected as the result of the return of United States deposits on May 15. and 16. There was a small decrease in customs collections, which were $2,663,800, a daily average of $443,900, comparing with a daily average of $458,700 in the preceding week. Pension payments were $3,083,000, comparing with $1,053,000 in the preceding week.

The Sub-Treasury received from banks and sent to Washington for redemption $4,076,000 mutilated currency.

MONEY AND EXCHANGE.

Money on call loaned at 2¼@2½ per cent., closing at 2¼ per cent. Most of the day's loans were made at 2½ per cent.

Time money rates, 3 per cent. for sixty days, 3¼ per cent. for ninety days to five months, 3¼@3½ per cent. for six months, and 3¾ per cent. for eight months.

Mercantile paper rates, 3¾@4 per cent. for thirty to ninety days' indorsed bills receivable and for choice four to six months' single names, and 4½@5 per cent. for others.

New York Clearing House exchanges were $285,925,590; balance, $13,953,528; Sub-Treasury debit balance, $230,321.

Foreign exchange was strong. Nominal rates were $4.85½ for sixty days and $4.87½ for demand. Rates for actual business were as follows: Sixty days, $4.8490; demand, $4.87; cables, $4.8725.

Commercial bills were $4.84⅛@$4.85⅛. Continental bills were quoted as follows: Francs, 5.18¾@5.18⅛ and 5.16⅞; reichsmarks, 94 11-16 and 95⅛@95 3-16; guilders, 40 1-16@40⅛ and 40 5-16.

Exchange on New York at domestic centres: Boston—Par. Chicago—Par. New Orleans—Commercial, 50c discount; bank, $1 premium. Savannah—Buying, 50c discount; selling, 75c premium. Charleston—Buying, par; selling, 1-10 premium. San Francisco—Sight, 5c; telegraphic, 7½c. Cincinnati—25c premium. St. Louis—40@50c premium.

THE LONDON MARKET.

LONDON, May 19.—Money was in good demand in the market to-day, and supplies were plentiful. Discount traders were more disposed to take bills. Rates were easier, owing to the condition of Continental exchanges.

Trading on the Stock Exchange was dull, but the prospective ease of money caused a steady undertone in most departments except Americans, where the liquidation continued, and Peruvians, which fell on the Government of Peru refusing to sanction the proposals regarding the exterior debt. Consols and kindred securities were easier.

Americans were the most active section, and showed pronounced weakness on the selling in Wall Street. They opened at parity, but declined on further liquidation on the Continent and by local operators. In the afternoon Americans were irregular, and they closed flat.

Japanese were firm and dearer. Imperial Japanese Government 6s of 1904 were quoted at 101½.

Copper shares showed renewed weakness, and closed flat at 64.

Bar silver firm, 26⅞d per ounce.

Money, 2 per cent.

The rate of discount in the open market for short bills is 2 1-16@2¼ per cent.; for three months' bills, 2 3-16@2¾ per cent.

Gold premiums are quoted as follows: Madrid, 31.77; Lisbon, 9.50.

The amount of bullion taken into the Bank of England on balance to-day was £115,000.

LONDON CLOSING QUOTATIONS.

In Continental Centres.

PARIS, May 19.—Hesitation prevailed on the Bourse to-day and the market was heavy owing to adverse London and New York advices. At the close, however, prices tended slightly upward.

Russian Imperial 4s were quoted at 88.90 and Russian bonds of 1904 at 501. The decline in Russian bonds was due to the payment of a coupon yesterday.

Baron Alphonse de Rothschild, who has been suffering from bronchitis, and whose illness has caused some depression in the securities held by the Rothschild house, was reported to-day to be improving.

Three per cent. rentes, 99f. 37½c. for the account. Exchange on London, 25f. 18c. for checks.

BERLIN, May 19.—Stocks on the Boerse to-day generally were depressed.

Exchange on London, 20 marks 48 pfenigs for checks.

Discount rates—Short bills, 1¾ per cent.; three months' bills, 2¼ per cent.

Washington Terminal Bonds.

Brown Brothers & Co., Alexander Brown & Sons, and Harvey Fisk & Sons are offering at 97½ and interest by advertisement the unsold portion of an issue of $10,000,000 3½ per cent. first mortgage gold bonds of the Washington Terminal Company, dated Feb. 1, 1905, and due Feb. 1, 1945. These bonds are part of an authorized issue of $12,000,000, the remaining $2,000,000 being reserved in the treasury of the Washington Terminal Company, to be used only for the enlargement, betterment, extension of, and additions to the property covered by the mortgage. The bonds are guaranteed jointly and severally, both as to principal and interest, by the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company and the Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington Railroad Company, Pennsylvania Railroad system.

Big Failure in English Seed Trade.

LONDON, May 19.—The failure for a large amount of a seed trader named Symonds of Boston, Lincolnshire, has involved firms in London, one of them to the extent of $65,000. This has resulted in great excitement in the trade here, and consequently it is very difficult to get quotations.

BOSTON STOCK MARKET.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, May 19.—The local money market is not changed. The usual table of rates, &c., follows:

Call loans, 3@3½ per cent.; time loans on collateral, 3½@4½ per cent.; time loans on mercantile paper, 3¾@4 per cent. Clearing House loans, 2½ per cent.; New York funds at 100. Clearings, $22,100,187; balances, $1,652,895; Sub-Treasury debit, $20,705.

There were a few strong spots in the market during the day, but before the closing the gains recorded were lost, although a good tone continues to exist especially for the copper shares.

Efforts to advance prices are not followed by good results, stock being generally met when traders undertake to bid prices up or they lose their courage, and then dullness sets in, followed by sagging prices. The action of the New York market has its effect upon local stocks, and weakness there causes selling orders to come into our market, and lower prices is the result. The closing was heavy and unsettled. The complete list of transactions follows:

TRADING IN BALTIMORE.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, May 19.—This market yielded from ¼ to a full point to the reactionary tendency in New York, and the more active speculative issues were easily put down. The bond list suffered most. Few stocks were traded in, and those were about steady.

The greatest decline was noted in Cotton Duck incomes. The last sale of these bonds was at 31½. To-day they opened at 30, and remained at that figure. Norfolk Railway and Light 5s, at 91½, were 1 per cent. lower than the last sale. Anacostia and Potomac 5s, at 105, were ½ off, and Coast Line 5-20s, at 95¾, showed the same loss.

In the stock list Fidelity and Deposit rights declined ½, to 3½, Northern Central ½ to 102¾.

The market closed dull and steady. Seaboard Air Line undeposited stock was firmer.

A considerable portion of the income bonds of the Mount Vernon-Woodberry Cotton Duck Company has been deposited under the new merger plan. The time for deposits expires May 20, and the indications are that more than a majority will have been received ahead of that date, making ih unnecessary to extend the time.

The total sales were: Shares, 1,214; bonds, $35,000, as follows:

PHILADELPHIA PRICES.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, May 19.—As was the case yesterday, Reading, United States Steel common, and United Gas were the active leaders of this market. Although awarded the gas lease extension by City Councils, gas moved in a manner to indicate that the Street had anticipated such action. It opened at 118, receded to 116¼, then recovered to 117¾, around which price it held firm the remainder of the day. There was some persistent selling of Philadelphia Rapid Transit for New York, under which the price declined ⅞, to 32¾, which was bid for it at the close.

The tone of the market was heavy, but the recessions were largely fractional, with the exceptions noted, and General Asphalt preferred, which was off 2 points. Consolidated Lake Superior Corporation income bonds sold at 20, against last previous sales at 40, and Philadelphia Company first 5s declined 1, to 110. Total sales were 71,776 shares and $87,900 bonds, as follows:

Syndicate Buys Brooklyn Acreage.

The McNulty & Fitzgerald Company has sold the George Lott farm of sixty-seven acres on King's Highway, near Ocean Avenue, Brooklyn, for over $250,000. Contracts were signed yesterday in the office of J. Schenck Williamson, attorney, for the George Lott estate. The property lies between Avenues N and T, East Thirtieth and Thirty-third Streets, and Westbrand Avenue. It also has a frontage on Garritson's Mill Pond, opposite the residence of the late William C. Whitney. The buyers, a syndicate of real estate men, who have heretofore been operating in the Bronx, intend to improve the property. This was the last of the old farms on King's Highway.

Stokes & Knowles have sold the following Brooklyn properties: The De Bevoise farm in the Eighteenth Ward, consisting of 376 lots, for the Germania Real Estate and Improvement Company, to an investor; also, the southeast corner of Beverley Road and East Thirteenth Street, a detached dwelling on lot 50 by 100, to John G. Bungay; also, 59 Rugby Road, a detached dwelling, on lot 50 by 100, to Frederick Dikeman; also, 180 lots on Meeker Avenue, Greenpoint, to Edward C. Chapman to a client; also, 114 Taylor Street, a three-story brick dwelling, for John G. Bungay, to a client.

Long Island Country Seats Sold.

Martin C. Nichols of the firm of Ulman Brothers has bought the Jones estate property on the New Road, near Little Neck Bay, at a price said to be $30,000. The property has no frontage on the bay, but the owner has certain rights to the shore front. Extensive improvements will be made on the estate by its new owner.

It was reported yesterday that William Astor Chanler had purchased the extensive tract on the shores of Little Neck Bay, known as the Phillips estate, but none of the details of the transaction could be obtained.

Another large estate, which has been in one family for over 150 years, has just changed hands through the sale by John F. O'Rourke, head of the O'Rourke Engineering and Construction Company, of the old Hewlett estate, consisting of thirteen acres, on the shores of Little Neck Bay, near Hewlett's Point. The fine old mansion on this estate, part of it the homestead erected by the first Long Island Hewletts, will be preserved in its present shape by Mr. O'Rourke.

The Mott farm at Westbury, L. I., near the estates of Benjamin D. Hicks and the late William C. Whitney, has been purchased by Lawrence Jacob, Jr., who will improve the place and make it his home. The sale was effected by Timothy Tredwell through the office of the T. B. Ackerson Company.

The Auction Room.

The sale of forty-two lots on Jerome, Townsend, and Walton Avenues, One Hundred and Seventy-fourth and Belmont Streets, conducted yesterday by Auctioneer Solomon De Walltearsa, was well attended by operators. The offering of the property was in accordance with a partition decree in the suit of Hershfield against Blun. All of the lots were sold for a total of $128,225.

Leonard Weill paid $7,400 for the lot at the northeast corner of Jerome Avenue and Belmont Street and $7,625 for the southeast corner of Jerome Avenue and One Hundred and Seventy-fourth Street. Other lots on the east side of Jerome Avenue brought about $4,000 each among the buyers being Charles M. Rosenthal and Lowenfeld & Prager. Inside lots on Townsend Avenue were sold at about $1,500 each, the One Hundred and Seventy-fourth Street corner being struck down for $3,000 and that at Belmont Street for $3,500, to S. H. Stone. Other buyers were Louis Rodney Berg, J. Clarence Davies, J. Romaine Brown, R. E. Lee, and A. Kaeppel.

A WORD TO THE WISE.
Less than a year ago the average price of lots on the side streets adjacent to White Plains Av. was $600. Since this avenue has been completed and the rapid transit extension along it has been assured there has been a natural rise in prices, until in many cases owners have refused $1,000 per lot for their holdings. However, I have still a few left convenient to the avenue for $750 each. Also two a little further east for $550 each. Buy now, as the values are increasing every day and builders have their weather eyes open. Call and see me any day, Sundays included.

HOME TALK NO. 3.
A diamond, pure, white and flawless, realizes its greatest beauty and value in appropriate setting.
So with the country house. In most suburbs of New York you will find charming homes, but how often their beauty is marred by unsightly surroundings because of lax building restrictions! At Palisade all houses are architectural gems, and the setting—One Thousand Acres of beautifully wooded land overlooking the Hudson is unexcelled.

HOUSE NO. 2.
This is a large Colonial house of fifteen (15) spacious rooms, exclusive of two baths, lavatory, etc. The interior of this house is treated in white, and it will appeal to one especially because of the simple purity of design and treatment, outside and in. Ready for you now.
Grounds 100x185. Terms to suit.
Palisade lots—safe as Government Bonds and a better investment at present prices.

Houses Range in Price from $10,000 to $30,000—Some a Trifle Less.

VETOES BILL TO RAISE STREET CLEANERS' PAY

Mayor Questions Motives of Legislature in Passing It.

A TRAP, POLITICIANS SAY

Measure Would Tax City $900,000 Annually—Board of Estimate Has Power to Increase Salaries.

Denouncing the motives of the Legislature in passing the measure, Mayor McClellan last night announced his veto of the bill to increase the salaries of the Street Cleaning Department force. In his memorandum sent to Albany the Mayor said that an annual expense of $900,000 would be saddled on the city by the bill, and that the Board of Estimate had power to increase the salaries if so desired.

According to politicians who kept up with affairs at Albany, the bill was passed for the purpose of setting a trap for Mayor McClellan. Chairman Odell of the Republican State Committee and Chairman Halpin of the County Committee are said to have been back of the measure, knowing that if the Mayor signed it there would be a protest against the vast increase in the city's expenses, and that if the Mayor vetoed it he would make enemies among the 7,000 sweepers and drivers in the Street Cleaning Department and offend some 14,000 voters. The bill was introduced in the Legislature by Assemblyman Hartman of the Sixteenth Manhattan District. For five preceding years similar bills had been defeated at Albany.

At the hearing on the measure before the Mayor on Wednesday several members of the street cleaning force were present to advocate the bill, as well as attorneys hired for the purpose. Nearly all made veiled threats and guarded references to the fact that the Mayor would lose the Italian vote if he vetoed the bill. To each speaker the Mayor put the question whether or not the city did not have full power, through the Board of Estimate, to increase the salaries of the sweepers if it thought the increase proper. Each speaker had to answer in the affirmative.

"This bill is objectionable because it is mandatory," declared the Mayor in his memorandum sent to Albany yesterday with the rejected bill. "It violates the principle of home rule. It is an attempt by the Legislature to substitute its mandates for the authority and discretion of the City Government. Furthermore, to carry out its provisions the city would have to incur an expense of more than $900,000 a year.

"Street sweepers, dump board men, drivers, and hostlers now receive a salary fixed by law at $720 a year. No such compensation is paid to men in like occupations anywhere else. This bill proposes to increase these salaries to $780 a year and to allow extra proportionate hourly compensation for time in excess of forty-eight hours a week; to allow each man a week's vacation with pay, and provides, in addition, that 'members shall not be required to work on Sunday unless they consent, and their refusal to work on Sunday shall not be counted against them in any manner by the officers of the department.'

"Not a moment's reflection is necessary to convince any one of the impracticability of this bill, and of the utter insincerity of the Legislature which sends it to me. To the statesmanship which has so misjudged me and which expects advantage from my action on this bill, my rejection of the measure will no doubt be a requital for its surrender to such chicanery.

"Again we have an instance of the willingness of the Legislature to distribute the city's money and regulate its administration without the consent of the people who have to pay the expense. Again we have proof of the readiness of the Legislature to thrust on the city laws against which it protests, while denying or neglecting to give to it legislation which it needs.

"One of the evils of this kind of legislation is that it fosters discontent in the city departments, makes the inexperienced believe that there is hope for new bounty with each session of the Legislature, furnishes occasion too often for the stealthy collection of moneys to pay the promoters of such legislation, and makes impossible the hearty co-operation of all the city employes in increasing the efficiency of the service.

"Against every such interference with its affairs the city must protest. Let the Legislature, if it will, confer upon the city the greatest conceivable power with reasonable restraints against its abuse by city officers. A wise and just administration would then endeavor to remove every grievance of city employes, promote harmony, and, as far as consistent with proper economy, provide reasonable salaries. Under such authority each administration would be answerable to the people of the city for the use of the power intrusted to it. If the fear of popular displeasure would not prevent maladministration, the verdict at the polls could punish it. For these reasons I refuse to accept this bill in behalf of the city."

MAYOR SIGNS WATER BILL.

Permits City to Use Power for Municipal Electric Lighting.

Mayor McClellan has signed the bill to enable the city to utilize its water supply for the purpose of generating electricity for municipal lighting uses. In returning the bill to Albany yesterday the Mayor made public a memorandum giving his reasons for his action.

"This bill," said the Mayor in the memorandum, "is in effect a substitute for the provision originally contained in the Water Supply act, which, in spite of the protest of the Mayor and numerous civic bodies, was stricken from that bill. Its passage is due to the recommendation of the legislative committee which recently investigated the lighting problem, and by its terms the City of New York is now permitted to employ electricity generated by the water supply system. This is another proof that earnest protest against injustice is not always unavailing.

"The protest brought to the attention of the committee the importance of conceding this right to the city. In order to enable it to protect itself against the lighting companies, and possibly to assist us to a solution of the lighting problem. The recommendation of the committee, added to the city's protest, swept away the last pretext for opposition.

"If both this bill and the water supply bill become law the city will, I am advised, be able to secure large quantities of electricity, the cost of producing which will involve but a slight additional expense, both in the work of construction and maintenance over that required for the water supply system itself, and the city will thereby be able, not only to light many streets and public buildings, but to save large sums of money annually on that account.

"For these reasons I accept this bill on behalf of the city."

Special Rates for Fall Buyers.

Reduced rates for the Fall buying season will be made to New York City by the Grand Trunk Association, the announcement to that effect having been received by the Merchants' Association yesterday. The special fares will be in effect on Aug. 19 to 23, inclusive, and Sept. 3 to 7, inclusive, under the regular certificate plan. The return limit on each ticket will be fifteen days.

NO CASE AGAINST MR. SMITH.

Magistrate Holds That Stokes's Complaint Disclosed Mere Disagreement.

The charges of grand larceny made on April 4 last by Thomas Stokes against De Witt Smith, railroad builder, of 141 Broadway, were dismissed on Thursday last by Magistrate Cornell, at the Jefferson Market Court, and Mr. Smith was discharged. The evidence produced before Magistrate Cornell showed that transactions running up into the millions had been conducted by Mr. Smith and his former business associate, Thomas Stokes, who is a brother of W. E. D. Stokes.

Mr. Stokes's complaint occupied several days in presentation, and disclosed nothing more than a disagreement as to an accounting alleged to be due Mr. Smith. The Magistrate dismissed the complaint, after hearing all the witnesses produced by Mr. Stokes, and without requiring Mr. Smith or any of the witnesses on his behalf to take the stand.

SAYS BILLS WERE FALSE.

Used to Obtain Loans, Declares Witness Against Levin.

In the trial of Louis Levin, charged with obtaining merchandise upon false representations, which was continued yesterday before Judge Foster in General Sessions, Part II., Edward R. Biddle, of the firm of James Scott & Co. of 73 Leonard Street, and a member of the present Grand Jury, testified that two cases of goods sent to Levin by his firm had been shipped to Indianapolis.

Jacob Rubel of 113 Seventh Avenue, Eastern representative of Weinstock, Luben & Co., a dry goods firm of San Francisco, testified that goods billed against his firm by Levin were never ordered either by him or by any one else representing his firm. It is alleged in the indictment that on the strength of bills of goods ostensibly bought from Levin by Weinstock, Luben & Co., Levin obtained loans of $25,000 each from the Royal Bank and from M. L. & C. Ernst.

The trial will be continued Monday morning.

JOB CAME AFTER SUICIDE.

Brother-in-Law Too Late to Save Tailor, Who Was Out of Work.

Ten minutes before his brother-in-law arrived to offer him temporary employment until he got on his feet again, Max Schwartz, a tailor, with a wife and five small children to support, who had long been out of work, jumped down the airshaft of the tenement at 16 and 18 Pelham Street early yesterday morning, and received fatal injuries.

Yesterday morning while his wife was preparing breakfast Schwartz sat in a chair by the window, with his head in his hands. Suddenly he arose and left the kitchen. To his wife's question, he replied that he was going out for a moment and would soon be back. He went to the roof, two stories above his flat, and threw himself down the airshaft, seven stories to the basement. He was taken to Gouverneur Hospital, where it was found that his skull was fractured and both legs broken. His death is said to be only a matter of a few hours.

FIND MRS. HAYES AND CHILD.

Woman Says She Will Keep Girl—Thurstons Threaten Suit.

Mrs. Nellie Hayes, who was charged with having "kidnapped" her own child from its adopted parents, Mr. and Mrs. Thurston of 256 East One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street, on Monday, was found yesterday with the child and taken into custody.

Detective Teevens found the father of the child and shadowed him day and night. Late Thursday night he followed the man into a saloon on Third Avenue and heard him call his wife up on the telephone. The instant Hayes left the wire, Teevens called up "Central" and discovered that the call was to 63J, Westchester, which is a hotel, kept by Mrs. George Meitzel, at Harrison and Cornell Avenues, in the Bronx.

Early yesterday morning Teevens went to the hotel and found Mrs. Hayes in the kitchen, cooking pancakes, and the child, Irene Helen, who is three and a half years old, out in the yard, feeding the chickens. He ordered Mrs. Hayes to get the child and accompany him to the Harlem Court. Court was closed by the time they arrived in Harlem, and the case went over till yesterday afternoon. In the meantime, Mr. and Mrs. Thurston had been informed that Mrs. Hayes and the child had been found, and when the case was called before Magistrate Baker, they appeared and demanded the child as the legal guardians of it.

Lawyer Benjamin Baker, out of sympathy for Mrs. Hayes, handled the case for her without charge. Mrs. Hayes told the court that she did not think the Thurstons were proper guardians for the child, and that after taking it away last Monday morning she decided to keep it.

Mrs. Thurston said that she had legal adoption papers for the child, and Magistrate Baker paroled Mrs. Hayes until Wednesday next, when he ordered the Thurstons to produce the papers. Mrs. Hayes is working as a servant for Mrs. Meitzel. She says that she will not give the child up under any circumstances. The Thurstons say they will carry the matter to the Supreme Court, if necessary.

C. U. ASKS ABOUT CAR TAXES.

Surface Lines in Arrears for Two Years—Third Avenue Since 1879.

The Citizens' Union has sent a letter to Controller Grout asking for information concerning the arrearages of various street car companies in the payments of their car licenses to the city. The inquiry was especially directed to the arrearages of the Sixth, Eighth, Ninth Avenue, Forty-second Street, Grand Street, Central Park, North River, and East River lines.

In reply to the inquiry, Thomas F. Byrnes, the collector of city revenue in the Finance Department, has replied that all of the lines specified have paid up their car license fees through 1902, but that for the years 1903 and 1904 no payments have been made because the Controller declined to accept the computations of the companies. The Controller demanded the $50 fee for every car operated by the lines, while the companies declared that where cars were substituted, as, for instance, in the substitution of an open car in Summer for a closed car in Winter that the fee should be paid on only one car. They also did not want to pay on cars used only during the rush hours of the day, contending that such cars were put on for public convenience.

The lines specified by the Citizens' Union, Mr. Byrnes wrote, were in arrears for $96,130 for 1904 and for about that much for 1903, according to the computation of the Controller. Other lines in the city are many years in arrears, with the contention pending in the courts. The Third Avenue line, Mr. Byrnes reports, is in arrears since 1879.

VANDERBILT CHAUFFEUR UP.

Fined $100—Woodruff Driver Doesn't Care for the Fine, He Says.

The chauffeurs of William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., and former Lieut. Gov. Woodruff were made acquainted yesterday with the new conditions which District Attorney Jerome has decreed shall prevail in the courts with reference to violations of the speed limit.

Henri de Bailleur, who drives the Vanderbilt machine, was fined $100 by Judge Hinsdale.

C. F. Howe, attorney for the chauffeur, said that thirty miles an hour was the maximum speed of the machine. The court thereupon declared that a vehicle which could run thirty miles an hour should not be allowed on main thoroughfares.

As it was his third offense, the court warned de Bailleur that imprisonment might be imposed instead of a fine next time.

Carlos Bastinello, the Woodruff chauffeur, when taken before Judge Hinsdale for a similar offense was fined $50. Through an interpreter, Bastinello said he didn't care for the $50; the arrest "made him laugh," he said.

BABY SWALLOWS WHISTLE.

Caught in Throat and Continued Whistling Told Mother Something Was Wrong.

Dr. Hicks of Jamaica had difficulty in removing from the throat of an eight-months-old child a tin whistle that it had swallowed while its mother was away yesterday.

Mrs. Charlotte Kammerer resides on Prospect Street. Her little daughter Lottie was placed in a high chair and left playing with a small tin whistle encased in rubber. Presently the mother heard her baby's whistle sounding at intervals. At first she thought nothing of it, but when the whistling continued at regular intervals she finally became alarmed and hastened to the room. She did not see the whistle, but it kept on blowing.

The mother tried frantically to extract the whistle from Lottie's throat while she screamed for some one to send for a physician. Dr. Hicks responded, and after considerable difficulty succeeded in removing the whistle.

THRONG AT CRONIN FUNERAL.

More Than 150 Carriages Follow Body to Cemetery.

Philip T. Cronin was buried from St. Mary's Star of the Sea Church, Far Rockaway, yesterday morning, at Lawrence Cemetery. The funeral was the largest ever seen in the Borough of Queens. There were more than 150 carriages from all over the borough, and about 300 men of various social orders walked. The honorary pall bearers were Borough President Cassidy, Surrogate Daniel Noble, Judge Humphreys, Judge Fleming, County Clerk Van Nostrand, L. T. Walters, P. J. Mara, Magistrates Healy, Smith, and Connorton, James O'Brien, M. J. Goldner, George Creed, and Joseph P. Powers. All the stores in the city were closed until noon.

Must Put Station at 130th Street.

Mayor McClellan has signed the bill compelling the Interborough Rapid Transit Company to maintain an elevated station, north-bound, at One Hundred and Thirtieth Street and Eighth Avenue. The company declined to put up the station because property owners wanted to charge them $8,000 damages for loss of light and air. The Mayor said that the comfort of 4,100 passengers, the number using the downtown station every day, was worth more than the small cost of damages asked.

STOCK COMPANY MOVES OVER TO JERSEY CITY

To Avoid Local Transfer Tax, President Declares.

HE EXPECTS OTHERS TO GO

One Building Reported to Have Got Tenants from New York—Wire Service Arranged.

The Electric Construction Company, which for nearly a year has occupied the first floor of 56 Montgomery Street, Jersey City, yesterday announced that the premises had been leased to the Stock, Grain and Provision Company of 10 Wall Street, New York. At the same time a force of men began to equip the building with electric wires and a quotation board. The lease to the New York company was signed on May 12, but no further information could be obtained in Jersey City, except that the company would probably occupy the building about the end of the month.

C. W. Holland, President of the company, was seen at his office in Wall Street.

"It is true," he said, "that we are going to Jersey City primarily for the purpose of avoiding the transfer tax. Most of our business lies with persons outside of New York, and they naturally object to paying this tax. As a matter of business foresight we are to move. There is no tax on the Philadelphia and Boston Exchanges, and our trading with our customers outside of New York will be done through these Exchanges. It is only a matter of a little while when I believe that practically all the stock business of New York will go to Jersey City.

"From what I have heard I believe that quite a number of members of the Consolidated Exchange are to move to Jersey City and form an Exchange there."

It was reported that the Public Service Corporation, whose claim department is in the Fuller Building, had given up its rooms there to a firm of New York brokers, but this was denied by the company's officials. They said they had decided upon making a change some time ago, but it will not be made until the other offices at 29 Exchange Place are moved to Newark. Then the claim department will be moved to the vacated offices. When that will be done has not yet been decided.

James C. Young, President of the National Realty Company, in the Commercial Trust Building, is a brother of George W. Young, formerly President of the United States Mortgage Company.

"We have had some applications for offices in this building from New York parties," he said, "but on looking them over we concluded that they were 'bucket shop' men and decided to have nothing to do with them. We seldom have offices to let, anyway, but we have none for bucket shops."

Frank Stevens, President of the Real Estate Trust, said he had leased offices in the Lincoln Trust Company's building to New York business men, but they were all reputable persons, and had furnished satisfactory references. He would not give their names or businesses or say when they proposed to take possession.

Stock Transfer Stamps.

The Bank of the Manhattan Company in Wall Street is to be the agent of the State of New York for the sale of the stock transfer stamps, which, after June 1, must be affixed to all certificates of stock transferred. The bank yesterday sent out notices to bankers and brokers asking them to send in a schedule of the amounts and denominations of stamps they might need, so that the bank can be ready to supply them.

TOPICS OF THE WEEK.

THE assertion is often carelessly made that the expenses of the maintenance of Shakespeare's birthplace and the other show places at Stratford-on-Avon are almost wholly paid by the fees of American tourists. The recent annual report of the Trustees shows that of 31,000 visitors who paid for admission to Shakespeare's house last year only 20 per cent. were from the United States. By far the larger number (71¼ per cent.) were inhabitants of the British Isles. Mr. Sidney Lee, as Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Stratford Trustees, is now taking an active part in the management of the various properties held in trust, and seems hopeful of the future development of Stratford. The reserve fund of the Trustees is increasing, and they will make an effort to stop the growing exportation to this country of rare Elizabethan and Shakespearean books. Mr. Lee indignantly denies a report that the historical documents in the possession of the trust are in disorder and the contents of some of them unknown.

The new volume of musings in prose and verse, childhood fantasies, and scraps of tales signed with the name of "Michael Fairless," the author of "The Roadmender" and "The Gathering of Brother Hilarius," is prefaced by a few words signed "M. E. D.," which affect to reveal darkly some of the secrets of this unknown writer's precious life. Some sort of relationship is hinted at between a boy for whose sake one of the fairy tales was written and a boy mentioned in Mr. Barrie's "Little White Bird." The author, it seems, was fond of "the wild garden at Kew," where the "blue hyacinths and shining grasses of the Spring" spoke to her of Paradise. Moreover, we are solemnly told that the last tale in the book, called "The Tinkie-Tinkie," contains the story of the life and death and the life after death of the author. So that the lady (Dr. Robertson Nicoll, who knows everything literary, says she was a Miss Barber) is now, poor thing! a "tinkie-tinkie." To speak quite plainly, "The Grey Brethren and Other Fragments in Prose and Verse," as this unimportant little book is called, is made up largely of well-meant contributions to periodicals which were scarcely worth collecting and were surely not worth offering to a heedless, frivolous generation with all this sentimental fuss which would endanger the reception of more vital stuff than this. What was the matter with the lady, anyhow? Authors have died before this, and worms have eaten them, but their fugitive writings were accounted of no greater worth on that account. "The Roadmender" was commendable, but no work of epoch-making genius, while the lady who dreamed of Paradise in Kew Gardens (having checked her camera with the man at the gate, and ordered tea and shrimps beforehand at the booth near the pagoda) does not loom large in letters at all. Tinkie-tinkie, indeed!

At the age of eighty-two Dr. Alfred Russel Wallace is busily employed in finishing his "Autobiography," which will be published next Autumn. His paper on "Natural Selection" was printed before Darwin's "Origin of Species," the publication of which, indeed, was somewhat hurried by the appearance of Dr. Wallace's paper and its original plan modified. In a talk with Mr. James Milne, which is reported in The Book Monthly of London, Dr. Wallace calls "The Origin of Species" the "great book of the nineteenth century, the book most far-reaching in its consequences on the thought and knowledge of the world." Darwin and he were friends to the last. Wallace declares he was not disappointed by the discovery that Darwin had anticipated him, and had all the materials for his great book ready. "Everything was for the best," he says, "as, perhaps, it usually is." Wallace never kept a diary, but he has treasured many letters written to him during his travels as a naturalist in South America, the Malay peninsula, and elsewhere, which have served him well in writing his book. Dr. Wallace has had a select if not large acquaintance among literary folks, and has uttered many original and striking opinions on literary subjects.

Mr. Sidney Low, in The London Standard, has been taking to task both Rudyard Kipling and Frank Bullen for seeming to know nothing whatever of Herman Melville and "Moby Dick," which Mr. Low justly calls "the splendid prose epic of the South Sea fishery." A new edition of Mr. Bullen's admirable "Cruise of the Cachalot" has appeared in London, and simultaneously a letter to Mr. Bullen from Mr. Kipling, full of compliments to the book, has been printed. Mr. Bullen is of the opinion that his book contains the first account of a cruise of a South Sea whaler from the seaman's point of view. And Mr. Kipling infers that no other book "has so completely covered the whole business of whale fishing, and at the same time given such real and new pictures." Mr. Low urges both these gentlemen to make the acquaintance of Melville and his "Moby Dick" without delay. Melville's book, by the way, is out of print in England, though it still may be obtained here. We trust that Mr. Low's sensible remarks may soon lead to the early publication of a new English edition.

Our cable dispatch last week announced the forthcoming publication of a new Life of Molière by H. Trollope, a son of Anthony Trollope. Few of us remembered probably that Trollope, when he died, in 1882, left two sons, for neither has been known, hitherto, as an aspirant for literary fame. There is room for an English Life of Molière, as there is none now in print, so far as we know, except the biographical sketches accompanying translations of his works and in encyclopædias, and the book by Mrs. Oliphant and F. Tarver, published in 1879. Few of the French biographies are satisfactory. The way is clear for a coherent, sympathetic book on the great comedian's career, based on the knowledge of the man gained through recent research.

ANDREW D. WHITE.

Written for THE NEW YORK TIMES BOOK REVIEW by

H. W. BOYNTON.

TO a person whose instinct leads him toward the study of mere literature (however firm may be his conviction of its value as an interpreter of human life) the act of perusing such a document as Mr. White's autobiography must bring a kind of humiliation, real, if momentary. Here, he feels, is a man who from early youth refused to allow literary ambition to deter or defer the exercise of powers which have made themselves felt throughout the civilized world. As scholar, statesman, and man of affairs in all the best senses of the term, Mr. White may well feel that he can afford to waive the title of literary artist.

As a boy and as an undergraduate he did, by his own confession, aspire to become a man of letters; to the paternal household had been attracted (a rare thing for the Central New York household of that day) not a few literary notabilities. "Scholars and writers were held in special reverence there"; and the future diplomatist had "some youthful successes as a writer of essays" and as editor of an undergraduate "magazine." Several influences assisted—fortunately, as we must think—in blighting this young bud of aspiration; the general tendency at Yale, as contrasted with Harvard, to make of literature "a means to an end"; the influence of Theodore Parker, with his oft-expressed contempt for "weak and literary people," and the yet stronger influence of Carlyle's "preachments, hortatory and objurgatory, witty and querulous, that men should defer work in literature until they really have some worthy message to deliver." Above all, there was a steadily growing sense of practical work to be done, and of his own fitness for such work. That fitness was quickly recognized from without, and thenceforward opportunities sought him; he has been in the thick of every great movement during the past half century. Literature and other forms of art have continued to interest him chiefly, though by no means solely, as a means to an end, for their ethical and educational rather than aesthetic value. So also scholarship failed to interest him greatly for its own sake; he demanded that it make a man more efficient in the actual business of life; of himself, at least, he demanded this. Consequently his historical researches, thoroughgoing as they have been, were inspired by a primary interest in the present; and in teaching history his aim has been, he says, "by means of the lessons of history to set young men at thinking upon the great political problems of our time."

In the autobiography of such a man we should expect to find no conscious literary merit. Nor, it is to be said, does it possess that intimate charm which has made a literary classic of more than one ingenuous personal narrative. The truth is, Dr. White could not imaginably have been successful in practicing the art of literature, though he would have been a great journalist. His faculty is constructive, not creative; and journalism would very likely have developed it as fully as educational work or diplomacy. Certainly he has done more in the world than can possibly be done by a hundred such minor practitioners in art as he would have become. He has not told his story like a Franklin; perhaps because he seems to have shared none of the engaging frailties of the great Philadelphian. This fact has no doubt made it easier for him to give (primarily, as he says, for the benefit of his children and grandchildren) an entirely frank account of his life.

Dr. White evidently belongs to that, as the unregenerate like to think, rarest of all types—the industrious apprentice who really gets to amount to something. From the cradle he was one of those enviable human beings who, without any excess of horror for delinquency in others, have themselves never found time to be delinquent. Such persons are commonly regarded as promising only in the academic world; as a rule they are observed to lead their classes and take their little prizes and to be heard of no more in the world of men. But it is clear that Dr. White was never either prig or prize hunter. If boyish pranks did not tempt him, and he had no undergraduate wild oats to sow, it was not because he belonged to the "smoke," and even by occasional knocking down. On the contrary, the young White early displayed a marked independence of judgment. He seems to have had a sure instinct for discriminating between what was really profitable and what was meretricious in the educational usage of the day. He refused to remain in the little sectarian college in Central New York to which his father had sent him, and, having turned his mind toward Yale, refused to be diverted by his father, for whom he had a rare esteem and reverence, toward a really good college of his own denomination, Trinity. Fairly established in the Yale of 1850, one might imagine that this staid young provincial would have found himself in academic clover. No such thing; he was from the outset disgusted with "a system which made everything of go-round-grinding and nothing of literature." Here was a system of divinity school tutors which reduced the method to absurdity. What that method was, it is easy enough to see now; the wonder is that its futility should have been understood better by certain undergraduates than by the academic authorities:

> The first text book in Greek was Xenophon's "Memorabilia," and one of the first men called up was my classmate Delano Goddard. He made an excellent translation—clean, clear, in thoroughly good English; but he elicited no attention from the instructor, and was then put through sundry grammatical puzzles, among which he floundered until stopped by the word "sufficient." Soon after another was called up, who rattled off glibly a translation without one particle of literary merit, and was then plied with the usual grammatical questions. Being asked to "synopsise" the Greek verb, he went through the various moods and tenses, in all sorts of ways and in all possible combinations, his tongue rattling like the clapper of a mill. When he sat down my next neighbor said to me, "That man will be our valedictorian." This disgusted me. If that was the style of classical scholarship at Yale, I knew there was nothing in it for me. It turned out as my friend said.

This acute undergraduate critic made a conventional success of his course, it is to be supposed, and went so far as to win more than one academic prize, but he evidently valued his successes rather as promise than as achievement. Physically he seems to have been one of those instances of delicate elasticity by which the world has profited so greatly. Occasionally there come mentions of temporary collapse, but few robust men have accomplished half as much as this nominal valetudinarian. In a sedentary age young White seems to have had the desire for a healthful out-of-doors life, though he may not have been able at all times to realize that desire.

> I cannot refrain from saying, with the pardonable pride of a college man who is able to connect himself, directly or indirectly, with some memorable incident in the annals of college athletics, "that our club [the rowing club of which he was an active member] sent the first challenge to row that ever passed between Yale and Harvard, even though I am obliged to confess that we were soundly beaten, but neither that defeat at Lake Quinsigamond nor the many absurdities which have grown out of such competitions since have prevented my remaining an apostle of college boating from that day to this. The most detestable product of college life is the sickly cynic, and a thorough course in boating, under a good stroke oar, does as much as anything to make him impossible.

For some time after his graduation it seemed that this brilliant and reliable young scholar was destined for that properly disdained career of academic seclusion which has so effectively disposed of such a host of young men of promise. Fortunately the college appointment did not immediately follow the bachelor's diploma. Three years of residence abroad intervened—years spent at Oxford, at the Sorbonne, and as an attaché of the American Legation at St. Petersburg, in Berlin, and in Italy. His refusal of a snug berth at Yale, moreover, and acceptance of a professorship of history at the University of Michigan proved him as independent and far-sighted as ever. There he learned "the meaning of the proverb docendo discos. I found energetic Western men in my classes ready to discuss historical questions, and discovered that in order to keep up my part of the discussions, as well as to fit myself for my classroom duties, I must work as I had never worked before."

Meanwhile his interest in political questions of the day was steadily deepening. He returned to America at the height of the Buchanan-Frémont campaign. Buchanan he had met in London, and had greatly liked and respected. Politically, however, he represented to White "the encroachments and domination of American slavery, while Frémont represented resistance to such encroachments, and the perpetuity of freedom upon the American Continent." Consequently, he voted for Frémont, who was, according to his ultimate view, providentially defeated. Indeed, Dr. White goes so far as to say: "Looking back over the history of the United States, I see thus far no instant when everything we hold most dear was so much in peril as on that election day." For the great struggle in which four years later the North with difficulty found means to engage, it was then quite unprepared. When the crisis came White was "rejected with scorn by the examin-

CHARLES II.

The Story of His Wanderings in Exile.*

MISS EVA SCOTT, who has already made a study of the famous Prince Rupert of the Rhine, has just completed the first of two volumes on the exile from England of that warrior's more famous cousin, King Charles II. of Great Britain. Charles, as Prince of Wales, fled from England on June 26, 1646, and returned there as King on May 20, 1660, nearly fourteen years later. Miss Scott's first volume, however, covers only the first eight years of this period of exile. No other historian has given an account of this time except in outline; but Miss Scott considers that its importance makes it worthy of detailed treatment.

Charles left the English mainland on March 4, 1646, and finally, on June 26, he shook English dust from his feet and sailed for France, in obedience to his mother's command, but against the advice of his council. Not until two months later was he received by the French King, Louis XIV. Louis gave him an armchair, and on his departure, went with him to the stairs. Conversation was impossible, as Charles spoke no French and Louis no English; so the interview was rather trying, and it was noted that the cousins seemed embarrassed. The Queen Regent also gave Charles a chair—an important act, for it settled the exile's rank at the French Court.

The Prince's stay at St. Germains was pleasant enough, except for his mother's persistency in trying to marry him to Anne de Montpensier, heiress to four duchies and 20,000,000 francs. "Mademoiselle," however, as the young lady was called, according to French etiquette, had fixed her mind on marrying the Emperor of Germany, and treated Charles with coolness, so that he turned from her in anger. It may be added that she finally married Lausun, an adventurer, and separated from him after a miserable life.

Queen Henrietta Maria had more than one plan for her son, and was scheming to have both England and Scotland rise for him and his father, spending her money freely to secure success. A rising did indeed take place in England, but it failed. The Scots were too canny for the royalists just then, and Charles, who had gone to join the revolt, returned, landing in Holland on Sept. 1, 1648. This rising sealed the King's fate; on Jan. 30, 1649, he was executed, and the Prince of Wales became King in name.

Almost at the same time began the civil war in France known as the war of the Fronde, or sling, which had evil effects on the fortunes of the new King. Louis could help him no longer, and after some months' delay, Charles departed from Holland, returning once more to Jersey, whence he could reach England or Ireland should the quarrels among the Commonwealth people suggest that it was advisable to do so. The time was unpropitious, however, and Charles went back to Holland, where, on April 27, 1650, he accepted the Scottish terms at Breda, and was at once invited to return to Scotland as King. Miss Scott writes:

> The treaty of Breda marks the crisis in Charles's career. He was not at this period the cold-blooded traitor and hypocrite that he is sometimes represented, but a young man—hardly more than boy—very sorely tempted. A definite choice was laid before him; on the one side were honor, truth, and honesty, with poverty and exile; on the other, perjury, dishonor, and a kingdom. Conscience, the traditions of his childhood, the memory of his father, affection for his friends, bade him choose the first. An easy, self-indulgent nature and the sophistries poured incessantly into his ears drew him to the last. The downward path was not an easy one, and he did not sacrifice his friends or perjure himself with a light heart. Step by step he struggled desperately, yet yielded always, until at last he laid his honor in the dust and forfeited his self-respect forever.

The treaty required him to accept the Scots Parliament and its acts, including the actual and possible establishment of Presbyterianism, to break the treaty with Ireland, which had favored the Catholics, and to proceed against all "Papists" if the Scots Parliament should require him to do so.

The most immediate result of this treaty was the execution of the "Great Marquis" of Montrose. He had undertaken to raise the Highlanders in Charles's favor against the stubborn Covenanters, and did not stop his work when Charles notified him of his action. His rising failed; he had to flee, and, trusting himself to Macleod of Assynt, was by him sold to the Marquis of Argyle, his long-time enemy. As one taken in arms against the Parliament, Montrose had small hope of his life. But Argyle, despite a promise to Charles to spare his life, preferred that his rival should perish. Montrose, bound with cords, was carried in triumph through Edinburgh streets in a cart, driven by the hangman. "Widows of the men slain in his wars had been hired to incite the mob, and because it was hoped that stones would be thrown, the Marquis's hands were tied, 'that he might not be able, by his hands, to save his face.'"

Argyle had the cart stop in front of the balcony where he sat, that he might gloat over his victim at leisure. But he could not stand Montrose's gaze, and retreated into the house. Three days later Montrose heard his sentence, imposed without the pretense of a trial, and on May 21, 1650, he was hanged.

The hangman wept unrestrainedly as he performed his office, and the crowd was not less moved. "It is absolutely believed that he hath overcome more men by his death, in Scotland, than he would have done if he had lived," wrote an English Parliamentarian, "for I never saw a sweeter carriage in a man in all my life."

On June 24, 1650, Charles landed on Scottish soil. Though received at first with joy, the Parliament had no notion of giving him a free hand. "The King's position," wrote Sir Edward Walker, "is most sad and dangerous. * * * He is outwardly served and waited on with all fitting ceremony due to a King, but in his liberty not much above a prisoner, sentinels being set every night about his lodgings, few daring to speak freely or privately to him, and spies set upon his words and actions." A denunciation of his father was required of him as the price of his coronation and of further assistance by the Scots and perhaps on the principle that one more oath could add little to his infamy, Charles made it. Then came Dunbar, when "the Lord delivered" the Scottish army into Cromwell's hands; and then the coronation at Scone on Jan. 1, 1651, after a public mourning by Charles for his father's and grandfather's sins. Later in the year came the invasion of England, and the defeat at Worcester, followed by the King's flight.

It was in this flight that Charles had his romantic escape at Boscobel in the oak. Other more narrow escapes occurred; but the King at last reached Trent in safety, and thence got to French territory. He gained little but life from his escape. One after another the Continental powers made peace with the Commonwealth, and at the middle of 1654 Charles found himself absolutely friendless. He had no money, either; contributions were taken up for him secretly from time to time, but between these gifts he had not credit enough to borrow twenty pistoles. France, indeed, paid him to leave her territory; no European country would receive him, there was no party for him in his own land. Well, indeed, says Miss Scott, "might Hyde write to Taylor: 'The King is now as low as to human understanding he can be.'"

Prof. Bigg's Lectures.

Prof. Charles Bigg has put into book form, with a preface, notes, and an excursus, his four lectures on "The Church's Task Under the Roman Empire." He sketches broadly the nature of the task before the Church when she began to evangelize the Graeco-Roman world. The writer deals principally with the questions, What the Roman Empire was, and what it made of its subjects; What each individual Christian was, down to the moment of his conversion and afterward. Henry Frowde is publishing the volume at the Clarendon Press.

JOHN INGLESANT.

Life, Letters and Literary Remains of the Author of That Famous Book.*

READERS of "John Inglesant" and of "The Little Schoolmaster Mark" cannot fail to have a peculiarly personal feeling for their author; and that personal feeling will be deepened by the reading of these volumes. Yet no writer of romance ever had a less eventful life, perhaps, in its outward manifestations, than J. Henry Shorthouse, and no entertaining in any ordinary sense this biography of him is not. His wife has prepared it with devotion and sympathy. The first volume contains her account of his life, interspersed with many letters. The second is filled with a number of his early essays, mostly read at the meetings of the Friends' Essay Society of Birmingham, a few stories and three poems.

We gain from this account of him a strong impression of the spiritual quality which was above all else the distinguishing mark of the man; also of the placid, thoughtful, gentle nature. The contrast between his outer and his inner life was striking. He was devoted from his boyhood to business, the conduct of chemical works in Birmingham, established by his great-grandfather; his family were Quakers, and he naturally did not look forward to the usual English university course. As a boy he was delicate and nervous; his study at Tottenham College was soon discontinued, and at the age of sixteen he entered on his business career, only in the leisure intervals of which was his literary work accomplished. He remained in commercial affairs, indeed, till the very end of his life.

Yet it is a mistake to suppose, as some have supposed, that he was without early advantages; or that because he was brought up as a Quaker the artistic side of literature was kept from him. He early came under the influence of Hawthorne; Wordsworth was his constant companion through life, and he was submitted in his boyhood to the spell of Tennyson. After his marriage and while his preoccupation with business was greatest, his wife discloses him to us studying Greek, reading classics and divinity, and fascinated and engrossed by seventeenth century literature. As a boy he was a dreamer, one whose imagination acted the part to himself of guide, philosopher, and friend; a born poet, idealizing everything; a student of history with a faculty of appropriating every fact, however small. So he is represented in the description of one of his cousins, and it is not a matter for surprise that in those days business was not very congenial to him, or that he used to call his father's office in Birmingham "The Hole." But his dreaming days ended with his marriage, and his wife pictures him as the business man, going regularly to business at 9, coming home to dinner in the middle of the day, and returning to town till nearly 7, when it was time for a high tea; then writing and studying, and rarely going out in the evening.

"John Inglesant" occupied him for ten years. The story of its origin, as Mrs. Shorthouse tells it, is a curious one for a work of such power and imagination:

> He would often say half playfully to me, "I should so like to write a book; if it was only quite a little book which nobody read I should like to write one." Then when he felt that he had collected materials for a work he said: "I am quite ready to begin a book, only I want a plot." By and by he found just what he wanted—the story of a knight who, on returning from a crusade, met and forgave the murderer of his brother. Round this one incident was woven the story of "John Inglesant."
> And after it was done he had little idea of publishing it, certain that no publisher would accept it. Only by the urging of a friend who offered to subscribe £10 toward printing it privately was he induced to go on and finish it; and it was, in fact, privately printed after its completion, though he then needed no pecuniary assistance in bringing it out, after more than one publisher had declined it. It is amusing to read of the modest and retiring author's amazement at its reception, and of his intense surprise and great pleasure at Alexander Macmillan's request to be allowed to publish it in the regular way.
> He was at once brought into the most brilliant and distinguished literary society of England.

The letters are, of course, full of his references to it, and they throw much light on his purposes in writing it, and on his own character, literary views, and religious temperament. The leading thought in his mind in writing "John Inglesant" was first, as he tells a correspondent, that "ordinary life in past ages was itself so full of interest that nothing is needful but to recover the minutiæ to make history as interesting as romance."

> Human life has never presented itself to me as divided into well-defined and [illegible] dealing in haphazard fashion, making a hero and a friend here, an enemy there, forgetting them, losing sight of them, and very often finding nothing come of the most promising events. Through all these, doubtless, runs a chain of circumstances which gives unity to the whole, but it is often very difficult to perceive even when the whole clue is in your hands.

It is "a philosophical romance," not a mere transcript of any particular age, whereby he explains the fact that the concluding pages are not exactly in accordance with the spirit of the period of the book; a "kind of allegory, and the characters are not expected to speak solely as ordinary men." It is also, as he repeatedly observes, "a protest on behalf of culture of every kind against fanaticism and superstition in every form," including "the fanaticism of work; to "exalt the unpopular doctrine that the end of existence is not the good of one's neighbor, but one's own culture," and it is "totally opposed to the popular ideas of religion (or the popular religions of the day.")

And in "Little Schoolmaster Mark" another aspect is shown. "Is religion always to be a stranger and alien at life's feast?" he writes to Boyd Carpenter, saying at the same time that the book was the story of one of the many failures to reconcile the artistic with the spiritual aspect of life; and in itself it is an experiment how far a purely artistic tale can be made the medium of philosophical and religious instruction. The stir made by "Little Mark" is suggested by his account of a letter from an evangelical lady about it, in a terrible state of distress "that the young should be taught that the good are not happy, and that they will probably die young"! To this "terrible shriek" he adds: "I am very sorry for the good people, but I cannot help it. Nothing seems to me more pathetic than the helpless state of prostration a very little plain speaking throws them into."

But there is much more than talk about his own books in these letters. There is delight in the success of his friends' achievements; there is discussion of the work and the views of many other men, and there is perhaps more than all else the copious outpouring of the man's philosophic, spiritual nature, and a constant formulation of his positive views about religious matters, in which his soul was immersed. They are serious, sincere letters, and show the high character of the man, his preoccupation with higher things, and they are full of gentleness and fine consideration for others. He was an intense churchman—his conversion from the Quaker faith of his forbears took place in his young manhood—and he has not much patience with the position of Roman Catholicism on the one hand or dissent on the other, or agnosticism in any manifestation; yet the note of intolerance is not often struck.

The early essays contained in the second volume are not at the present time of engrossing interest. The later essays include Mr. Shorthouse's contributions to periodicals and an essay on the Platonism of Wordsworth. The book is a worthy and illuminating account of a man whose most characteristic work is not destined soon to perish.

From London Bridge.

BY THE QUEEN'S GRACE. By Virna Sheard. Illustrated. 12mo. New York: Frederick A. Stoker Company. $1.50.

In the days of good Queen Bess many strange things happened. Virna Sheard's "By the Queen's Grace" tells the story of a simple maiden whose father was the tollkeeper of London Bridge. Joyce Davenport was as lovely as she was good, and those who passed beneath the grim shadows of the old bridge knew her always as the lily of the bridge. Richard Davenport, her father, had been a ne'er-do-well condemned to death on the day of the Queen's coronation, but by the royal grace set free, and because of his handsome face given the office of tollkeeper. He married a Puritan lady, gentle of spirit and lovely of face, and it was her goodness and her father's beauty that wrought in Joyce Davenport an irresistible combination.

Here on the bridge, in spite of her father's evil ways, Joyce grew to lovely womanhood until Richard saw in her a sudden means to wealth and station and planned to wed her nobly. But fate and a stalwart juggler clad in close-fitting brown played false to Richard's hopes, and Joyce's gentle heart went out to the juggler of knives who, however, she learned was none other than Lord Yelverton, a noble but penniless retainer of Queen Bess's Court. It was not for the nobility but for the wealth that Richard would have married his daughter, and so, rather than see her the wife of a poor nobleman, he chose that she should wed one Gillian of the Bear Gardens.

Then come exciting times for Joyce, for, besides her father's edict, old Michael, my Lord Yelverton's man, had told her a tale of inherited lands for Yelverton if he would but wed another woman. There seems nothing for Joyce but the black waters of the Thames. But it was not written in the books that she should die. There was a rescue and quick flight to the Queen, with a thumb [illegible] Davenport himself came hustling past the guards into the Queen's very presence in search of his own. There was a quarrel and a stab in the side, and Richard's blood enriched the hem of the Queen's farthingal. From Richard's stiffening lips they drew the story of his bastard birth, and for the sake of his daughter a knighthood was hurriedly given to the dying tollkeeper. Joyce became maid of honor to the Queen, but of my Lord Yelverton she say nothing.

And so the weary years dragged on, and Joyce was still maid of honor to the Queen, until at last the Queen summoned to Court noblemen who had not been there for years. Among them came Yelverton, looking as of yore only older and somewhat grayer over the temples. He had wed the other woman and gained the lands, but not until after had been told that Joyce had drowned. But death moves many an intending person in properly constructed stories. A timely fever cuts off the obnoxious wife of Lord Yelverton, Joyce comes to her own at last—and thus passes the Queen's favorite maid of honor.

BOOK PRICES.

AUCTION PRICES OF BOOKS. A Representative Record Arranged in Alphabetical Order from the Commencement of the English Book-Prices Current in 1886, and the American Book-Prices Current in 1894 to 1898, and Including Complete Tables of Important Auction Quotations of Earlier Date. Edited by Luther S. Livingston. In four volumes. Vol. I. Pp. xi.-1078. 8vo. Cloth. New York: Dodd, Mead & Co. Per set, $40.

A remarkable example of modern labor saving machinery is a volume, the first of a set, entitled "Auction Prices of Books." It is an alphabetical record of the items in the English Book-Prices Current, the publication of which began in 1886, and of those in the American Book-Prices Current, which dates from 1894, together with many auction quotations of earlier date. It is, therefore, primarily a price list of all the important rarities, sold in Great Britain or America during many years. But even as a price list it is peculiarly a labor-saving device, for it brings into small compass information obtainable hitherto only at the expense of much searching through many volumes. Those who have hunted through the eighteen volumes of the British Prices-Current and the ten American volumes will appreciate the value of "Auction Prices of Books."

The new work has still other commendable qualities. The lists of works by an author are in many cases so complete as to serve as a bibliography. For example of this completeness, in the volume now published, covering the alphabet from A to Dick, may be noted the entries under Boccaccio, which occupy seven and a half pages; under the Brownings, six and a half; Burns, nearly four; Chaucer, four and a half; and Bible, twenty-seven pages.

This magnum opus has been compiled by Luther S. Livingston, editor of American Book-Prices Current. He has followed the existing rule of excluding books which have sold for less than £1 in England and $5 here; but within the limits imposed by it has included these broad classes:

1.—All books in English, or printed in Great Britain, from Caxton's time to the present. 2.—All books relating to America, wherever printed, and in whatever language. 3.—All incunabula printed in Europe, and many works of Continental provenance of a later date than 1520. He has, however, excluded non-English books of the seventeenth and later centuries, and "freak books"—Grangerized copies extended by matter inserted.

Only seven hundred and fifty copies of the book will be printed. Its importance and value are so apparent that it is likely to become itself a rarity in a very short time. A noteworthy fact about the work is its rapid publication. Instead of dragging over years, the last volume will appear within four months of the first.

A Drop of Poison.

In The Pocket Book Series of novels which Bobbs, Merrill & Co. of Indianapolis are bringing out this season Anna Katherine Green has contributed a story called "The Amethyst Box." (Illustrated. 16mo.)

The box was of curious workmanship, and contained a vial so small that it held only one drop of liquid, but of such powerful quality was that drop that the merest taste of it meant death to the strongest. On the eve of his wedding Sinclair exhibited this rare jewel to a number of ladies, including the bride-elect and another young woman, Dorothy Camerden, beloved by Mr. Worthington, the teller of the tale. Besides these characters a stout, unpleasant lady, an aunt of both girls, plays a conspicuous part in the story. Shortly after its exhibition the amethyst box was missing, and shortly thereafter the unpleasant aunt dies screaming at midnight. By the natural sequence of events both Dorothy and Gilbertine, the bride-elect, come under the gloom of suspicion.

It is an absorbing story, as are all of this author's detective tales, and it has [illegible] row one's period of suspense before he finds out who stole the box and who administered the poison and—in the end—who marries, down to only an hour or two.

When Dom Pedro Was Emperor.

THE PATH OF A CROWN. By Schuyler Stanton. Illustrated. Pp. [illegible]. Chicago: The Reilly & Britton Co.

To read a revolutionary tale on South America that is not farcical or quixotic is indeed refreshing. Schuyler Stanton is an author to whom the reader should feel indebted for an earnest tale of the revolt which overthrew the monarchy of Dom Pedro in Brazil and the exciting happenings prior to the republic's declaration of its freedom.

It is a perfectly simple story, as one perceives, when the last chapter is reached, but as the narrative is in the first person the reader is as much mystified over the strange happenings as the hero who finds himself plunged into a whirlpool of plot and counterplot the moment he lands at Rio. He is Robert Harcliffe, who has been appointed private secretary to Dom Miguel, the leader of the revolutionists. Naturally when it becomes known through the secret service bureau of the Emperor that a secretary is coming Harcliffe's reception at Rio is something for him to remember if he survives. His journey from the coast to Miguel's residence in the country is one wild series of adventure. He is arrested and freed by a Sergeant of police, who, secretly a revolutionist, stabs his brother officer in order to allow Harcliffe to escape, but, with the murder at his door. The conductor of a train is instructed by the Emperor's agents to arrest the American private secretary. The conductor, like a good revolutionist and a faithful servant of the Emperor, comes excitedly to Harcliffe and shows him the telegram and shouts: "I don't think he's on this train. Do you?"

"Of course not," says Harcliffe.

When the secretary finally reaches Miguel's residence he meets among others a ward of the leader, Lesba Paola, with whom he immediately falls in love. Lesba, however, is a puzzle to him because she smothers all her womanhood in zeal for the cause for which she is an indefatigable worker. Her brother, too, the Minister of Police, seems to Harcliffe an insipid ass, and the American marvels why the other revolutionists hang on his lightest words.

Then follows much intrigue and adventure, which culminates in the overthrow of the Government by a clever coup of the simpering Minister of Police, who has worn his insipid smile as a mask to his intelligence and earnestness. The heart interest of the story is quaint, for while it is apparent at times to Harcliffe that the beautiful Lesba is in love with him, at other moments he is convinced that not only does she love another, but is a traitor to the cause through her intimacy with Valcour, of the Emperor's side. This Valcour turns out to be a woman spy, professionally the enemy of the Minister of Police, but otherwise his heart's admirable love. It was the tie of womanhood that Lesba and Valcour shared, and at last Harcliffe is made happy.

The character drawing of the book is splendid, and when one has passed through scenes of the most unaccountable nature it is marvelous how natural the whole story becomes when the sex of Valcour is revealed, the apparent treachery of every person explained to the American, and love and duty no longer fear the dividing line of politics.

A Civil War Heroine.

SERENA. A Novel. By Virginia Fraser Boyle. 12mo. New York: A. S. Barnes & Co. $1.50.

Mrs. Boyle will probably be recalled as the author of several very entertaining short stories of Southern home life, but this is her first effort at anything like a long connected tale. The scene and time are the South just before and during the days of the civil war. Serena was beautiful, as was to be expected—but more than that, she was amiable, educated, spirited, and endowed with the courage of a long line of worthy ancestors. It was Carl, her twin brother, whose spirit was weak and who, when the stirring days of battle came, turned white feather and fled, leaving Serena to take up her father's sword and maintain the honor of the family.

But it is not only as a Joan of Arc that Serena gallops through the story. There are lovers galore to cross her path, but the lives of two in particular are twined and twisted with hers. And for all her coquetry Serena was a good and earnest little lass, whose love was well worth the striving for and who in the end was quite worthy the affections of Horace Baldwin.

In the course of the story Mrs. Boyle has brought to light a picture of the underground railway scheme which was to have been the means of freeing the negroes. It was Serena who turned from his purpose the traitor to her mother's hospitality, and later, when the crazed negro, Lame Jake, headed a band of lawless black men that marched straight toward the big house to destroy it, it was Serena's calm voice and steady aim which quelled the insurrection and averted the tragedy.

MR. HUTTON'S TALKS.

Collection in Book Form of His Literary and Dramatic Reminiscences, Taken Down by Isabel Moore.*

MR. HUTTON thought that if he could talk about his literary friends into an appreciative and discriminating phonograph he could put his reminiscences on record. Isabel Moore has taken the duties of such a phonograph for a large part of the "talks" in this volume, recording what Mr. Hutton said in the first person. Some of the chapters had already appeared in periodicals. The whole volume was subjected to his revision and correction, and it is his last word to the world in which he had so many friends and by which he was beloved. Mr. Hutton was a genial and cultivated litterateur, who knew many of the most distinguished literary, artistic, and dramatic men in a peculiarly intimate and personal way. His collection of books and memorabilia was filled with personal touches and recollections, and there were close ties that bound him to the authors of many of them. He has told of them in this volume in a frank and engaging way. It is largely autobiographical, and gives many details of the narrator's adventures and friendships with the noted men and women who pass and repass through its pages. It is purely personal, and contains much of his own views, critical and expository, as to the quality of those people and their achievement. It is unassuming, kindly, penetrating, and full of humor; and it possesses unceasingly the quality of charm.—As the last word, and the very characteristic word, of a cultivated, genial observer with a genius for friendship, it will give much pleasure.

Mr. Hutton has some charming things to say about his boyhood and young manhood days—his days of idleness in school and strenuous efforts in the hop business, his friendship with Charles, the barber, who bought his books and read them—days when he was cut dead by a young lady with whom he had danced the "varsovienne" the previous night in Waverley Place, when she saw him in overalls, rolling barrels on skids on Broad Street; and he was ashamed of her. His first published article recalls the second visit of Dickens, and his disappointment in the novelist's readings. The well-beloved characters were never the same again:

> He introduced old scenes and old friends in new shapes of which I do not like to think. He killed my Sam Weller and my Micawber. All these years I have mourned doubly for the Ham who was "drownded" in the sea and taken away from me on the platform. For all these years I have been absolutely Toot-less.

He recalls, too, an amateur dramatic performance in Liverpool in 1852, in which Dickens appeared; and, a year or two later, a performance of "Dombey and Son," in which the most memorable feature was the acting of the part of Mr. Dombey. And, telling of it years later, he was interrupted by one of his listeners, who broke in with this:

> Come now, old fellow, that won't do. That bit of flattery is altogether too invidious and too apparent. It was almost my first appearance on the stage in anything like an important part, and so far as I can remember it was before I had taken the name of Henry Irving!

Mr. Hutton has several such little surprises for his readers, as when he tells of a little shell cameo portrait of his father which he was showing in later years as the work of a clever little Frenchman, by name unknown to him, when one of the guests, looking at it, his hand shaking a little, said:

> He was a clever little Frenchman, was he, and you don't know his name? Well, I'm the clever little Frenchman, and my name is Saint Gaudens. It is the earliest piece of my work extant, and when you and Mrs. Hutton get through with it, I want it for Gussie and the boy.

The reminiscences of actors are many and interesting. Mr. Hutton, who was for years a dramatic writer and critic, speaks of Booth at length, with many anecdotes of his extreme kindness of heart and his loyalty in friendship; and the chapter is indeed touching. There are memories of Jefferson, Barrett, Wallack, Montague, Florence, McCullough, Mrs. Keeley, and Mrs. Maeder. Implicating Lawrence Barrett, one of the most amusing stories is of the christening of Mr. Frank Millet's baby in London, when Hutton and Barrett were present. The child was to be named Lawrence, and when the parish clerk asked what it was to be, Barrett spelled it out for him, "Lawrence," as his name was spelled. Hutton immediately corrected him with "Laurence," as his own name is spelled. And they shouted this at each other, to the amazement of the poor little official, till Mr. Millet stopped them with the remark that the father ought to have something to say, and, turning to the clerk, said: "Spell him with a 'v.'" And, "Lavrence" Millet he is by law.

Mr. Hutton's collection of death masks and of casts of hands is noted, and his chat about it is entertaining, full of all the incident and adventure of a dauntless and indefatigable collector's experience. It gives occasion, too, for much interesting gossip concerning the origin of the different casts and the circumstances under which they were made, often ascertained by Mr. Hutton only after long investigation.

There is much delightful discourse about Mr. Hutton's many friends and acquaintances in the literary, artistic, and dramatic world in this country and in England, and of his experiences in England with them he is full of stories, many of which throw some pleasant little sidelight on somebody we all have heard of. He has also many mementos of them in the shape of autographs, sketches, droll impromptus of all sorts, notes and verses. Many of these are reproduced in fac simile, and they are likely to give the same sort of pleasure and amusement that the originals gave to the genial and kindly owner of the hospitable library wherein these treasures belonged.

THE EYES.

ON BECOMING BLIND. Advice for the Use of Persons Losing Their Sight. By Dr. Emile Javal. Translated by Carroll E. Edson. 12mo. Pp. xi, 181. New York: The Macmillan Co. $1.25.

There is a singularly sympathetic quality in this little book which gives it an appeal to a much larger class than that for which it is especially intended. Dr. Javal is a Parisian oculist, who, by an ironical trick of fate, became blind when he was sixty-two years old. For the benefit of the similarly afflicted he has given here some advice on matters of greater or less moment that he has derived from his own experience, backed by the intelligence and the scientific knowledge of a medical man. He found that there was nothing on the subject except what related to the instruction of the blind young, in technical ways, or concerning the organization of charity for the blind poor. He has avoided all such things, and confined himself to suggestion in the practical, everyday matters, small and great, that may contribute much to the comfort, convenience, and happiness of those who become blind as he has. And he has done this in such a cheerful and helpful way, with so much insight into the psychological problems that accompany the coming of blindness, and with such a positive charm of style, that the book is a pleasure to read even on the part of those whose interest is not immediately claimed by the subject.

His first charge is to oculists not to deceive their patients with false hopes when there is no hope, but to prepare the incurable to arrange their lives in anticipation of the inevitable outcome. Everything should be done to give the blind the maximum of freedom and independence by providing them with the means of doing for themselves as many things as possible. He wishes to disabuse them of certain illusions, one of the most widely spread being the notion that the loss of one sense increases the acuteness of the others. It does not; but by concentrating attention upon them, it brings greater keenness in interpreting the information they furnish. Thus, it is possible to increase, not the sensitiveness of touch, but its usefulness. Readers of the Braille or other systems of raised letters know how to feel with their finger tips better than other people; but their sense is no more acute. For Dr. Javal says that it is much more difficult for him to read with his left finger tip than with his right, although the sensitiveness of the right has been very noticeably diminished by the rubbing.

He has suggestions for manual occupations for the blind, though he does not give much encouragement for them, and for professional work with the help of secretaries. Neatness, hygiene, the most convenient arrangement of the dwelling, how to eat tidily, how to walk best, with and without the assistance of a guide, how to smoke—it is an error to suppose that the blind lose their taste for tobacco because they cannot see the smoke—are some of the minor, yet important, subjects he touches upon. For vigorous exercise he prefers the tandem bicycle; dumbbells he finds, with many others, an intolerable bore. Traveling alone is not at all impossible for the blind. Devices to aid the blind in writing are discussed in a practical way. The reading and writing of Braille, the abbreviated system of raised letters, is shown to be a rather disheartenigly slow process, but it is indispensable, especially for the young, and for the more isolated. The cultivation of the memory is important for the blind, and Dr. Javal gives an interesting chapter to it. Of the international language, "Esperanto," as an aid to the blind, he seems to have great hopes, and thinks more highly of it than of Volapük.

An extremely interesting chapter is devoted to what Prof. William James has called the "sixth sense," the sense of obstacles, which many, especially of the congenital blind, have shown. Dr. Javal himself finds that he does not possess it, but believes that it may perhaps be cultivated. He adduced many facts observed by others that he thinks may be made the most favorable conditions for the birth of this curious kind of perception. There is an appendix that gives useful information as to aid for the blind in this country.

A New Cicero.

Books I. and II. of Cicero's "Tusculanarum Disputationum," in one volume, are a revised text, with an introductory and commentary and a collation of many manuscripts, by Prof. Thomas Wilson Dougan of Queen's College, Belfast, which the Macmillan Company is issuing. The volume is the growth of lectures delivered by Prof. Dougan. In his introduction he writes concerning Cicero's philosophical works, the date of the Tusculan Disputations, and the dedication to Brutus; Cicero's sources for the Disputations; the manuscripts of the Disputations—their classification, description, and analysis of manuscript errors; the argument of the contents of the present volume, and the spelling adopted in the text, which is that the author believes, from the best manuscripts.

The Coptic New Testament.

The Clarendon Press is issuing the third and fourth volumes of the Coptic version of the New Testament in the northern dialect, called Memphitic and Bohairic, with introduction, critical apparatus, and literal English version. Vol. III. contains "The Epistles of St. Paul," edited from a manuscript in the British Museum, where is also the manuscript of Vol. IV., "The Catholic Epistles and the Acts of the Apostles," and "The Apocalypse."

MAY

MEDICI PRINCESS.

Edith Sichel's New Book About Catherine, Regent of France.*

In her latest book Miss Edith Sichel, already known as a student of French history, has produced an extremely interesting and comprehensive history of the first two-thirds of the life of Catherine de Medici. No life of Catherine at all complete could well be otherwise than interesting; for that Queen, though not immoral, as was Cleopatra, in many respects resembled that "serpent of old Nile," and the period of her power is one of the most interesting in modern history. Famous men and women pass before us in endless procession: Condé, Coligny, Jeanne d'Albret, Queen of Navarre; Henry of Navarre, "La Reine Margot," Diane de Poitiers, Bernard Palissy, Ronsard, and his fellow-poets of the Pleiad; and great events, events which have had lasting effects on France and the world, occurred while she ruled France as the power behind the throne.

Hitherto Catherine, like Lucrezia Borgia, has figured as a sort of stage villain, surrounded by astrologers, with poison closets always near at hand. In fact, however, says Miss Sichel, "half French, half Italian, with Medicean craft in her veins, Catherine was too diplomatic to be anything positively; frankness, even in sin, would have been to her a breach not of morals, but of manners. She dealt in negative evil—a disease no less actual and perhaps more poisonous than the common sort ascribed to her." One real feeling she had, apart from ambition and self-interest, and one only, her love for her husband, a love never returned, that led her to bear with dignity the constant trial of his affection for Diane de Poitiers.

Catherine was eminently endowed with common sense. In this lay her power; in this, too, lay her weakness. For though common sense makes a good administrator, unless larger qualities go with it it does not make statesmanship. Catherine had not such larger qualities, and hence she failed in great matters. Her only pivot was her personal power; her sole aim to keep the Regency at any cost. Hence her tactics changed even oftener than the moon. At one time she was a Catholic of the Catholics; at another, she closed with the Huguenots. Four main currents shaped her course, says Miss Sichel—Diane de Poitiers, Philip of Spain, the Guises, and the Huguenots. With the first and the last of these alone does the book before us deal; the Guises and Philip are merely incidents, while considerable part of the volume is devoted to Diane, and more than half to the reformers and the Reformation.

Of religious beliefs Catherine had none, but she inclined toward the new religion for intellectual reasons—the Huguenots were "people of understanding," she might have said with her son Henry of Anjou. She had a strong taste for their belief—only a taste, however. Yet for years it was strong enough to keep Spain complaining constantly of her heterodoxy. At one time the Paris mob rose against her because she insisted that the right to punish heretics must be reserved for the Magistrates. But when the Huguenots revolted, her attitude began to change; when they became a political danger everything had to yield to her intention to save her Regency. Yet even two days before the massacre of St. Bartholomew she married her daughter to the Protestant King of Navarre, allowing him to withdraw from the church that he might not hear the nuptial mass. But that was the final suggestion of her old liking for the Huguenots. Always rebellious to her, she turned on them at last. Her opinion did not change; but they had become dangerous to her rule, and for safety's sake, not for religion's, she became and stayed their enemy.

One of the strongest currents driving Catherine was Diane de Poitiers, Duchesse de Valentinois, mistress of her husband, Henry II. Legend has treated Diane as it has treated Catherine, only in the opposite direction; it has made her beautiful and virtuous, except for her single fault. She was not beautiful; she had never been so. Virtuous she probably was. She was seventeen years older than her lover, and maintained a curious motherly rather than loverlike care over him from the first to the last, until Henry's death, when she was nearly sixty. Upon the whole her influence over Henry was good. She found him a sullen, silent boy; she made him a man, a poet, a King. His affection for her developed from a calf-love into that of a man for his wife; and their union was in effect a happy marriage. She loved and cared for the children of Henry and Catherine as if they had been her own; they were as much at home at her castle of Anet as at Amboise, where their mother lived her lonely life. Henry reproached Diane when the children misbehaved, exactly as if she had been their mother—altogether, it was a curious menage.

Through Diane alone could access be at Anet, and entertains them nobly; she made her lover pay some attention to his wife. No wonder then that Catherine, though the niece of a Pope, turned toward the Huguenots, whom Diane hated.

In Miss Sichel's opinion the failure of the Reformation in France was due to several reasons; the congenital skepticism of the French for one; the dissensions among the Huguenot leaders for another. There was a party of the Prince de Condé, a party of the King of Navarre, another of the Constable de Bourbon, and Coligny without a party. Then the lack of a middle class in France affected greatly the chances of the Reformation. In Germany and England and Scotland the Reformation was led by Luther and Knox, both of the middle class; in France it was led by aristocrats; and, says our author, "when the people are led by aristocratic leaders, the movement is apt to end in incoherence. The old feudal relations assert themselves, and the difference in rank is too great to allow of any real tie between the Captains and their followers; for the chiefs, though they may fight for truth and liberty, are not fighting for the needs of the people, which they neither know nor understand."

Chapters in the second part of Miss Sichel's history deal with the literary movement in France in the sixteenth century—that begun by Ronsard and the Pleiad, and offer an interesting comparison between Ronsard and the Elizabethan poets of England. A third chapter discusses Catherine as an amateur of the arts. "Like all her contemporaries, she was a collector, more from competition with others than from the love of what she collected." She drove hard bargains; she even neglected to pay her bills for what she bought. Architecture was the one art about which she was keen, but even as to that she had no real taste.

The other arts did not flourish under Catherine. There was no real school of painting; the portrait painters alone flourished. But their works were not considered only as art; they took the place of cartes de visite, they were useful in politics, and were judged by their practical importance rather than by their artistic completeness. The typical man of the time, however, was not architect or portrait painter, but an ornamenter; a skilled craftsman, Bernard Palissy. He wished "in no wise to be the imitator of my predecessors." He was always trying new processes, inventing them, testing, experimenting; and so it was with the others—their scientific spirit made their art unsatisfactory as art.

Palissy's story of his long fight to produce white enameled pottery is a part of French literature. For eighteen years he sought the secret, through poverty ever growing poorer; and at last he found it. If he had but known, he might have had it for the asking from any Italian potter; it was his fate that he did not know. But when he had discovered the process he became famous—his fame lasts to this day, and the platters and dishes that he made still command the admiration of collectors, though never really artistic. It is typical of the time that Palissy should have been a Huguenot, in spite of his Court patronage, and also that it was owing to his own imprudence rather than to any objection to his religion that he was punished and finally died in the Bastille.

Miss Sichel brings the story of Catherine down to 1562, the year of the massacre of St. Bartholomew. It may be hoped that she will think it worth while to continue the study of this "paradox of indecision and masterfulness," though possibly the period described in the present volume is more interesting than that that yet remained of Catherine's life.

Stories of Politics.

SLAVES OF SUCCESS. By Elliott Flower. Pp. 304. Illustrated by Jay Hambridge. 12mo. Cloth. Boston: L. C. Page & Co. $1.50.

"Slaves of Success" consists of eight sketches, the last almost a novelette, in which searchlights are thrown upon the methods of the political "machine," and the crooked ways of "graft." Mr. Flower writes brilliantly; he is sure of his ground, and he does not hesitate to expose those things that are the shame of our Republic. John Wade, Ben Carroll, Tom Higbie, are all excellent examples of "practical politicians."

Wade was politically unscrupulous, but personally honest. . . . This means that he was not a boodler himself, but that he was not above helping boodlers in order that he might use them politically. He would not offer a man money, but for a political price he would let him steal it from others, or from the State. Carroll, on the other hand, used politics for his pecuniary advantage; with him power had a cash value, in addition to being personally gratifying. He liked to rule, but he played politics principally because it put him in the way of making money.

Higbie was Carroll's lieutenant, put forward to "do the dirty work." How this trio, sometimes working in concert, sometimes in secret opposition to each other, manage to gain "the necessary vote," to "reform the reformer," to get "a mortgage on a man," to put through a railroad job, and to gain their political objects by various "ways that are dark," is most forcefully set forth by Mr. Flower. Few are the cities, villages, or counties of our broad land that have not their "ring" or "machine," with a Wade, Carroll, and Higbie well in evidence. One would be justified in despairing of the future of this country, but that ten righteous men would have saved Sodom. Mr. Flower does not forget the righteous men. One of the many merits of his book is that it is not one of unalloyed pessimism. Asa Craig, a "hayseed" legislator, defeated for a while, but slowly coming to a comprehension as shrewd as his purpose was honest; Allen Midway, forceful and enthusiastic; Waylee; McHugh; the clear-headed, long-haired women, Mrs. Trumbull and Hazel Hoyne—these are as true to life and as strongly delineated as the "grafters." The world is full of these, and of their ultimate triumph, and take comfort, as Slaves of Success, is not only of absorbing interest, but, if as widely read as it deserves, cannot fail of being a power for good. There is no better way of scattering the crawling things that work and thrive in darkness than by turning over the stone of concealment and letting in the light; no better way of encouraging and multiplying the few politicians who agree with Jefferson that "the whole art of government consists in being honest," than by convincing each that his —strength is as the strength of ten

Because his heart is pure.

Both these things Mr. Flower does, and does in the most convincing way, not by "pointing a moral," but by letting his story speak for itself.

THE HOLSTEINERS.

JÖRN UHL. By Gustav Frenssen. Translated by F. E. Delmez. 12mo. Pp. 414. Boston: Dana Estes & Co.

This "Jörn Uhl" is a book of such rich, indigenous growth that no man who is not a German, one may guess—even a Holsteiner—can read it quite understandingly. Yet, even an American may feel the thing in it which has so stirred the German public. These Frisians are strange folk, and their ways are strange, but they are very human. The men are men, the women women; the children, children—a strangely haunted lot, mingling sense and sentiment, sadness and gladness in a way not our way at all. And the country parson who has written about them has, it is easy to feel, put the people and the lives they live quick into his book. It is a fragment of Holstein torn out of the living body of the land for outlanders to see and wonder at. The outlander will probably thank God that he is not a Holsteiner, but if he is human and fairly honest he will not fail to see a sort of TWELVE STORIES AND A DREAM. By H. G. Wells. One volume. Pp. 331. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50.

It would certainly be a pity if any, even those who are least fond of Mr. H. G. Wells in his psychic and prophetic moods, should fail to read his "Twelve Stories and a Dream" for fear of finding themselves launched upon some such wildly scientific imaginings as characterize "The War of the Worlds" and most of his previous work, for there are at least seven out of this baker's dozen of stories which reveal an entirely new phase of his talent. Even the remaining six deal with matters only mildly beyond the bounds of experience, and all are written with an effectiveness and skill that are beyond criticism.

Humor is about the last quality which a past acquaintance would lead one to expect in any work of Mr. Wells's, but that is just the surprising turn that his genius has taken at this apparently late day, though there is still enough of the pseudo-scientific cropping out at intervals through the book to prove that he has not had such an entire change of heart that he is no longer tempted to transfer to the readers of fiction the possible or probable scientific achievements of the future. Strange to say, however, it is just the two or three of the stories most nearly in his old vein that one would pick out as the least clever and interesting in this collection, while not even Jacobs himself ever concocted droller characters or incidents than enliven the gems entitled "Mr. Brisher's Treasure," "Mr. Ledbetter's Vacation," and "Miss Winchelsea's Heart." There is not even a hint in any of them to remind one of anything that H. G. Wells ever wrote before, and yet there is not a sign of the novice. He can apparently depict, at a moment's notice, a Mr. Brisher as good as if he were the product of a life study of cockney dialect and manners instead of the imagining of a man whose thoughts have been busy with the wonders of time and space and that strange realm of earth where things not quite explicable happen.

Of the latter class there are here two very creepy examples called "The Story of the Inexperienced Ghost" and "The Stolen Body." In the first it is cleverly suggested that there are people who will find it as hard to be successful ghosts as successful dwellers on the earth, and that the little matter of haunting requires both a strength of character and experience that are far from being the universal possession of ghosts. The particular spirit referred to in this tale came to haunt, but forgot his cue, as it were, and couldn't vanish. He had a sad time until a sympathetic mortal helped him out and incidentally vanished himself. "The Stolen Body" explains how dangerous it is when disembodied spirits are always hovering in our vicinity, yearning to return to this life, to engage, as did a certain Mr. Bessel and Mr. Vincey, in concerted attempts to project their own apparitions through space. Mr. Bessel succeeded so well that, in his temporary absence from his own body, a most evil spirit got possession of it, and for twenty hours things looked dubious for Mr. Bessel.

The "Magic Shop" is a delightful picture of the kind of miracle that so easily takes place for children's minds among inanimate objects; and "The Valley of Spiders" is the one gruesome, unpleasant thing in the whole book.

There are other tales, but enough have surely been mentioned to show the varied entertainment which Mr. Wells offers and to indicate our opinion that he has never offered any better.

Some "Dark" Problems of Life.

In his new book, "Life's Dark Problems," which G. P. Putnam's Sons are publishing this week, Dr. Minot J. Savage, author of "Life Beyond Death," "The Morning and the Permanent in Religion," &c., discusses "the principal dark problems of life in the chapters "The Anarchy of Job," "Some Theological Answers," "The Divine Government," "Pain," "Life's Incompleteness," "Moral Evil," "Death," "Abolitions and Cataclysm," "Mental Pain and Despair," "Can a God of Wisdom, Power, and Love Be Limited?" in an attempt to answer all questions that may arise. All men need is solid standing ground under their feet and light enough to take the next step in advance." He writes in the opening paragraph of his chapter on "The Divine Government."

God has made to us no supernatural revelation as to His method of governing the world. He has left us, as, indeed, He has in every other direction, to find out for ourselves. We discover it by study and by experience, and it is better that it is so, for by the processes of study and experience we not only discover truth, but we grow, we develop, so that we can understand, comprehend, and feel that which we have attained.

The New York Times
SATURDAY REVIEW OF BOOKS AND ART
SUPPLEMENT TO THE NEW YORK TIMES

NEW YORK, MAY 20, 1905.

TAINE IN 1871.

A curiously interesting group of contemporary documents is given in La Revue des Deux Mondes for the 15th of April, a series of letters from M. Hippolyte Taine to his family during the Commune in Paris and during a week at Oxford toward the close of the terrible outbreak. M. Taine was in Paris on the morning after the assassination of Lecomte and Thomas; the next day he went to Orsay, a little town on the river Ivette, ten miles south of Paris, returning from there several times to deliver his course at the university amid the early scenes of the insurrection, then on the 17th of April, when Thiers and the Assembly at Versailles were engaged in the final efforts for the recapture of Paris, retiring to Tours, and from there passing on the 24th of May to Oxford, where he delivered a short historical course and met a host of interesting Englishmen.

It is needless to say that the philosopher, critic, historian, and intensely patriotic Frenchman was plunged in the deepest gloom by the domestic disaster following on the heels of the tremendous defeat at the hands of Germany. His gloom stopped little short of despair. In each succeeding phase of the revolt he saw renewed signs of the approach of the "Terror." As late as the 5th of April, after the ultimate success of the Versailles troops seemed assured, he wrote: "The general impression remains. The Parisians, under the exaltation of the phrases of their journals, and of their deep-seated vanity, persuaded themselves not only that they could resist the Government, but that they could crush the Germans. Having failed, they are convinced that they were betrayed by their leaders. It is impossible to get them away from this line of reasoning. The present insurrection is at bottom socialist. 'The employer, the bourgeois, is exploiting us. He must be suppressed. There is no such thing as superiority or speciality. I, a workman, am, if I choose, capable of being the head of a concern, Magistrate, General. By a great stroke of luck we have rifles. Let's use them and establish a republic where workmen like us may be Ministers and Presidents.'"

The reader hears in these intimate expressions to the author's family the tone of the historian of the "Revolution," the keen, proud, sincere, persistent hunter for the "idée maitresse." "The horrible thing about it," he cries, "is that men like Elisée Reclus of the Revue des Deux Mondes is among the insurgents." The future looks very black. His only hope is that the Duc de Bordeaux may "have the heart to abdicate or the good luck to die." Otherwise "the Republic, after events such as these, can only be provisional with us." At Oxford his "sensation of solitude, poetic, picturesque, carefully guarded, is charming." "How happy they, how unhappy we!" From those tranquil precincts he looked out with inexpressible envy on a people who in all classes "admit and apply universally two principles unknown in France: (1) When the majority has spoken, submit frankly, seriously, without any mental reservation of violating the decision by a coup d'état; (2) permit the minority to say and print what suits it."

He is lost in admiration for the manner in which individual liberty is protected in England. An employer who had caused the arrest of his servant on suspicion of stealing property, afterward found, pays him, on the advice of the Judge, £200. A man arrested by mistake for another of the same name recovers £400 from the detective. A meeting is held for the advocacy of "the social republic." The orators declare that the "Queen is a worn-out woman; is, moreover, only a rusty old cogwheel in an antique social machine, and that the Chief Magistracy should be filled by election, and they are surrounded by policemen to protect them from interruption." For such liberty and such restraint his own people he finds utterly unfitted. M. Taine lived to see many of his fearful expectations proved unfounded. The republic has now lasted twice as long as the most stable of the forms of government that have succeeded each other in France since the close of the eighteenth century. It has withstood very severe shocks and with increasing steadfastness. One cannot help suggesting that it has achieved these really marvelous results by virtue of the very freedom which, quite naturally, M. Taine so deeply distrusted.

THE BRITISH EMPIRE.

The Hon. George Peel supplements his book on "The Enemies of England" with a second on "The Friends of England," for which Messrs. E. P. Dutton & Co. are the American sponsors. It is introduced, very happily, with a quotation, by way of motto, from Pericles, apud Thucydides: "For we have planted eternal memorials of our enmity and of our friendship throughout the world."

The writer really deals, however, with friends who may become enemies, and whose enmity would be important and dangerous to the British Empire. For it seems that, of the two dangers that lie before the British Empire, "the first may be summarized in the phrase the United States," while "the second may be summarized incorrectly but conclusively as the Yellow Peril." The first pertains to the doubt whether the success and growth of the United States may not make what may be called Anglo-Saxondom transfer its allegiance across the Atlantic. The second is whether the success and growth of Japan may not raise a movement for the "solidarity" of Asia under the hegemony of the Island Empire of the East. Practically the two dangers are lest we should in time annex Canada, if not Australia, and lest the Japanese victories should result in the loss of British India.

Truly, there would not be much left of the British Empire if Canada should come our way and India Japan's, in which case Australia would doubtless set up for itself. In that case Great Britain would shrink to much the same position as that now occupied by Holland, her maritime and commercial rival of three centuries ago. And yet the nations by which these perils would come are to be enumerated among the friends of England, the United States, if we may pay any attention at all to the current effusiveness on both sides, her best friend, and Japan not only her friend but formally her ally.

It is the working out in detail of the two hypotheses to which we may have referred that will constitute the main interest of the book for American readers. That is by no means all of the book, only a small part of it. Curiously, the American peril applies only to men of English race or traditions, the Yellow Peril to men of entirely different origin and associations. As to American expansion in the Far East, Mr. Peel fails, quite naturally, to realize what a casual and unintended result of the war with Spain it was, and seems to impute it to deliberate policy. Americans knew that but for the German squadron in Manila Bay during Commodore Dewey's occupation of the harbor we might very probably have turned the islands adrift. It is quite true that we have no notion of turning them adrift now. But it by no means follows that we have entered into the European rivalry for the conquest of China. As to the Yellow Peril to British India, Mr. Peel seems much to overestimate the "solidarity" of Asia. As a matter of fact, not even in the primary ethnic classification nor in that of language are Asiatics akin, while in religion, the other great bond of union among men, they are quite irreconcilable. The notion of stable alliance between the Mohammedans of India and the Buddhists thereof, or of either with the Confucians of China, seems perfectly chimerical. When Mr. Peel speaks of Asia he seems to be thinking only of China, which it appears that he knows very well. The chapters of his volume, which are not only highly interesting but really brilliant, are those which relate his controversy with one Ah Hok, whom we strongly suspect to be a creature of Mr. Peel's own imagination, and whom he adduces as the spokesman of Confucianism against Christianity. These are particularly well worth reading, and indeed the whole book is worth reading as a sober and well-informed discussion of the great questions of world politics with which it deals.

THAT SLEEPING SWORD.

Variants of the halting first couplet of McLandburgh Wilson's Roosevelt quatrain are still received in every mail from readers of THE NEW YORK TIMES BOOK REVIEW. Appended are a few selections from the best of those received this week:

A loaded "Simple Life" he keeps
To slay the Trusts by scores.
His sword within its scabbard sleeps,
But mercy! how it snores!

A chained up Dog of War he keeps
Within the White House doors.

His strenuous heart with rigor keeps
The peace his tongue implores.

State secrets openly he keeps,
For peace and warships roars.

Our President's a man of peace,
Yet fears not righteous wars.

Our President, while preaching peace,
Unreadiness deplores.

Our President's a man of peace,
Though urging martial stores.

Adown the vale of life he leaps,
For peace and children roars.

Widely his eager vision sweeps
Round yet unconquered shores.

Our President, though strenuous,
The Simple Life adores.

Many more have been received, but these must suffice to close the already too prolonged discussion of even so interesting a literary subject. We must cordially thank our readers, in conclusion, for the help they have given us in our effort to give the admirable patriotic sentiment expressed in Mr. Wilson's quatrain the widest publicity.

The Fame of Shakespeare.

London Globe.

The new fashion of saying "Pshaw" to Shakespeare seems to be spreading. A literary chronicler, from whom we expected better things, joins in denouncing that "quite irrational attitude of mind on the part of many people—largely people with no real taste for literature—the extravagant worship of Shakespeare." And the writer of these words brings forward once more, presumably as a person with no real taste for literature, Matthew Arnold, and his lines:

Others abide our question: Thou art free.
We ask and ask: Thou smilest and art still Out-topping knowledge.

If these moderators of Shakespeare-worship had a concrete proposition to make, as, for instance, that Shakespeare is inferior to Ben Jonson, one could understand their remarks. But inasmuch as even they would acknowledge (we hope) that Shakespeare is the ripest fruit of English genius, it seems hardly worth while to quarrel with the particular scale of adjectives on which we acclaim him greatest.

We are instructed that a "genuine study" of Shakespeare makes him "as familiar to us as Milton is familiar, or Scott." Well, a genuine student of Milton, if he be also a genuine student of Scott, which is not the height of probability, would assuredly not claim to have acquired the same kind and degree of familiarity with the one as with the other; similarly with Shakespeare, with whom, however, no "genuine student" has ever, to our knowledge, either claimed or felt familiarity. This is the day of small things, but let us not amuse ourselves with pitching pebbles at big ones.

FELICIA.

THE mischievous child has lately been revived in fiction with large pecuniary results, and, probably, to the edification of many English and American consumers of light literature. Mr. Edgar Jepson, who wrote "The Admirable Tinker," has now written another of the same sort called "The Lady Nogga," which, we have no doubt, will enjoy equal popularity. Nogga is a favored nickname of an eccentric little girl, who is a peeress in her own right—Felicia, Lady Grandison, or, as her friends generally call her, in defiance of the Peerage and etiquette, Lady Felicia Grandison, perhaps because she is little. Felicia is the niece and nearest relative of the British Prime Minister, a tired bachelor with a taste for German philosophy, and she dwells with him, pleasantly, in a manorial house somewhere north of London and not too far from Piccadilly. She is very pretty and has a reasonably good mind in a rudimentary state. She meddles in a love affair and brings about a marriage that promises to be reasonably happy. She plays practical jokes, such as making "booby traps" with pitchers of water placed totteringly over doorways, and "applepie beds," (whatever they are;) she climbs trees and tears her clothes, and she runs away to the woods when she is rebuked. She has the conventional British dislike of "sneaks," who, in her category, include everybody who complains of ill-treatment; she has an uncontrollable taste for investigation.

A poor child from the London slums is temporarily sheltered in a cottage near Felicia's home. From her Felicia learns things about the life of the London poor which strike the infant peeress as painfully interesting. She puts them before the King's Cabinet. Felicia is a rare child.

Felicia has already made a host of friends through serial publication. To many she is as well known as the more or less admirable Tinker himself, who, by the way, is a neighbor of hers, and is concerned in some of the exciting incidents in which she is also involved. The Tinker is a droll boy who seems, viewed superficially, to be as matter-of-fact in all his doings as one of Jacob Abbott's young heroes, but is found, on closer examination, to belong, with Felicia, to the realm of pure farce.

The story in which Felicia is the central figure is a typical contemporary English novel of the lighter sort. The author affects a familiarity on his own part and that of the reader with the ways of the aristocracy so intimate that explanations are quite needless; he views the gravity of statesmanship humorously and affects a sort of amiable and reticent cynicism which suggests the very best modern British breeding.

Of the charm of Felicia, safely confined within the pages of a book, there is no doubt whatever. We view her as affectionately and cheerfuly as our ancestors used to view Little Pickle and Nan the Good-for Nothing on the theatrical stage. But in real life Felicia would be intolerable. Her badness would not be interesting if one came in physical contact with it. She would surely ruffle the temper of a saint. As an everyday companion she would be as impossible as Molière's Mascarille, who, we fancy, would be about as agreeable a companion in the flesh as Dickens's Quilp.

Nevertheless, the object of these few remarks is to cordially commend Felicia, within her suitable literary bounds, as a pleasant holiday companion. Take her up for Summer reading, by all means. "The Lady Noggs, Peeress" is published by Messrs. McClure, Phillips & Co., and it is a book to bear in mind.

Medicine and Surgery.

Dr. T. Clifford Allbutt's address at the St. Louis Congress in 1904 on "The Historical Relations of Medicine and Surgery to the End of the Sixteenth Century" is being published by the Macmillan Company in book form. The "tract," as the author calls it, is a comparison of "certain eminent features" of the history of surgery and medicine. It is a study chiefly of the original works of the ancient medical and surgical writers. Dr. Allbutt has appended a bibliography on the subject, to which he is "indebted," which includes pamphlets, essays, and more extensive writings in German, French, Italian and English.

"A Mother of Czars."

The purpose of this book is to bring before its readers some account of Russian life at the close of the eighteenth and the beginning of the nineteenth centuries, and it portrays the home life at the Court of St. Petersburg under the wholesome rule and moral influence of a wise and virtuous woman. Marie Feodorowna has the distinction of having reigned and ruled during the lives of three successive sovereigns, thus earning the right to bear the proud title of "A Mother of Czars."

In this "sketch" of the life of the wife of Paul I. and mother of Alexander I. and Nicholas I. of Russia, Mrs. Colquhoun Grant has sought to dwell on the pleasing rather than on the dark side of Russian life. She obtained her material from various works, both Russian and French. The first part of the present volume and the account of the prolonged tour which the Grand Duke and Duchess took when they visited the principal Courts of Europe as the "Comte and Comtesse du Nord" have been translated from the "Life of the Baronne d'Oberkirch," edited by her grandson, the Comte de Montbrisson. The Baronne d'Oberkirch was Marie Feodorowna's devoted friend, who accompanied her on the tour and described it.

Before her marriage to Paul I. Marie Feodorowna was the Princess Dorothea of Wurtemberg. She reigned as Czarina for five years, her husband having been assassinated by conspirators, and her son, Alexander I., then ascending the throne. She died in November, 1828, in the seventieth year of her age. "A Mother of Czars" bears the imprint of E. P. Dutton & Co.

Norway in Its Natural Colors.

The new book by the authors of "Holland," dealing with Norway, (the pictures by Nico Jungman and text by Beatrix Jungman,) is being published by the Macmillan Company. Beatrix Jungman writes about travel in Norway, the fjords, the saints, arts and crafts, life of the peasants, forestry, reindeer, land tenures, fisheries, the Lapps, religion and morals, music, legends, and literature. The seventy-five illustrations are in the original colors, as painted from nature by Mr. [illegible] mountains, &c. There are also portraits of Björnson, Grieg, Nansen, and Ibsen. Speaking of the Norwegians in general, Mrs. Jungman says in her final chapter:

The points about them that impressed me most were their absolute honesty and the complete absence of servility. While any Norwegian is delighted to show politeness to the stranger, and even to take a good deal of trouble in helping him on his way, all these attentions arise from a supreme feeling of courtesy, and rarely from hope of reward. Any one wishing to have particular information as to a subject concerning the country will be met on all sides with practical offers of assistance. He will find books relating to his subject showered upon him, and kind offers to accompany him and show him practical illustrations. This generous spirit * * * has its source in love of the native land.

Dr. Griffis on "Bushido."

In his introduction to "Bushido: The Soul of Japan," by Dr. Nitobe, William Elliot Griffis, the well-known Oriental writer, speaks of Dr. Nitobe's work, what "Bushido" means to Japan, &c. He writes:

During three years at Rutgers College, New Brunswick, N. J., I was among scores of young men from Nippon. * * * I found that Bushido, about which we often talked, was a superbly winsome thing. As illustrated in the lives of these future Governors, diplomatists, Admirals, educators, and bankers, yea, even in the dying hours of more than one who "fell on sleep" in Willow Grove Cemetery, the perfume of this most fragrant flower of far-off Japan was very sweet. * * * At Fukin, in the province of Echizen, * * * I looked on Bushido, not as an exotic, but in its native soil. In daily life I realized that Bushido * * * formed the universal creed and praxis of all the gentry in the castled city and province. In it, as a living school of thought and life, girl and boy alike were trained. * * * Japanese feudalism "died without the sight" of its ablest exponent and most convincing defender. To him it is as wafted fragrance. To me it was "the plant and flower of light." Hence, living under and being in at the death of feudalism, the body of Bushido, I can bear witness to the essential truth of Dr. Nitobe's descriptions, so far as they go, and to the faithfulness of his analysis and generalizations.

Dr. Nitobe, the writer continues, shows himself "admirably" fitted to his task; he is "a true interpreter and reconciler," and he says much in praise of the author as a scholar and practical man. G. P. Putnam's Sons announce the book for publication in two weeks.

The St. Lawrence River.

Two volumes dealing with the St. Lawrence River will appear late this month. They are "The St. Lawrence River, Historical, Legendary, Picturesque," by George Waldo Browne, to bear the imprint of G. P. Putnam's Sons, and "The St. Lawrence: Its Basin and Its Border Lands," by S. E. Dawson, Litt. D., which the Frederick A. Stokes Company will publish.

The Putnams' book will be included in the series of Rivers of North America. The work is presented in narrative form and includes the most important historic incidents connected with the river, descriptions of interesting scenery, and legends. The 100 illustrations are from photographs of places along the St. Lawrence from the Great Lakes to the Gulf. The author has already published volumes on "Japan—The Place and the People," "Paradise of the Pacific," &c. Other books in the series are on "The Colorado River," by F. S. Dellenbaugh, and "The Hudson River," by Edgar Mayhew Bacon.

The volume by Dr. Dawson, author of "The Voyage of the Cabots" and other books on Canadian geography and history, is a study of the exploration and settlement of the valley of the St. Lawrence River, including the coast Provinces of Canada and those parts drained by the river system. The illustrations will be numerous and will show various points of interest along the river and its shores. There will also be several maps, including reproductions of the Harleyan and Descalier maps, which, the author asserts, were drawn from the originals of Cartier's.

New Edition of 'The Art of Whistler.'

A third and cheaper edition of an "appreciation" of "The Art of James McNeil Whistler," by T. R. Way and G. R. Dennis is appearing. It is a reprint of the second edition of the book, in which a few corrections were made. The volume is the outcome of many years' study of Whistler's art. The authors attempt to explain Whistler's artistic aims and principles and to point out in simple language the characteristics of his works. Whistler's art only is dealt with. The short biographical chapter contains only dates of the more important events in the painter's artistic career. The fifty-odd illustrations are reproductions of some of Whistler's paintings. The Macmillan Company publishes the book.

An Indian Writer in English.

Sarath Kumar Ghosh, whose novel of Indian life, "The Verdict of the Gods," bears the imprint of Dodd, Mead & Co., is a high-caste Indian of ancient lineage, having eight centuries of unbroken descent from the princely Rahtor dynasty of Kanauj. He is just now the only popular Indian writer in England, having gone to that country at the age of sixteen to complete his education. He progressed rapidly and was called to the bar. Lord Russell, the late Chief Justice, urged him to practice law in England, but he turned to fiction writing, paying particular attention to the romances, mysteries, legends, and traditions of the East.

Fishes.

Dr. David Starr Jordan, in his "Guide to the Study of Fishes," which is out this economic value of fishes from the various points of view of the different branches of the study of ichthyology. Extinct species are also described. And there are a large number of illustrations in the two volumes, each of which has a colored frontispiece showing some of the remarkable fish brought by Dr. Jordan from his Pacific explorations.

The author points out in his preface that he has written for the technical student as well as for the nature lover and angler. In general he has drawn on his own experience as the leading American ichthyologist as well as the literature of the science. He has not compiled a bibliography on account of the great number of books on the subject, but throughout the text he has indicated the authorities from which he has drawn some of his material, while in the chapter on the "History of Ichthyology" he discusses the principal works and their authors, whose portraits are given.

American Horticulture.

Doubleday, Page & Co. announce an arrangement with the Macmillan Company by which they will offer on an "easy payment" basis a new and revised edition of the Cyclopedia of American Horticulture, in six large volumes, edited by Prof. Liberty H. Bailey of Cornell University, assisted by Wilhelm Miller, who has been connected with Country Life in America since its start. It will be remembered that Doubleday, Page & Co. are also the publishers of a number of other nature books. They include the Nature Library, a series of cheap, practical books, in which will shortly appear "Our Native Orchids," by the late William H. Gibson and Mrs. Smith Ely Jelliffe; "The Garden Library," which has just been inaugurated with "Roses and How to Grow Them"; the Country Life in America Library, the first volume of which will be "The Country House," by E. C. Holtzoper; the Farm Library, for the amateur, which will have for its first volume "The Soil," to appear in 1906; books on poultry, dogs, driving, &c., and the magazines Country Life in America and The Garden Magazine.

A New Critic Serial.

The Critic will begin the publication serially in the June number of a short novel by Miss Jean Chamblin entitled "Lady Bobs, Her Brother, and I." The book is the result of a trip by the author to the Azores in search of rest and diversion. She has just returned from Spain, where she went to find local color for a new book. Miss Chamblin is a new writer, but she is known as a character actress, having had several seasons of dramatic experience. She is a Nevada girl by birth and was educated in San Francisco. Her father's people were French, her maternal grandfather a Virginian, who was in the first party of missionaries to the Land of Gold. After leaving school Miss Chamblin studied kindergarten work with Mrs. Kate Douglas Wiggin, and for some years was connected with the Silver Street Kindergarten of San Francisco.

The Masai.

Henry Frowde is publishing at the Clarendon Press a volume by A. C. Hollis on "The Masai, Their Language and Folklore," which has an introduction by Sir Charles Eliot. The book deals with Masai grammar, stories, proverbs and sayings, enigmas, myths and traditions, customs, and divisions of the Masai people. There are twenty-seven illustrations and a map.

The Masai are located in the large plains extending from about a degree north of the equator to six degrees south of it, situated both in British and German East Africa. The race is a mixture between the Nilotic negro and the Hamite. In writing the present volume the author has endeavored to place on record some of the "thoughts and ideas" of the Masai.

Some Late Pott Books.

James Pott & Co. have received for late Summer and Autumn issue manuscripts of the following books: "The Reign of Gilt," by David Graham Phillips; "The Essentials of Spirituality," by Dr. Felix Adler; a new humorous book by Charles Battell Loomis; "The Van Twillers," by Lillie Hamilton French; "The Woman of To-morrow," by Helen M. Winslow; "To-day on the Nile," by H. W. Dunning; "The Ruined Abbeys of Great Britain," by Ralph Adams Cram; a book on Italy by Miss Zimmern, and volumes on "The Cathedrals of England and Wales," "Makers of Modern History," "Aspects of Balzac," "Women of Wit and Beauty," "Seven Angels of the Renascence," and "Pageant of London."

FROM READERS.

New York Times Book Review:

COSMOPOLITAN'S letter in THE BOOK REVIEW of May 13 contains some statements anent the Danish critic Georg Brandes which should not go uncensured. In the first place, what is the meaning of the statement that Prof. Brandes's "real" name is "Maurice Cohen"? The full name of the critic is George Morits Cohen Brandes. Old Mr. Brandes, his father, was a well-known broker in Copenhagen, Denmark. If the writer means darkly to hint that racially Brandes is not a Dane, but a Jew, this insinuation is singularly pointless. Is Germany ready to erase the name of Heinrich Heine from the list of its greatest poets because he, too, might claim racial kinship with David, Solomon, the prophets, and the founder of the Christian religion? Ought similar considerations to prompt Russia to disown Antokolski, France George Eliot and Sarah Bernhardt, England Disraeli, the Palgraves, and Cardinal Newman, who was of mixed Jewish and French origin, with no Anglo-Saxon blood in his veins?

As for Denmark, it could ill spare the Jewish-born Henrik Hertz, one of its ablest playwrights; Meir Aaron Goldschmidt, its wittiest journalist and the father of its artistic prose, and, above all, Georg Brandes, the founder of its modern literature. And it is not only Denmark that is under obligation to him. The great Norwegians, Henrik Ibsen and Björnson, would not have been precisely what they are but for Brandes; in Sweden such men as Heidenstam and Strindberg have acknowledged his influence; in Germany Paul Heyse, Arthur Pfiger, and many others have borne witness to his inspiring power.

"Cosmopolitan" declares that Brandes vilifies all writers who manifest respect for "the teachings of the Scriptures, Old or New Testament," while his praise is reserved for "shocking literature" only! Among the authors particularly praised by Brandes I recall Hans Christian Andersen, Wordsworth, Mickiewicz, Joseph de Maistre, Esaias Tegnér, Novalis, Soeren Kierkegaard, and a host of others who, as far as I have been able to perceive, showed at least a fair regard for the teachings of the Bible. The poet whom Brandes of all has treated most elaborately and with the profoundest admiration happens to be Shakespeare. He must, then, according to "Cosmopolitan," be a particularly "shocking" writer.

But "Cosmopolitan" gives "proof" of his accusations by quoting some words of Brandes to the effect that "vigorous and virile" authors have invariably been charged with immorality by "literary impotence." Brandes's statement may be somewhat too sweeping; it is quite possible, for instance, that neither Homer nor Sophocles was ever thus assailed. But I fail to see how the quotation might be so construed as to defend immoral writing. For, of course, Brandes means that the charge has been an unjust one. That it has almost invariably been made in modern times against literary innovators is a matter of common knowledge to all students of literature. Racine and Molière endured the taunt, as did Goethe, Shelley, and Charlotte Brontë. In Wetzer and Welte's great "Kirchenlexikon" the famous Danish authors Holberg, Oehlenschlaeger, and Hans Andersen are severely scored for their "lack of moral principle."

"Cosmopolitan" waxes eloquent over the "virile" American literature. Yes, we have had some virile writers in this country, one of whom, Walt Whitman, was frequently accused of immorality. "Cosmopolitan" may object that Whitman's position in American literature is not yet wholly undisputed. But he will not be able to demur to my statement that never has this country produced a greater novelist nor a nobler man than Nathaniel Hawthorne. And if he will kindly look the matter up in G. P. Lathrop's life of his father-in-law he will learn that "The Scarlet Letter" was received at its publication with the charge of immorality—"French" immorality at that!

Only one more word: "Cosmopolitan" informs us that Max Nordau is "another of the prophets of misguided European youth." This is news to me. But, if it be true, surely the misguided youngsters who fancy that pretentious pseudo-scientist a prophet could not be identical with those who look up to Brandes as their leader. For throughout Nordau's most sensational—and for a while quite popular—book, "Degeneracy," his tendency is to decry anything that Brandes praises, and vice versa. Nor does he omit to speak of Brandes himself in almost the very terms of "Cosmopolitan."

I feel sorry for the man, young or old, who allows himself to be guided by a Nordau, and no less do I pity him who never has felt his love of liberty, his moral courage, all his manly qualities, in fact, stirred and strengthened by some passage or other in the works of Georg Brandes.

"Hecla Sandwith."

New York Times Book Review:

"Hecla Sandwith," by Edward U. Valentine, was happily termed "sombre" by a late reviewer. It is difficult to realize the gloom, mental and spiritual, of the fifties, as compared with the present day, when we have pretty well got rid of all foreboding whatsoever. The book is full of grim descriptions. Of old, unhappy, far-off things, the veil of Oblivion, as a blessing of Fate may be meditated as follows. Nothing affects nation or individual more than becoming aware that what has long been held right is wrong; and the grist and growing question of slavery had no doubt much to do with the gloom which overspread the time and community so powerfully delineated by Mr. Valentine.

"The Pioneer."

New York Times Book Review:

Let me preface these few sentences with the apologetic statement that I am not a great novel reader. It is probably ignorance of the taste of the modern reader and writer of fiction which induces the state of disapproving surprise in which I find myself.

A short time ago a friend of mine recommended to my notice a Western novel entitled "The Pioneer." Her reason for recommendation was that the heroine was "very attractive, and so well done." On reading the book I found that the "attractive" heroine from my point of view merited the description Hector gives of Cressida when she is brought into the Trojan camp. That the character is drawn with great skill and understanding no one can deny. From the first to the last this young woman—her name is Jane Allen, and she is twenty when you meet her, twenty-five when you say good-bye—is consistent and true to her type. She is less like a novelist's creation than a living being that the novelist has known and watched and been making stealthy mental notes about.

Where my disappointed surprise comes in is in the matter of her lack of character in the first place, and in her elevation to the part of heroine in the second. Her author has painted the portrait with provocative reserve and subtlety; but we can't believe that Miss Bonner does not want us to understand that Jane Allen was bad. Bereft of ornamental graces and a seemly reticence, this is simply a study of a woman who is naturally immoral, or perhaps it is better to say unmoral. She is unconscious (because of her youth, good bringing up, and ignorance) of her immorality, and would be the first person to be amazed at such an accusation. But from the beginning to the end her mental processes and actions are those of a woman who, if fate is kind, may stay on the straight and narrow path, but who at the first push in the other direction, takes the downward turn.

I do not cavil at Jane Allen as a character study. If an author is interested in such variations of the eternal feminine, I cannot say my taste does not run along the same lines as his. What I do cavil at is that such a woman should be boldly put forth as the heroine of a story, and that the reader should be asked to pity and love her. Miss Bonner has deliberately attempted to invest this woman with the most winning attraction, and the fatal point in her attempt is that she has succeeded. Jane Allen is undeniably charming. It is not that you are told so, and then her charmingness is left to the imagination—you feel it, and fall under its spell. In the early portion of the book you innocently yield yourself to it, and think how sweet she was, and how abused by fate. Then, as her character is revealed in all its exasperating feebleness and moral obliquity, you experience an outraged sense of having been decoyed to the verge of a passion for the kind of woman that a sensible man fears as Ulysses feared the sirens.

It may be clever to be able to create a figure of engaging vitality, but having created it, it is a pity that it is not a more improving acquaintance for the reader. Out of the depths of my ignorance let me ask—if the lady should not have some of that divinity which doth hedge a heroine—should not the woman who is the pivot of interest through some 400 pages be something more than a fascinating young thing without a shred of moral principle? And, above all, should we—having it plainly shown to us that Jane is far from what she ought to be—still be asked to bow to a charm to which our conscience tells us we should be proof and to which we are sulky and protesting victims?

"Constance Trescott."

New York Times Book Review:

I should like to know what is the general opinion of Dr. Weir Mitchell's late novel, "Constance Trescott." I feel curious to know whether my idea of the book coincides with that of others. I have long admired Dr. Mitchell's work, and consider his "Hugh Wynne" a classic. But "Constance Trescott" appears to me so very poor, so wooden in construction, so guiltless of even one natural, lifelike character, except possibly Susan, that it scarcely seems to be truly a product of the same pen that wrote "Hugh Wynne."

It gave me the same uncomfortable feeling that Walter Besant's works used—by containing so much that was good and clever, one wondered why they were not better.

The Bishop's Niece.

New York Times Book Review:

It seems to me that the author of "The Bishop's Niece" has missed a golden opportunity. His little novel is certainly the most exasperating story that I have ever read. When one has finished reading it he cannot help feeling that he has been dealt with unjustly, that he has been defrauded of something he had every reason to expect. If it were not for the story's charm and originality, an elusive fascination that lures one on to the last word, it would not matter so much, but it is hardly fair to promise so speciously and pay so grudgingly.

Moreover, it seems to me that the reader of this very unusual story that the effect produced upon him is precisely the effect that is intended—that is its first purpose; to the clever manner which the author has devised for his entanglement. If such is not the explanation of the illogical ending of the book, there is only one other tenable—that Mr. Picard's courage failed him at the last moment and he adopted the expedient of throwing the responsibility on the reader.

Perhaps this hypothesis is not wide of the mark. If it be true, Mr. Picard is entitled to a certain consideration. The late Mr. Stockton employed this method of evading the responsibility in his "The Lady or the Tiger?" and others have done likewise and been forgiven. But the particular thing for which one does not feel like forgiving Mr. Picard is his neglect—it has every appearance of design on his part—to tell us frankly whether it was the Rev. Stephen Rosse who abandoned his Methodism or Sarah Macleod who abjured her Catholicism. As it stands, one must be either a Methodist or a Roman Catholic to answer the question. If one be a Methodist, it is plain enough that Stephen remained theologically unimpaired, and if one be a Catholic it is equally certain that Sarah did not yield. And that, I am convinced, is the very obscuration that was intended.

Capt. Battine's History.

New York Times Book Review:

The time for writing a strictly impartial history of our civil war has probably not yet arrived. Yet it is doubtful if we will ever obtain more accurate accounts of the various military movements involved in that stupendous conflict than those written by foreign military attachés of the several armies, and the foreign writers who from the voluminous material at hand have written critical histories of those movements in later years.

I regard the recent volume by Capt. Cecil Battine, a British cavalry officer, entitled "The Crisis of the Confederacy," as one of the most valuable contributions to military history that has yet appeared.

Your correspondent George F. Shrady, Jr., in THE NEW YORK TIMES BOOK REVIEW of May 6, appears to think differently. He attacks Capt. Battine's book as a merely "literary venture" of little or no value to the military student, "owing to some of the glaringly erroneous statements which it contains."

The gravamen of Mr. Shrady's criticism lies, first, in the alleged statement that Capt. Battine invariably claims that the Confederate forces were inferior in numbers to the Federals. The very facts which he gives to refute this statement, viz., extracts from Gen. Grant's Memoirs, prove the truth of Capt. Battine's claim. It has never been seriously disputed, and all the statistical information relating to the numerical strength of the two combatants proves beyond any question, that the Confederates were greatly inferior. It is true that in many battles the numbers actually engaged were nearly equal. This often resulted from the superior tactical ability of Confederate commanders and the corresponding failure of Federal commanders to bring their full strength into action on the their preponderating forces simultaneously, at critical points or at the proper moment.

The second charge is that Capt. Battine is the first military critic who has described the battle of Shiloh as a defeat of the Federal Army. The answer to that is—he does nothing of the kind. The word "defeated" is interpolated by Mr. Shrady in his quotation from Capt. Battine's book. The Captain does not attempt to describe the battle of Shiloh at all. It has no part in the "Crisis of the Confederacy" of which he treats. He mentions it merely in speaking of Gen. Grant's transfer from the Western field to the East, and says:

In truth Grant's career in the West must be considered one of the most fortunate in history. From the start he commanded troops superior in number, resources, and morale to the adversary, and except at Shiloh he was opposed to Generals of moderate capacity.

This is literally true. It is also obviously true to any careful reader of Capt. Battine's book that in referring to Generals of moderate capacity he referred solely to those who had opposed Grant in the West. Concerning the battle of Shiloh Capt. Battine says further:

Easy success had made him [Gen. Grant] careless, for at Shiloh April 6 he was surprised by the combined forces of Sidney Johnston and Beauregard and his army was almost routed. The fall of Johnston and the indisciplins of the raw Confederate forces, among whose ranks the victorious onslaught had spread disorder, saved the Federals from disaster.

This also is doubtless true, and is quite different from stating that Grant was defeated.

An army saved from disaster by whatever means is not defeated.

It will always remain a disputed conjecture what might have happened at Shiloh had Johnston not fallen or had Bragg's assault upon the left of Grant's army at the close of the battle on Sunday been supported by an advance of the entire Confederate forces; just as it will ever be a disputed question whether Lee's army might not have been annihilated by a counter-charge by Meade, after the repulse of Pickett at Gettysburg.

Such possibilities of warfare are frequently discussed by Capt. Battine, but he is remarkably careful not to magnify the failures or successes of either army during the "crisis" of which he writes. I am quite sure that his book must be regarded by real military critics and espe-

A NEW NOVEL

By the Author of "Cap'n Eri"

PARTNERS of the TIDE

By JOSEPH C. LINCOLN

Mr. Lincoln has usurped the New England field. It has had many expounders from the early romances to the later day thumb-nail sketches. In "Cap'n Eri" and "Partners of the Tide" we have New England's first great realistic fiction.

Why do these New England characters stand out so strong? Cap'n Eri, Cap'n Ez Titcomb, and the old maids, and Brad, the old maid's boy?

The people in these books are rugged, lovable, incorruptible.

They make quaint figures, it is true, among the Summer people who now swarm the Coast, converting he birthplace of the Nation into a Vanity Fair reaching from Maine to Connecticut.

These two great novels of Mr. Lincoln fix for all time, just as it is passing, the picture of that genuine and rugged life.

The Grave of Toma-chi-chi.

New York Times Book Review:

Permit me to make an inquiry as to the meaning of something which appeared in your "Boston Notes" on May 13. The note states that "The Daughters of the American Revolution have recently placed a monument above the grave of Toma-chi-chi, the Indian friend of Oglethorpe, buried in the city, that his grave might for all time defend it against his people."

"Buried in the city?" What city? One might infer from the fact that your notes come from Boston that the old chief was buried in that city. The truth is he was buried in the City of Savannah, Ga., and a large irregular rock weighing several tons stands as his memorial in the little square on Bull Street in front of the Chatham County Court House. A suitable inscription on this rock tells the stranger who Toma-chi-chi was and gives the dates of his birth and death. During the past Winter a fine stone coping has been placed around this memorial, and it may be that this coping is the "monument" referred to.

"Two Practical Heroines."

New York Times Book Review:

Your correspondent E. A. Bender in the issue of April 29 wrote in a commendatory vein of "Two Practical Heroines." So far as the merit of the story and the beauty of the author's diction are concerned I coincide with his opinion, but I cannot bring myself to feel that the character of Viola is a natural product of any clime. Her virtue is abnormal. Her view of the proper course is not that of the young woman just arrived at the age of romantic impulse.

Duty preconceived becomes a soluble quantity under the ardent, forceful pressure of a nature attuned to love. This remarkable character is far beyond my conception of the "real" young woman.

I wish to enter a woman's protest. This picture of Viola, representing her as superior to every inclination and prompting of her nature as originally implanted, must surely have had its origin in the author's imagination.

Louis Tracy and Gordon Holmes.

New York Times Book Review:

Recently I imported a book by Louis Tracy with the title "The Strange Disappearance of Lady Delia," London, 1901, Pearson, publisher. I also purchased a book by Gordon Holmes called "A Mysterious Disappearance." (New York, 1905, copyright, E. J. Clode.) The latter story is now running serially in a daily newspaper. On comparing the two, I found that the chapter headings were identical, and they were the same, paragraph for paragraph, except a change in the proper names, and occasionally in phraseology. Are Louis Tracy and Gordon Holmes the same?

The Late Lady Dilke.

A posthumous volume by the late Lady Dilke is in preparation by E. P. Dutton & Co. It is "The Book of the Spiritual Life," and contains also two short stories, "The Mirror of the Soul" and "The Last Hour." The Right Hon. Sir Charles Dilke, Bart., M. P., has edited the book and written a memoir of the author, who will be recalled through her contributions to The Pall Mall Gazette, The North American Review, The Art Journal, Atlantic Monthly, and other periodicals; her books, "Art in the Modern State," "The Shrine of Love," "The Shrine of Death," and French art in the eighteenth century, and her work among the working classes. The writer, in speaking of the appreciative letters Lady Dilke received upon the completion of her work on eighteenth century French art, says:

Although her genius widely differed from that of Renan, both in its character and in its expression, she resembled him in two particulars. Lady Dilke had a power of work which, even in a strong man, would merit the epithet of Benedictine, applied to it by me; while in her social hours she gave the impression of having no other preoccupation than that of enjoying the pleasant side of life and of communicating to others her light-heartedness.

Throughout the memoir are opinions of friends concerning the personality of Lady Dilke. It is illustrated with portraits and other pictures.

BOSTON NOTES.

Theodore Roberts's "Brothers of Peril"—New Poetry by Bliss Carman—Some Autumn Announcements.

An Indian boy, brave, astute, and modest, such a pearl as the early European settlers found here and there on the eastern coast of North America, divides the interest of Mr. Theodore Roberts's "Brothers of Peril" with the real hero, the young adventurer whom various chances set on the Island of Newfoundland just as the Beothic tribe, having grown large enough to develop more than one able chief, is breaking into factions. The boy, a chief's son, begs to be taken to see the white man's country, and, being accepted as a comrade, serves his friend nobly. The author in no way imitates Mr. C. G. D. Roberts, but he is developing a love of natural beauty that may lead him in the direction of "The Heart of the Ancient Wood."

Mr. Bliss Carman, self-exiled from New York, and secluded from the Californians who would like to show that they can admire some one besides the late Mr. Bret Harte, is staying on the Pacific Coast, and working at his new volume of poetry, "From the Book of the Valentines," the fifth in the "Pipes of Pan" series. The third volume of his prose essays, "The Poetry of Life," is also undergoing revision, and both will appear in the Autumn.

All three books will be published by Messrs. L. C. Page & Co., who will also issue an American edition of the little book privately put forth in 1903, by Mr. Richard Le Gallienne, under the title "Odes from the Divan of Hafiz." Those to whom copies were sent praised the work enthusiastically, and Mr. Wilfred Scawen Blunt described it as "the quintessence of lyric poetry."

Among the Autumn editions of classics in gift-book form will be the "Memoirs of Benvenuto Cellini," from Roscoe's translation, revised by Luigi Ricci, and illustrated by four photogravures; a portrait of Cellini, the portrait bust of Cosmo I., the celebrated salt cellar executed for Francis I., and the Perseus. Two English novelists will swell the list of Autumn reprints, Mr. E. F. Benson with "Valkyries," and the Rev. S. Baring Gould with "Siegfried." The former book has illustrations by Mr. T. Noyes Lewis, and Mr. Charles Robinson has made the pictures for the latter.

The C. M. Clark Company is to publish a novel by Mr. Matt. Stan. Kemp, the author of "Boss Tom," the novel of the anthracite strike produced by the Saalfield Company. The title has not yet been chosen from the many presenting themselves as suitable to a book of somewhat complex interest.

Miss Ethel D. Puffer's "The Psychology of Beauty," published by Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., consists of eight papers, of which "Criticism and Aesthetics," "The Aesthetic Repose" and "The Beauty of Ideas" have appeared in the Atlantic Monthly and the International Monthly. The others are "The Nature of Beauty," "The Beauty of Fine Art," "The Beauty of Music," "The Beauty of Literature," and "The Nature of the Emotions of the Drama." The mere titles indicate that the author has taken a very wide field; in truth, she has brought together the results of recent experiments with aesthetic elements, the various university and personal investigations into the physiological psychology of aesthetic reactions, the great body of curious studies of the genesis and development of art forms, has added some experiments of her own, and has endeavored to make a synthesis of these tendencies in the study of beauty to the end of making that a philosophical, intelligible theory of beauty.

Messrs. H. M. Caldwell & Co. are preparing a great number of reprints for the holiday trade as is their custom, but they are also making ready a variety of other books, among which are "The Value of Courage," edited by Mr. Frederic Lawrence Knowles, who has given the book a scholarly introduction, and "The Value of Simplicity," edited by Miss M. A. Barrows, provided with an introduction by Mrs. Julia Ward Howe.

The series of "Animal Autobiographies" will be continued—"Yoppy," by Mrs. Mollie Lee Clifford; "Nettie," by Miss Gertrude Saleo, and "Pup," by Miss Olive Byrd Beaglen. Pup is a greyhound, Yoppy a monkey, and Nettie a donkey.

The additions to the Standard Library will be "John Halifax, Gentleman," by Miss Mulock; "Lorna Doone," by R. D. Blackmore; "Ivanhoe," by Sir Walter Scott, and "Kenilworth," by Sir Walter Scott.

Mr. John R. Carling's "The Weird Picture," which appears this week, is a tale of murders and ghosts and other fearful wild fowl, and of underground passages. This last feature, although not exactly new in English stories, may be recorded as fortunate, inasmuch as the English papers abound in gossip about Dane's Holes, in Essex, and some other places, and readers will accept almost anything subterranean as possible.

The postponed publication of "The Breath of the Gods," by the author of "Truth Dexter," is to take place to-morrow, and, inasmuch as the American Minister to Japan in 1904 and certain French diplomatists were last week mentioned as characters, it is necessary to say that a prefatory note from the author declares that all the incidents are purely imaginary. The remarks made by peasants and servants are the only part of the story borrowed from life. The book is dedicated, "because of faith and reverence," to Yamato Damashii.

Following these two will come the last novel in Messrs. Little, Brown & Co.'s Spring list, Mr. E. Phillips Oppenheim's "The Master Mummer." This book adds one more to the imaginary realms now arranged in layers over the entire extent of Central and Southern Europe. The Princess of Bartena is the heroine, the "Master Mummer" the hero of the tale. In future this house will be Mr. Oppenheim's sole publisher, and will probably issue two of his novels annually, that being his yearly product, almost perforce, for when the English novel reader is once accustomed to receiving two books a year from an author, he regularly demands two from the circulating libraries, and almost compels their production.

GISSING IN ITALY.

BY THE IONIAN SEA. Notes of a Ramble in Southern Italy. By George Gissing. Illustrated. 12mo. Pp. 225. New York: Imported by Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.75.

It is not often that a traveler makes so charming a volume of such slight material as the late George Gissing has made of this. The novelist, now so untimely dead, wandered for several weeks among those sleepy—often fever-haunted—towns of Southern Italy which were once the cities of Magna Graecia—that Greater Greece which appealed so strongly to Mr. Gissing and for whose sake he undertook the wanderings.

He journeyed by steamboat from Naples to a little coast town called Paola, thence he drove over the Calabrian Mountains to Cosenza, where, according to the story, is the grave of Alaric, hidden somewhere beneath the waters of the Busento. From Cosenza, where the inn (of the Two Lions) was very bad—Gissing is quite English in his attention to inns—he traveled by rail to Taranto, called of the Greeks Tarentum, lunching upon the journey at a way station called Sybaris, after the Greek city of evil and luxurious memory. Of the famous ancient city "no stone remains above ground," and until recently the modern stopping place even was called Buffaloria. At Taranto, where the inn was good, the city furnished the traveler with much to hang his pleasant talk upon—mingled talk of observation and historic reminiscence. At Cotrone—of old Croton a vast walled city of twelve-mile circuit, now a mean village in a parched and malignant climate—Mr. Gissing fell sick of the fever of the country in one of the worst inns in the world. There he lay miserably many days, and had strange visions of his beloved dead and gone antiquity. He writes, too, of the doctor of Cotrone, an excellent and polite man; of the landlady of the worst of inns, of the fat cook who sometimes waited upon him, of the boy who brought him papers, of the noise of perpetual conversation outside.

Crawling out at last, he went for his health's sake to Catanzaro, a city set on a hill and much visited of earthquakes; a city, too, which, unlike all the others, was never Greek. However, the climate and the people were delightful. At Catanzaro it was that hospitality reached heights unattained of in duller lands. For it is related that a gentleman of the place, dining at the favorite café of the city and seeing a stranger also dining, rose and approached the stranger with a deep bow, begging that he might have the honor of paying the stranger's bill. He could not bear, the gentleman of Catanzaro, that a guest within the gates of the city should be at any expense.

Gissing's story passes to Squillace, which is also set on a hill, but is of peculiar unspeakable, and has no sense of hospitality; Stilo, romantically above Stilo, Gerace, the monastery of Santa Maria del Bosco, Reggio, Gerace Superiore, Locri, which is now entirely by the sea, Gerace, and finally Reggio, the last stopping place of the

The Ultimate Passion

A young man of high ideals playing into the hands of a powerful corrupt political ring in order to gain power through their influence and ultimately to defeat them—this is a hint of the plot of this strong, virile novel by Philip Verrill Mighels. It is a work of unusual power, an absorbing story, showing the machinations of political schemers and others prominent in social and business life in New York. The startling incidents that the political situation brings forth are closely woven in with a charming love-tale. Mr. Mighels will be remembered as the author of Bruvver Jim's Baby.

The Tyranny of the Dark

Hamlin Garland's latest novel goes into a new and fascinating field—that of the occult. Strange things happen as the story develops along startling lines. The heroine is a delightful Western girl, such as Hamlin Garland portrays so well, and under this baffling "tyranny of the dark" her romance becomes a moving tale of strange beauty. The book is a striking departure from modern fiction, —one that everybody will be talking about and reading for its remarkable novelty.

The Accomplice

Frederick Trevor Hill, the author of The Web and other stirring fiction, has produced in this volume a novel of mystery along lines wholly new in fiction. The story is told from a novel point of view—the hero being the foreman of the jury at a hotly-contested murder trial. The story goes in and out of the courtroom through a maze of mystery and sensational developments. It is a new way of telling a tale of love and presents a new method of solving a great mystery.

Fond Adventures

There is more than a book-ful in this wonderful new volume of sensuous impressions by Maurice Hewlett. Here are four glowing love tales out of the heart of the Middle Ages, each alone long enough for a little book. Since the publication of The Forest Lovers Mr. Hewlett has written nothing so palpitating with the full and splendid life of that virile day.

New Poetry

Verses by Clinton Scollard, Wallace Rice, and Owen Seaman.*

THE "minor poems" that find their way to the light at this season of the year are naturally numerous and are most of them inspired by the kind of interest in nature that is allied either to science or to sentimentality. We do not often hear a deep, resonant note of true nature worship, such a note as Meredith strikes in his least utterance concerning the wise and lovely Earth of his imaginative vision. It is a pleasure to find in Mr. Scollard's latest volume this serious tribute to the inspiration of the eternal world in its larger, and at present unfashionable, aspect. The stanza is taken from the poem entitled "The March of the Ideal":

Whichever be the plan
Nature through mankind, or through Nature man,
'Tis Nature is the great idealist,
Fashioning from out the sombre morning mist
Mountains of rose and hills of amethyst;
Molding with incomparable toil
From out the base essentials of the soil
The immaculate lily-tower,
All grace and sweetness centred in a flower;
Prisoning within one small wood-warbler's throat
Ecstatic note upon ecstatic note.
'Tis those close cleaving unto Nature,
then,
Who are the master spirits among men,
Idealists,
Holding their noontide and nocturnal
trysts
With what is lofty, elemental, pure—
The essences divine that shall endure.

An interesting anthology called "The Athlete's Garland" expresses a vigorous love of the open air and out of door games and pastimes, which is far from being a negligible element in the nature worship of the present day, and which has at least the advantage of immense sincerity. In lusty physical exercise the hypocrite has little chance, which no doubt accounts for much of the unformulated enthusiasm for athletics existing in most minds of an essentially honest tendency.

Remembering Emerson's moderate delight in any form of exercise more exacting than a neighborhood stroll, it is amusing to find a passage from his "May Day" entitled "The Seed of Athleticism." Wordsworth and Stevenson are also pressed into service with perhaps inadequate justification from the athletic point of view. In the main, however, the poets who have sung of cricket and basket ball and tennis and curling and skating and running have been thoroughly inspired with the spirit of their sport, so much so, indeed, that it is quite comforting to come occasionally upon some stanzas that combine the literary with the athletic flavor, as in these by Wallace Rice, (the compiler,) called "In Elizabeth's Day."

Who would not give the treasure
Of very many lives
If some kind fate would pleasure
To let him be where Ben is
A-playing Kit at tennis,
Or playing Will at fives?

The racquet ne'er so deftly
Is turned, whoever strives,
The ball flies ne'er so swiftly
As thought and tongue where Ben is
A-playing Kit at tennis,
Or playing Will at fives.

When the literary touch fails and the desire to shout in numbers becomes uncontrollable, there is always the resource of parody. The best parodies of the best poets at their best moments are not lightly to be spoken of, but there are almost as many grades of parodists as of poets. Wordsworth's mood of solemn simplicity offers a tempting target, and Mr. Owen Seaman shoots close to the bull's eye in his modernized "Lucy Gray," the first four stanzas of which will quite suffice to give the quality:

Well I remember Lucy Gray
In skirt of two-some cut,
For on the links one Medal day
I boshed her winning put.

And often through an oversight,
When she was still alive,
My head delayed her pellet's flight
And spoilt a spanking drive.

Hard by a sporting course she kept,
All sandy from the sea;
No keener artist ever stepped
Upon a human tee.

You still may hear strong men at play.
Blaspheming on the green,
But I regret that Lucy Gray
Will never more be seen.

This is not, perhaps, a kind of poetry that will appeal to the romantic imagination. It has at best the character ascribed by Scott to his own versification—"a hurried frankness of composition which pleases soldiers, sailors, and young people of bold and active disposition," but at its worst the present generation is bound to like it better than the sentimentality and unreality of the earliest verse of—say, Tennyson, since it breathes of their own vigorous modernity.

Gen. Oates's Civil War.

THE WAR BETWEEN THE UNION AND THE CONFEDERACY, AND ITS LOST OPPORTUNITIES. With a History of the Fifteenth Alabama Regiment and the Forty-eight Battles in which it was engaged. Being an Account of the Author's Experiences in the Greatest Conflict of Modern Times; a Justification of Secession and Showing that the Confederacy Should Have Succeeded, &c., and Including the Author's Observations and Experiences as Brigadier General in the War Between the United States and Spain. By William C. Oates, Colonel in the Confederate Army, &c. Illustrated by portraits. 8vo. Pp. 808. New York and Washington: The Neale Publishing Company. $3.

There is in this thick volume, in which Gen. Oates has recorded his opinions and recollections of the war between the States, much matter which the future historian will be glad of; yet, as the General himself speaks frankly as a partisan, (and sometimes unguardedly,) his work cannot in itself be counted history, save in the minor theme—the career of the Fifteenth Alabama Regiment, in which the author served, and of which he rose to be commander. That regiment was concerned in some half a hundred battles, and Oates was with it till he was wounded before Chattanooga. It served with Jackson's corps in the Shenandoah Valley, in the seven days' battle around Richmond, in the Maryland campaign, at Fredericksburg, and was a part of Longstreet's corps at Gettysburg, at Chickamauga, and at Chattanooga. Gen. Oates gives accounts of all these battles—especially of Gettysburg, (with speculations on what might have been there,) and of most of the other famous battles of the war, East and West. He gives his story, too, of each of the Confederate Generals and their careers and campaigns, praising and criticising freely and quoting the praise and criticism of others. In this manner he deals with Albert Sidney Johnston, Longstreet, Braxton Bragg, Stonewall Jackson, Joseph E. Johnston, Jubal A. Early, the Hills, Daniel H. and Ambrose P., John B. Hood, Nathan B. Forrest, and Gen. Lee himself, his view sometimes agreeing and sometimes disagreeing with the accepted estimate. No doubt what he has to say will contribute more or less to the final verdict in each case.

Gen. Oates has, moreover, an account of Jefferson Davis, of whom he is not utterly a partisan, and of Abraham Lincoln. He introduces his more than 900 pages of text with a historical exposition of the right of secession, and maintains that but for a cumulation of errors which he points out the Confederacy might have achieved a permanent place in the family of nations. Throughout the book takes the character of a personal account of an affair very dear to the author's heart, and while he has no narrative gift he brings out many useful and entertaining facts. For instance, details of the methods of forming and equipping a company or a volunteer regiment at the beginning of the war and of the jealousies among the raw officers. Gen. Oakes relates, by the way, that during the Confederate occupation of Hagerstown, Md., a lady "said she wished the two armies would hang the two Presidents, Jeff Davis and Lincoln, and stop the war."

The author, who was made Brigadier General of Volunteers in the late war with Spain, includes in the volume of his warlike reminiscences a summary of that little conflict and some account of his own troubles in securing a brigade and in getting sent—or not getting sent—to the front. As a matter of fact he saw no service in the Spanish-American war. Appendices give the separate history of the Fifteenth Alabama Regiment and an epitome of the organization and services of the other four regiments of Law's Alabama brigade.

Chesterton's Short Stories.

THE CLUB OF QUEER TRADES. By Gilbert K. Chesterton. Illustrated. New York: Harper & Brothers. $1.50.

Funmaking of the most fantastic kind characterizes the six short stories in which Mr. Gilbert K. Chesterton details the doings of "The Club of Queer Trades," and, while developing some remarkably entertaining detective stories of his own, most ingeniously satirizes the methods by means of which such astute gentlemen as Sherlock Holmes and his kind have gained great popular esteem. In his more serious work this writer has sometimes been rather sharply criticised for his tendency toward the fantastic, and one can readily understand that exactly the fancifulness of thought that make these stories such a delightful parody on the solemn hypotheses and deductions of the popular detective yarn would likely be irritating when applied to the really serious matters upon which Mr. Chesterton has been known to discourse. Here it serves the excellent purpose, in a parody, of setting exaggerating all the salient points of the original.

There are two sleuths in Mr. Chesterton's stories—one of the regulation Sherlock Holmes type, who sees tremendous mysteries in the most innocent-appearing trifles, and, with faultless logic, reasons to conclusions which invariably turn out to be—false; the other occupies most of his time in proving how unjustifiably suspicious Detective No. 1 has been, and how easy it is to explain most things of man's invention, since the less is always included in the greater, and therefore truth will always be stranger than fiction. In this case the source of all Mr. Chesterton's humorous imaginings is a "Club of Queer Trades," which was made up exclusively of persons who had invented some new and absolutely original method of earning their living and really earned their living by their trades. It was the difficulty of pursuing their odd vocations in a wholly unnoticeable manner that furnished such food for useless thought on the part of Mr. Rupert Grant, Esq.—a private detective of the conventional variety—and such apparent triumphs in sleuthing to his very impractical and dreamy brother, who had resigned from the Judge's bench in a fit of disgust with what he termed "the mountainous frivolity" of courts of law, and was, sub rosa, the President of "The Club of Queer Trades." Mr. Chesterton does not let the latter fact dawn on his readers, however, until the sixth page from the last in the book, thereby showing his own cleverness in the weaving of plots.

After the first story, "The Tremendous Adventures of Major Brown," one realizes the author's satirical intent and suspects vaguely that none of the prospective horrors are going to be real, but nevertheless such is Mr. Chesterton's ingenuity in construction that it is just as delicious a surprise when the innocent little vicar who told such a harrowing tale about being kidnapped by burglars turns out to belong to the trade of "Professional Detainers" as it was when poor Major Brown's "tremendous adventures" proved to be entirely the work of an "Adventure and Romance Agency," but arranged for another customer who pined for a more romantic form of existence than he could find for himself in prosaic London. And the same may be said of the breathless chase that resulted in the unmasking of the venerable criminal who "hired himself at dinner parties to lead up to other people's repartees," and of the house agent, with so far one tenant, who made a specialty of "Arboreal Villas," in plain terms, little houses, swung up in the tops of tall trees.

"Glorified Hottentotism."

THE COMMONWEALTH OF MAN. By Robert Afton Holland, S. T. D. The Slocum Lectures, 1894. Delivered at the University of Michigan. 12mo. Pp. 194. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, The Knickerbocker Press.

Here is no half-hearted or timid defender of that old order which by ruled degrees of growth changes and gives place to new. The text is Mr. Edwin Markham's poem of the "Man with the Hoe," the method is by epigram and counter-eloquence, proceeding from an honest acceptance of and a brave confidence in the ultimate goodness of Christendom and the civilization which it has, if not actually builded, at least, in the words of Dr. Holland, "consecrated."

This is no place to go into the rights and wrongs of the questions discussed in a series of lectures delivered upon a foundation (that at Ann Arbor) devoted to Christian evidences. It is enough to indicate Dr. Holland's position and quote a few characteristic phrases. He will have it that Millet's peasant in the picture which inspired Markham leans upon a hoe which, because it is his own, shows that he has taken one step forward at least, that the idea is not of one oppressed [illegible] attributed to Carlyle: "All [illegible] really "brother to the ox?" so much society is not responsible, says Dr. Holland; he started so, naturally. He is merely one whom society has not uplifted. If he is shabby as dust on Monday, could have him, then "machinery can fabricate a manlier man to-day and does by tens of thousands." As for visions of a "millennial, these come only to men who are flowers (more or less) of that "diseased civilization" which by the theories of modern Socialists "is to hari-kiri its own life by way of atonement for its misdeeds." For "how will such visions come to empty eyes? Not by grubbing dirt. Ideals are not potatoes." Nor may symbolics of a brutish past ever of their own powers overturn the ruling system. "Their hoes will avail little against dynamite guns."

Dr. Holland speaks of slums as relics also. For slums are now but small parts of cities; once whole cities were slums. And the "madness of the slum" is more in the civilized eye that sees them than any conscious condition of the slum dwellers. Still further, as showing the progression of institutions and of morals, Dr. Holland says this: "Slavery, too, was right when it took the place of massacre. To release captives meant to fight them again." As to the church, he is bold to say it works by power as well as by persuasion. "Its supreme evangelist has ever been, and still is, the sword." There are eleven lectures, all pretty vigorous writing and not bad reading.

The Modern Child.

THE TWENTIETH CENTURY CHILD. By Edward H. Cooper. 12mo. New York: John Lane. $1.50.

Here is a book written in a pseudo-serious vein on the subject of children and the rearing of them. Mr. Edward H. Cooper declares himself a bachelor, but insists that as such he has every opportunity to observe the children of his friends and neighbors. Above all did he cultivate the acquaintance of the young people themselves.

The idea that women are infallible and best left alone in their judgment of nursery affairs in mediæval and oriental nonsense, and in these days when women assert (and very clearly prove) that they can do what need to be thought men's work men folk surely need have no hesitation in making * * * a counter-claim.

However, in spite of the inefficiency of mothers, Mr. Cooper admits that a "kindly disposed Providence usually arranges the rescue of the brood and gives them their chance."

One of the principal conclusions at which he arrives is that parents, generally speaking, are unfit to rear their children. Being actively engaged with the many outside interests which occupy the modern woman's mind, the mother, Mr. Cooper considers, finds it almost impossible to give her children the attention necessary. But he does not sit down to sadly deplore this state of things without suggesting a remedy. On the contrary he cheerfully offers a solution whereby both children and parents should profit. This is the employment of the "deputy mothers"—young women fitted for the position of taking full charge of the children of a household in whom full power of control is vested, who exercise authority over governess, nurse, and dressmakers, who even have the power to refuse the requests of the ubiquitous aunt.

I know two such persons among the homes of my clients, and their work is a brilliant success. The two mothers here are, in their children's eyes, clever and beautiful and favorite playmates, with whom they occasionally have tea and romp; the father provides pocket-money, takes the party to the pantomime, chooses schools for the boys, buys ponies and fishing rods for the holidays, and joins their sports whenever he has time. I cannot describe the exact work of these ladies more simply than by saying that it is the doing of everything which I have described as being now left undone.

The book is full of humorous anecdotes along with criticisms of modern methods of education, remarks on the sports and recreation of children, the administration of punishment, innate and cultivated characteristics, and several "true" stories told by prominent young people in English society.

WORK AND PLAY.

Major Arthur Griffiths's Pleasant Story of His Long Life in the Army and the Civil Service.*

A SPIRIT delightfully frank—even boyish—marks these reminiscences of Major Griffiths, and this charm of manner is not all. For the Major speaks from personal knowledge of a vast number of important and interesting things, and supplies bits of gossip and biography about a great company of distinguished Englishmen, many of whose lives, though properly a part of the past half century, overlap into the present.

I am a soldier's son, born in an Indian garrison, (Dec. 9, 1838,) a soldier's grandson, with a host of relatives, near and distant, and as I write this I game at family portraits and miniatures in uniforms of a bygone day. My earliest associations were with soldiers; a soldier's wife was my nurse; my father's orderly carried me on his shoulders at the immature age of three to the Dame school, where I learned my A, B, C; my favorite toys were a wooden sword and the buttons off an old regimental coat.

Major Griffiths spent his early years on the Isle of Man—"in those days a favorite retreat for old officers, veterans of the Peninsula, India, and Waterloo." These veterans were his heroes, and even his first schoolmaster had been a Lieutenant in a cavalry regiment. He relates of his days at the public school "such as it was," a "Spartan institution," that the boys rarely got enough to eat, while "in the matter of education" they were "not exactly starved, but much was left to chance and individual desire to improve." Being a younger son and his father poor, young Arthur Griffiths had no hope of a start in the army—would have become a curate, perhaps—but for the coming of the Crimean war. That exigency rushed him unceremoniously through an examination at Sandhurst and got him the otherwise unattainable commission in three days.

After some little training at a military depot at Birr in Ireland the boy shipped to the Crimea with a drunken skipper, "who courted collisions by such close steering that it was a mercy we did not run down everything we met."

Once, indeed, in the Bosporus when sitting in the cabin below, I was thrown out of my chair by a violent concussion, and rushing up on deck found that our mad-cap commander had fallen foul of another vessel, but was capering about the deck shouting: "Shaved him by an inch!" He was drunk, of course—he was always drunk.

In spite of this fantastic pilot, however, the ship's company got safely to the seat of war, and youth Griffiths joined his regiment, where his extremely youthful appearance gave him the name of "the light company baby." Serving in the trenches he found delightful—as young Major Washington did the sound of his first bullets—and it was "an endless and absorbing joy" to give orders and be obeyed, "not without condescension," by the war-worn veterans he "was supposed to command." It is in connection with these trenches that Major Griffiths records this sort of thing. "The pungent flavor of Worcester sauce," says he, "recalls my début as a soldier, and my first lunch at mess; there, too, I tasted claret for the first time and overcame my repugnance to olives." The young officer had many boyish escapades and saw a deal of what went on at the siege of Sebastopol—thanks to the friendship of Sir William Eyre, upon whose staff he afterward served in Canada.

From the Crimea the Sixty-third Regiment was ordered to Halifax, of the military life in which town and of the officers stationed there Major Griffiths tells much that is entertaining.

Major Griffiths says that as a Second Lieutenant his regimental pay was 6s. 6d. per diem, or £121 per annum, of which, after deductions for mess and band subscriptions, only a little less than £9 reached him. But "amusements were cheap, and we had plenty of spare time to indulge in them," and "if it was not an improving life professionally it was for the most part healthy and cleanly, with little to be ashamed of from the moral side." He speaks of cricket, skating, boating, hunting, and especially sings of the Nova Scotia girls and the sleigh rides, "snugly ensconced in the buffalo robes, with your 'muffin' by your side, a halt at some hospitable settler's, and an impromptu dance in his barn, with a return journey in the crisp moonlight air." The Major adds, by way of explanation:

The "muffin" was a social institution of those days which may or may not have survived. Every young swain, by unwritten but acknowledged law, was permitted to make his choice of a partner for the season, with whom he danced exclusively and whom he drove in his sleigh and chatted with, hand in hand. The "Silver Stream," and the Nova Scotian ladies were styled, were phenomenally attractive, direct descendants of the Gaspereaux of Acadie, as whereas he

*FIFTY YEARS OF PUBLIC SERVICE. By Major Arthur Griffiths, late Sixty-third (now Manchester) Regiment; formerly His Majesty's Inspector of Prisons, author of "Memorials of Millbank," "Chronicles of Newgate," "Mysteries of Police and Crime," "Wellington and Waterloo," &c. With portraits. 8vo, pp. Dodd, Mead & Co., New York.

Longfellow's Evangeline, as simple and unsophisticated and as well behaved. Mrs. Grundy did not exist—or held her tongue.

E. A. Sothern, then unknown to fame and called "Douglas Stewart," was trying a season at Halifax, "with poor results," and the officers aided him. In "The Heir at Law" when Sothern played Dr. Pangloss and Mrs. Sothern Cicely Homespun, the author played Lady Duberly—excellently outfitted, he says, with "petticoats, long stockings, and white wig." He was then eighteen, and presently went to Montreal as extra A. D. C. to Sir William Eyre. He confesses:

My duties were rather social than military, to discharge the well-known functions, to take the end of the table and carve, until happily, the dinner à la Russe became the fashion, to keep the visiting book and issue invitations. Sometimes, as befitted my youth, I played with the children, and was caught booted and spurred hiding under the table in some silly game.

This staff appointment was presently cut short by the War Office, which Major Griffiths admits was well. "I was rapidly being spoiled, and was in great danger of becoming an insufferable young prig." He went back to his regiment (and hard work) for a while, and then was passed on to the musketry course at Hythe, and soon after that to the Staff College at Sandhurst. As usual, he tells of the work and the fun at both places—about the Hindustani he learned, and the drawing master who (explaining compass work) in his embarrassment addressed H. R. H. the Prince Consort as "Your Royal Compass," the professor of chemistry, who was called "Stinks," and the professor of geology who was called "Stones." Young Griffiths's course at Sandhurst was interrupted by the stir of the Trent affair, which sent him back to his regiment in Canada, and when matters were peacefully adjusted with the United States the ice froze him up for the Winter in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. He presently returned to Sandhurst, and in due time got a post as Brigade Major at Gibraltar during the Governorship of Sir Richard Airy. There is more gossip of famous or merely singular men with much amusing matter about Gibraltar and the races there and the visits of royalties, and the garrison theatricals, in which Sir Arthur Havelock was "leading lady."

It was at Gibraltar that Major Griffiths was assigned to reduce the mutinous prisoners there to order, and this assignment led to his retirement from the army and his permanent employment in the civil service as, in turn, Deputy Governor, Governor, and Inspector of Prisons. Much of his volume deals with what he has seen in following that duty—most of it very curious, and all related in the spirit of what has been quoted. He tells, too, of his journalistic work, of his first novel, "Peccavi," of later stories like "The Queen's Shilling" and "The Thin Red Line," and his detective stories, his "chilling shockers," he calls them, of which the first was "Number 99." Nor does he neglect account of his works based upon his knowledge of and interest in prisons and criminals—"Memorials of Millbank," "Chronicles of Newgate," "Mysteries of Police and Crime." Everywhere you see the same frank delight in his work and the same friendliness toward all the pleasant and curious things that may be parts of that work or the life that goes with it. You would say Major Griffiths had enjoyed his "Fifty Years of Service" in the living at least as much as you enjoy it in the reading.

"A Liberal Education."

FACTS AND IDEALS. Short Studies of Life and Literature. By Philip Gibbs, Author of "Knowledge is Power." 12mo. Pp. 224. New York: Longmans, Green & Co.

In a way this volume is a curiosity. Some thing about most things under the sun may be found in it, all seasoned with the sort of didactic sauce proper to little lay sermons for the plain people, who are not quite so plain. The matter appeared originally in provincial weekly papers in England. First there are what the author calls "serious soliloquies" expressing cheerfully commonplace views upon such questions as "How to be Happy Though Poor," "Marriage and a Man's Career," "The Divine Right of Selfishness," "The Saving Grace of Humor." Then the author chats about the beneficence of fairy tales, about holidays, about "the necessity of poise," about city noises, and what folks have latterly again (reverting to Horace Walpole's word) began to name "serendipity." Going on you find some very every-day philosophy, remarks on old books and how, on the lost art of letter writing, on whether Bacon wrote Shakespeare.

That would seem to be enough for one book, but this passes to a historical retrospect of the Victorian era, (some twenty pages,) remarks on Frozen writers—Dumas, Ouida, Mary Cholmondeley, Henry Seton Merriman, (twenty more pages,) a short history of the French Revolution, (twenty-five more pages,) some reflections of sentiment in fiction, (forty pages,) a consideration of the problem of Posthumous Fame, (fifteen pages,) and finally something about the "art of narration" (ten pages more).

In all of this there is to be found part of an elementary education for a young person—a supplementary education for a person in process—a supplementary education for an adult; and there is all in the book that a person of any age could read with pleasure.

MRS. ESSINGTON

By Esther and Lucia Chamberlain.

THIS romance of a house-party is the brightest, most up-to-date novel of the year — a fascinating love-story of distinctly "smart" people. The beautiful Mrs. Essington, a youthful widow, and the glorious daughter of the hostess are striking rivals in the affections of the one ineligible man of the party, a young composer, hopelessly poor. How he proposes to one, loving the other, and how the tangled skein is finally unraveled, makes a story of unusual beauty and power. Six exquisite full-page pictures in color by Henry Hutt. 12mo, 248 pages, $1.50.

M. B. LEVICK, San Francisco, Cal.—Near the beginning of Chapter III. of "The Light That Failed" Dick Heldar addresses the people of Port Said thus: "Oh, you rabbit hutches! * * * Do you know what you've got to do later on? You have to supply me with men servants and maid servants.'—Here he smacked his lips—'and the peculiar treasure of Kings.' What is 'the peculiar treasure of Kings'? The phrase is also to be found in the short story, "A Memorandum of Sudden Death," by the late Frank Norris, who probably got it from Kipling.

Helder is looking, not at the houses of Port Said, but at "a row of highly respectable semi-detached residences" in London. Under the circumstances, the "peculiar treasure of Kings" can refer only to the money which he expects to get by turning out middle-class art for middle-class people.

E. G. KOCH, New York City.—Could you give me the titles and publishers of a few books dealing with house aquariums, their care, &c.? I was unable to secure any at a bookseller's.

Bateman and Bennett's "Book of Aquaria," published by L. V. Gill in London in 1890, seems about the latest book on the subject. The Boy's Own Book, The Girl's Own Book, contain chapters on aquaria.

A. G. L., New York City.—Can you give me a list of fiction or historical novels whose action is laid during the time of Hannibal or the second Punic war? This epoch, (which has always been of great interest to me,) while one of vast importance in the world's history, seems to have been comparatively neglected by the novelist. I know of but two books of the class of which I speak, namely, "The Lion's Brood," by Duffield Osborne, and "The Young Carthaginian," by Henty, the last-named being a juvenile work.

"Lords of the World," by the Rev. A. J. Church, is another juvenile book on this period.

J. MARLETT, Navy Yard, N. Y.: "A few years ago I saw a note to the effect that some one was going on a whaling trip with a camera to get a record of the exciting scenes incident to that pursuit. I would ask if any publication has been made of the results."

So far as we know the results have not been published.

W. D. NOYES, Eastchester, N. Y.: (1) Who were the "three Sergeants of Rochelle"? I find frequent allusion to them in French books. In Murray's Paris Guide, speaking of a certain cemetery there, it says: "The three Sergeants of Rochelle are buried there." (2) What is the meaning of the word "Irurachar"? There is, or was, a Spanish war steamer so named, and a certain hotel has adopted the word as a motto. (3) I am trying to find a book, printed some time about 1852, called "A Manual of the Fine Arts. By a Lady." It gave biographical sketches of artists, lists of their works, &c., and was an interesting and useful book. I should like to know who wrote it and by whom it was published.

1. The three Sergeants were really four: "The Four Sergeants of La Rochelle." Bories, Sergeant Major; Goubin, Sergeant; Pomier, Sergeant Major, and Raoulx, Sergeant, in the Forty-fifth Infantry Regiment. They were all members of the Carbonari, and in 1822 began to preach insurrection to their fellow-soldiers, one of whom, Goupillon, betrayed them. They were taken to Paris, tried, convicted, and on Sept. 21, 1822, were decapitated. They are buried in the cemetery of Montmartre, in Paris. 2. We find no such word or name in Spanish, and no such vessel in the Spanish Navy. 3. In 1854 "A Lady" edited a "Handbook of Painting." It described the German, Flemish, Dutch, Spanish, and French schools. The "Lady" was Elizabeth, Lady Eastlake. We do not know the publisher. In the same year Miss Maria Parquhar, under the pseudonym of "A Lady," compiled a "Biographical Catalogue of the Principal Italian Painters." Either of these might be what you have in mind.

L. A. S., Madison Avenue, New York City: In reply to the query of Glendower, Washington, D. C., in your issue of May 13, I wish to say the lines (misquoted) are from an unpublished poem called "Via Solitaria," attributed to Longfellow. The date of composition is given as Sept. 18, 1863. Following is the correct wording:

For life to me is as a station
Wherein apart a traveler stands—
One absent long from home and nation,
In other lands;
And I, as he who stands and listens,
Amid the twilight's chill and gloom,
To hear approaching in the distance,
The train for home.

WILLOUGHBY, Brooklyn, N. Y.: Please decide a question of some interest regarding Mr. Lincoln's Gettysburg speech. I assert that Mr. Lincoln said: "The world will little reck nor long remember what we may say here," &c. My friend points to the speech as recently printed, in which the word reck is changed to note. My assertion is based on the report of the speech as published at the time in New York papers. If I am correct, the recent change is little less than sacrilege. How would that line sound in the "Burial of Sir John Moore," "But little he'll reck, if they'll let him sleep on," with reck changed to note! Reck is a good old Saxon word, which, as [illegible] Appeals to Readers.

W. D. NOYES, Eastchester, N. Y.—Can anybody tell me who wrote a poem called "The Dying Archer"? It used to be in the school readers when I was a boy. It related to Robin Hood, and began:

"The day is near ended, the light quivers through," &c.

X., New York City.—I would like to find a poem which used to appear in several old recitation books, and was called "Socrates Snooks." The first few lines ran as follows:

"Socrates Snooks, the Lord of Creation,
A second time entered the marriage relation.
Xantippe Colores accepted his hand,
And made him the happiest man in the land."

HARMANUS BENNETT, Farmingdale, N. Y.—Is it possible for some one of your readers to inform me where I can get a copy of a song entitled, (if I remember correctly,) "An Ode on Science"? My father, a veteran of the War of 1812, used to sing it. The chorus was something like this:

"The British yoke, the galley chains
Was urged upon our necks in vain;
All haughty tyrants we disdained,
And so long live America."

ETHEL A. KEDDIE, Roselle Park, N. J.—Will you kindly let me know the author of a poem called "As Through a Glass Darkly," and where I can find it?

R. G. BELL, Brooklyn, N. Y.—Please tell me the author of these lines:

"A man may cry 'Church, Church,' at every word,
With no more piety than other people.
A daw's not reckoned a religious bird
Because it keeps a cawing on a steeple."

JOHN HOYT, South Norwalk, Conn.—Will you kindly inform me who is the writer of the "Shipwreck"? I think the first lines are:

"Before the wine shop which o'erlooks the beach, sits John Gaytor."

F. R. G., Amsterdam Avenue, New York City: Who published the following books, and what are their prices: (1) "The Medical Treatise of the Society of the Sons of the American Revolution," by Louis H. Cornish, 1900; (2) "Wear Tides in the Navy Estuaries," by Commander Fawcett Farley, United States Army, 1902; (3) "Studies in Map Reading and Sketching," by Lieut. Col. W. J. Shaw, 1902; (4) "Official Crests of the British Army Now in Daily Use" and "Views of Woolwich and the Royal Military Academy," both published by Gale & Polden, Ltd., of London.

1. This is printed for circulation among the members only. Apply to the Secretary, 220 Broadway, New York City. 2. The Patriots Book Company, 304 Cannon Place, Troy, N. Y.; $2. 3. The Van Nostrand Company, Murray Street, this city; $2.50. 4. You may get these from Van Nostrand, but probably will have to import them from England.

A. H. M., New York City: Can you furnish me with the modern equivalent of the mediæval names of cities given below: Daventr, Hafnise, (or Copenhagen,) Hagæ Schaumburgicorum, Semricopoli, Imaci, Noomagi, Podepontii, Sangerhusæ, Silusiæ, Zagrabiæ, (Croatia,) Agrani.

You are right as to Hafnia and Zagrabia, of which, as of the others, you give the genitive forms: Daventria is Deventer, Holland; Hagæ Schauenburgicorum is Stadthagen, in Schaumburg-Lippe; Henricopolis is Heinrichstadt, Brunswick; Isenacum is Eisenach; Neomagus is Castelnau, in the Gironde, or possibly Chatillon, in the same department; Pedepontum is Stadt am Hof, Bavaria; Sangerhusæ is Sangerhaeusen, Prussia, and Silusia is Schleusingen, Prussia.

N. W. H., Brooklyn, N. Y.: In reply to R. L. C. White, Nashville, Tenn., who states in the REVIEW of April 8 that he desires to have every anthology of poems in English worthy of shelf room, if his collection does not already contain the following, I would urge him to obtain copies: "The Two Voices," poems of the mountains and the sea, selected by John White Chadwick; "Out of the Heart," poems for lovers young and old, compiled by John White Chadwick and Annie Hathaway Chadwick; "Through Love to Light," a selection of songs of good courage, made by John White Chadwick and Annie Hathaway Chadwick, all published by the Joseph Knight Company of Boston.

To the list given on April 8 may be added Griswold's "Poets and Poetry of America," Leland's "Poetry of Dreams," Rundolph's "Fifty Years of English Poetry," Carman's "World's Best Poetry," Longfellow's "Poems of Places," Henley's "Political Verse," Johnson's "Fifty Perfect Poems," and many others yet not named here.

Mrs. EMERSON OPDYCKE—M. C. L., Plainfield, N. J., will find the lines she is looking for in James Russell Lowell's Letters, edited by Charles Elliott Norton, second volume, Page 315, where Lowell prefaces the lines with this explanation: "I made an epigram (extempore) on the G. O. M. and repeated it to Lord Acton."

M. U. O., New York City.—One of your readers inquired some time since about modern French novels treating of life on farms in France. As no one has seemed to reply, I venture to suggest René Bazin's excellent books, treating, however, so far as I remember, only of Western France. Then there are exquisite bits of village life from the novels of Pierre Loti, dealing with the west coast; going further back we find Mme. de Witt's stories of Normandy and Edmond About's of Central France. And, best of all, though perhaps of too old a period, Erckmann-Chatrian's tales of Alsace Lorraine.

R. N. T., Orange, N. J.—Unless it is a fact Mrs. Ward's "Marriage of William Ashe" opens with an impossibility. Lady Kitty Bristol's father was an Earl, and her mother Countess of Blackwater. Now British custom permits a woman of title who remarries to retain her original title, and—unless the incident is a fact—it is practically impossible that the Countess of Blackwater should have dropped her English title and become Madame d'Estrees. Did Lady Caroline Lamb's mother do as Lady Kitty Bristol is described as having done?

No. Lady Caroline's mother, the Countess of Besborough, married but once, and died more than twenty years before Lady Caroline's father.

GUARDIA'S SHORT STORIES OF COSTA RICA,
(Cuentos Ticos.)

Translated from the Spanish, with an Introduction and many Illustrations. By GRAY CASEMENT. 12mo. $2.00.

What some of the reviewers say:

"Some of the stories are humorous, some tragic; but all show power and present life vividly."—New York Sun.

"Senor Guardia is considered one of the literary men of Costa Rica, if not of Central America. The usual merit of the short stories in this collection makes the reader desirous of knowing more of his work. Mr. Casement, who is responsible for the translation, has performed a difficult task in a very satisfactory manner."—New Orleans Picayune.

"Mr. Casement has been able to retain in his translations the effect of the language in which the stories were written. He has kept the idiomatic terms of expression as nearly as possible and the touches of local color make one of their most pleasing qualities."—Cleveland Leader.

"Here is a unique book indeed. • • • Tales like these are not to be found elsewhere."—The Emporia (Kansas) Bulletin.

"The stories are not only good—they are very good. In fact, they will remind the reader of the brilliant sketches of Selma Lagerlof, the Swedish impressionist. One feels after reading the book through that he has been making a voyage of discovery, that he has never known Costa Rica before—more than a geographical name and a possible space on the map of that neck of woods known as Central America—but that now he knows it quite well. • • • The short novels that Mr. Casement has translated for us are cut as clean as a cameo. There is not an amateurish line in them."—Cleveland Town Topics.

"Mr. Casement's account of the little republic is more thorough and satisfactory than any we have met with."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

• • • "In 'El Clavel' (The Pink) is told the story of a young country girl who vainly loves a well-to-do gentleman of the city; although here and there reminiscent of Castilian story tellers, the tales and the style in which they are related make one wish to know more of Senor Guardia and his works."—New York Times.

THE PUBLISHERS.

Plans of Some of Them—Forthcoming New Books.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS are preparing for publication "The Child and Religion," being a collection of passages by various authors, edited by the Rev. T. Stephens, B. A. It will make its appearance in the Crown Theological Library. To their Theological Translation Library the same publishers are about to add "St. Paul: The Man and His Work," showing the beginning of Christianity, of Christian organization, and of dogma, by Prof. H. Weinel of Jena.

Two more theological books are announced which will bear the imprint of Charles Scribner's Sons. "Comparative Religion: Its Genesis and Growth" is the title of the Rev. Louis Henry Jordan's new book. This is an attempt to describe the origin, progress, and aim of comparative religion, and sketch the advent of a new discipline and problems. The second Scribner volume is an English version of Prof. Theodor Zahn's "Introduction to the New Testament," which has been undertaken under the direction of the Hartford Theological Seminary. The work will appear in three volumes and will have the author's recent corrections and revisions; it is announced, however, that it will not be published for some time. The translation has been going on for several years and it is stated that the work will be among the best on the subject.

Another biography from the pen of Arthur Christopher Benson is shortly to be brought out by the Macmillan Company. It is a "Life of Edward FitzGerald." This author's biography of Rossetti, which appeared in the English Men of Letters Series last year, will be remembered.

Vols. VII., VI., XI. of the Connoisseur's Library are to be published by G. P. Putnam's Sons in the Autumn. They are: "English Furniture," by F. S. Robinson; "Enamels," by H. H. Cunynghame, C. B., and "Goldsmiths and Silversmiths' Work," by Nelson Dawson. The books are to be brought out under the supervision of Cyril Davenport, author of "Mezzotints," the first volume to appear in the series, which will be complete in twenty volumes. With the issue of these three new books, seven volumes will have appeared. All are profusely illustrated.

The Fleming H. Revell Company is bringing out "Duncan Polite," a novel by a new author, Marian Keith, who is known in Canada through her contributions to the papers. The scene of the tale is in the upper region of Ontario, among the mixed population of English, Irish, and High and Lowland Scotch.

The Macmillan Company has set May 31 as the date for the appearance of Jack London's volume, "The Game." It will have several full-page plates in color and other drawings in the text and decorations.

Charles Scribner's Sons are to publish shortly two volumes on "The Oxford, Gloucester, and Milford Road: The Ready Way to South Wales," by Charles G. Harper, an English writer, on the historical associations of his native land. The volumes will have many illustrations, including pictures from old-time prints and from photographs by the author. Besides descriptions of historic scenes, there are anecdotes and reminiscences.

"The Walk, Conversation, and Character of Jesus Christ Our Lord," is the title of a new book by Dr. Alexander Whyte, which the Fleming H. Revell Company is issuing.

Prof. Edward Dowden has finished the correction of the final proof of his book on "Montaigne," which the J. B. Lippincott Company will publish as the first volume in the French Men of Letters Series, simultaneously in Philadelphia and London.

The Oxford University Press is publishing in this country through Henry Frowde "Canteenes Love Songs," in two volumes, which are sold separately. Vol. I. has the Chinese text of the songs, with a glossary, and was printed in China; Vol. II. contains the translation of the songs by Cecil Clementi, with an introduction explaining the origin of the songs and their importance, and a short account of the author, besides full explanatory notes.

The J. B. Lippincott Company will publish immediately "The Complete Bridge Player," by "Cut Cavendish." The volume includes a vocabulary of bridge, instructions in the principles of the game, special chapters on "play" under specified conditions, discussions of the theories and the discard, the etiquette of the game, and other Southern Stories," by Bettie Freshwater Pool; "Poems," by Elizabeth M. Foster, and "Philosophy and Froth," a book of epigrams, by Florence James Rosse, a first cousin of the novelist Henry James.

Two volumes of "Select Documents Illustrative of the History of the French Revolution," edited by L. G. Wickham Legg, M. A., of New College, are being sent out by Henry Frowde. They contain speeches of the leaders of the assemblies, edited by H. Morse Stephens.

The J. B. Lippincott Company will finally publish the end of this month Dr. A. B. Scherer's new book, "Young Japan," in which the author gives a history of the Japanese people, their institutions, and their life. The volume is fully illustrated from photographs and pictures by native artists. Dr. Scherer will be recalled as the author of "Japan To-day."

John Lane is bringing out anonymously "The Creed of Christ," which is an attempt to interpret the personal belief of Christ Himself so far as it can be deduced from the record of His acts and sayings.

The Griffith and Rowland Press of Philadelphia is publishing "The Ethics of the Christian Life; or, The Science of Right Living," by Dr. Henry E. Robins. After a long introduction, the author discusses personality as an essential to morality, and gives an analysis of the human constitution. He then considers "The Scope of the Ethics of the Christian Life," closing with a consideration of "The Method of the Application of the Principles of the Christian Life." Most of the examples are taken by the author from the Scriptures, especially the New Testament.

Doubleday, Page & Co. have postponed until May 27 the publication of Thomas Dixon's new book, "The Life Worth Living"; Hamilton Wright Mable's "Fairy Tales Every Child Should Know," and Part III., "Setters: Irish, Gordon, and Spaniels," of James Watson's "Dog Book."

John Lane is issuing "Rifle and Romance in the Indian Jungle," which contains the record of thirteen years of jungle life, by Capt. A. I. R. Glasfurd. The stories of the ways of wild animals and human creatures, hunts, &c., are all from the author's experiences. The illustrations are from sketches and photographs by Capt. Glasfurd.

THE HOUSE THAT JACK BUILT. By Wesley Johnston, Author of "Dwellers in Gotham," "The Mystery of Miriam," &c. Cloth, 12mo, Pp. 253. New York: Eaton & Mains. 75 cents.

While Mr. Wesley Johnston has used an old title, he has given an entirely new version to the familiar story. Instead of house building, we see character building and follow Jack Hursley from childhood to manhood as his life work continually broadens. There is a deep moral sentiment running through the book, and it is quite possible that it may be classed as one most suitable for a Sunday school library. This is true, but the volume is as different from the old-fashioned "goody-goody Sunday school books," that seemed to leave the human element of children wholly out of reckoning, as black is from white. If all children read books such as this in their Sunday school days, it is safe to say there would be less juvenile complaining about religious duties, and the feeling of repugnance would be less keen in future years.

The characters are all cleverly drawn, and one's interest is not allowed to lag. The scene is laid in a country village which has its share of sour-minded Christians as well as those who possess the ordinary amount of common sense and buoyant good humor. The picture of the district school, where Jack almost thrashes the teacher when that worthy uses the ferrule upon his sister; the church gossips, the petty jealousies, and the noble sacrifices of life are admirably portrayed.

Jack does not become the man he is by inherent goodness of his own. The moral of the book may be said to lie in the fact that sensible methods of teaching, the influence of example being relied upon even more than the imparting of book knowledge, will have a greater effect in building up useful lives than any amount of preaching. Jack discovers, much to his surprise, through the minister's love of rowing and open-air sports, that a man can enjoy life and be a preacher, too. The minister helps Jack in his studies and teaches him many things that are of great use to him later in life; but, after all, it was the influence of the minister's life, devoid of all clerical pretentiousness and his kindly treatment of all classes of people, that left the greatest impress upon Jack while he was building his house.

ABOUT AUTHORS.

What Some of Them Are Saying, Writing, or Planning.

AN English writer has compiled a new volume dealing with Shakespeare, which Charles Scribner's Sons will publish in this country. It is entitled "Shakespeare's Marriage, His Departure from Stratford, and Other Incidents in His Life." The author is Joseph William Gray. He is said to have studied historic records of the dramatist's time, and deals with some disputed problems regarding his career.

Hugo Richard Meyer of the University of Chicago has with the Macmillan Company a volume dealing with "Government Regulation of Railway Rates." He writes about the advantages and disadvantages of the two opposing policies: the foreign policy of equality of charges for equal services, and the American policy of charging what the traffic will bear.

Dr. Wilfred Grenfell, author of "The Harvest of the Sea," bearing the imprint of the Fleming H. Revell Company, is visiting New York before starting north to return to his labors on his hospital ship. Dr. Grenfell's visit has resulted in an organization of prominent men who are giving their support to the work, which has been described to the public through Dr. Norman's "Dr. Grenfell's Parish," and Dr. Grenfell's own writing and lecturing.

Margaret Armstrong has made a cover design for Myrtle Reed's new novel, "At the Sign of the Jack o' Lantern," which G. P. Putnam's Sons have in press. It represents a tavern swing sign with the proverbial pumpkin in the background.

Charles Egbert Craddock, in her new novel, "The Storm Centre," which The Macmillan Company will publish in June, gives a picture of a Tennessee household and its inmates, and of their life in the old mansion surrounded by the Federal Army. There is no fighting or history in the story, but much love, flirtation, and courtship.

Miss May Sinclair, author of "The Divine Fire," says in a recent letter that, until Owen Seaman "spoke up" for her, this last book, which Henry Holt & Co. publish, was not as well received as all her earlier books, particularly "Audrey Craven." She denies the report that it took her seven years to write her new novel. She wrote it in "exactly" two years and three months. She adds that her next book, when she writes it, will be "as much better than 'The Divine Fire' as that book is better than its predecessors. But it will probably be different, so different that the people who liked the one may not like the other a bit." She closes with the remark that Rudyard Kipling "admired" the new story "very much."

Dr. James G. K. McClure has just published, through the Fleming H. Revell Company, his new volume of sermons, which he preached annually for ten years at Yale University, "Loyalty, the Soul of Religion." Dr. McClure has been appointed President of the McCormick Theological Seminary in Chicago.

Gen. Tremain's new book, "Two Days of War: A Gettysburg Narrative," will be published by Bonnell, Silver & Bowers of this city next week.

Dr. Arthur Mahler, the well-known art authority, has compiled a handbook to the Spanish and Italian "Paintings of the Louvre." He describes the works of the Italian painters—Fra Angelico, Botticelli, Leonardo, Raphael, Titian, Tintoretto, Veronese, Correggio, &c.—in historical order, from the Byzantine school to that of the Renaissance. The part devoted to the Spanish paintings deals mostly with the works of Velasquez and Murillo. There are 166 illustrations and an appendix containing a complete and up-to-date list of all the Spanish and Italian paintings in the Louvre. Doubleday, Page & Co. will publish the volume in the Autumn.

F. Howard Collins, author of "An Epitome of the Synthetic Philosophy of Herbert Spencer," has been assisted by authors, editors, printers, and others in making the volume. "Author and Printer," a guide for authors, editors, printers, correctors of the press, compositors, and typists, which is "an attempt to codify the best typographical practices of the present day. A full list of abbreviations has also been supplied. Among other things the volume tells the sizes of type, books, and paper; explains printing terms, punctuation, the spelling of place-names, the correct meaning and pronunciation of foreign terms, &c. It bears the imprint of Henry Frowde of the Oxford University Press.

H. W. C. Davis, M. A., of Balliol College, has written an introduction, analysis, and index for Benjamin Jowett's translation of Aristotle's "Politics," which Henry Frowde is publishing at the Clarendon Press.

M. Mohn has written the sixth volume of the series on the scientific results of the Norwegian North Polar Expedition, deals with "Meteorology," and contains 20 plates. It will shortly be published by Longmans, Green & Co.

Cyrus Townsend Brady, the well-known author, has decided to keep the pulpit at Trinity Church, Toledo, Ohio, which he filled temporarily. He will remove his family from New York.

Prof. Angelo Heilprin, who conducted an exploration of Mont Pelée, is reported to be working on a new edition of the "Pronouncing Gazetteer of the World," published by the J. B. Lippincott Company. Prof. Heilprin has become an "Officer d'Académie" of France by the decree of the French Minister of Public Instruction and Fine Arts, who has also bestowed on him the decorations accompanying the title.

Dr. John E. Sandys in his "Harvard Lectures on the Revival of Learning," about to appear with the Macmillan Company's imprint, writes on such subjects as "The Age of Discoveries," "Theory and Practice of Education," "The Homes of Humanism," "The Academies of Florence, Venice, Naples, and Rome," "The Study of Greek," &c.

Violet Jacob, author of "The Interloper," has with Doubleday, Page & Co. for issue in September "The Golden Heart." This is a volume of fairy tales, including "The Golden Heart," "The Dovecote," "The Peacock's Tail," "The Pelican," "The Cherry Tree," "Grumancon," "The Sorcerer's Sons and the Two Princesses of Japan," and for very small children "Jack Frost." The book is being decorated and illustrated by May Sandheim.

Prof. J. A. Fleming of University College, London, aims, in his "Scientific Principles of Wireless Telegraphy," in active preparation by Longmans, Green & Co., to present an account of the scientific principles on which the modern methods of electric wave, or wireless telegraphy, are based. The book is an expansion of lectures delivered to the Society of Arts.

The author of "The Yellow War" has sent the following note to McClure, Phillips & Co., which partly clears the mystery of the identity of "O": "As several reviewers have suggested that 'O' has imitated the style of 'Intelligence Officer' in his 'On the Heels of De Wet,' you are at liberty to state that 'O' is the contracted form of 'Intelligence Officer,' so that both 'The Yellow War' and 'On the Heels of De Wet' are from my pen."

The Abbé Constant Fouard will complete with the book, "St. John and the End of the Apostolic Age," which Longmans, Green & Co. have in press, his series of "The Beginnings of the Church," being histories of the first century.

Science and Religion.

THE WORLD AS INTENTION. A Contribution to Teleology. By L. P. Gratacap, Curator of American Museum of Natural History. 8vo. Pp. 346. New York: Eaton & Mains.

This volume contains yet another elaborate, laborious, and obviously sincere attempt to reconcile science with revealed religion. The author views the world, as he expresses it, as "intention," and by this means arrives at what is, to his mind at least, a basis of adjustment between a full recognition of scientific laws and a belief in God and the supernatural.

Mr. Gratacap defines law as "the manifestation of the properties of things." "A natural process," he also says, "is the interaction of two or more agents whose contacts are scientifically conceivable; a supernatural process is the interaction of two or more agents whose contacts are scientifically inconceivable." An interaction of agents of inconceivable contact is a miracle. The interaction of body and mind is a process thus scientifically inconceivable, yet undoubtedly a fact of experience; it is, therefore, the great miracle proved beyond question. More specifically, "a miracle is a creative act involving a supernatural process, and is a demonstration of law, being the manifestation of a property of God—creativeness."

Mr. Gratacap proceeds to examine Revelation and show how it is "intention" as springing from a desire and a need—God's desire, man's need; he argues that the full revelation of Christianity could have come nowhere save to the Jewish people, specially prepared and intended for it, and he traces intention as the essential element in the world, in the Bible, in conduct, in creeds, and in the Church. The argument may not be reproduced here. It depends, as do all such arguments, upon a cunningly contrived series of definitions of familiar terms of wide connotation, which serve as steps to the central doctrine of the author. He "holds us responsible in forming our conclusions, or regulating our manners, but remits the penalties of condemnation by the intercession of intention." Initially Mr. Gratacap admits that "the great difficulty in thought to-day is the realisation of the supernatural." He admits that scientific education has produced the difficulty and Rome Painted.

About half of the volume on "Rome," painted by Alberto Pisa, with the text by M. A. R. Tuker and Hope Malleson, appeared in The British Monthly Review, Macmillan's Magazine, and one or two other periodicals. Each of the twelve chapters is by one or the other of the authors. They have attempted to present some aspects of the Eternal City as they have themselves seen it, and have drawn on their long acquaintance with it and the inhabitants. The twelve chapters are entitled: "Rome," "Roman Building and Decoration," "The Roman Catacombs," "Roman Regions and Guilds," "The Roman Campagna," "The Roman Ménage," "The Roman People," "Roman Princely Families," "Roman Religion," "The Roman Cardinal," "Rome Before 1870," and "The Roman Question Before 1870 and Since That Year." The writer, in the beginning of the book, speaks of the Forum:

* * * The Forum symbolises all human civilisation. It is the symbol of the common meeting ground—the common sentiments and needs of human beings, where rancors are laid aside for the business, civic, "civilised" pursuits. It is the symbol of human greatness, also, for the Roman never suffered the common necessities to force upon him an ignoble peace. The battleground became the centre of civic life, but only on condition that the interests for which men should combat were never sacrificed to the interests for which men should co-operate.

There are seventy colored illustrations in the book. The artist shows the Forum, the Pantheon, the Colosseum, the Fountain of Trevi, some dwelling places of Cardinals and noble families, churches, Roman peasants, gardens, &c., which he

A Town in Persia.

Napier Malcolm has written in "Five Years in a Persian Town," which is about to be issued by E. P. Dutton & Co., what he calls a "short sketch." It should not, he adds, be mistaken for a book of travel. He describes Yezd, where he lived for five years. He writes about the Yezdi's life, character, and mental attitude toward the missionary, and "something of the way in which the modern missionary attempts to meet this attitude." An idea of the scope and contents of the volume may be had from the summary in the concluding chapter:

We have seen, first of all, the strange staccato effect of Persian scenery, particularly of that which meets the eye of the Yezdi, and have noticed how this has influenced the Yezdi's mind. Then we have seen the extreme insularity of the town, and how this has given rise to symptoms which resemble intense fanatical bigotry. * * * Then we have tried to discover the essential system of Islam and to decide whether or not the Persian Shah has been greatly influenced by the prophet's life and teaching. * * * An attempt has also been made to explain the religiosity of the Mohammedan, and to show that it is neither hypocrisy nor yet religion in the Western sense. Then there was a chapter on the Yezdi's character. * * * After that there was an attempt to show the peculiar nature of the search after truth that is just now going on in Persia, and very particularly in Yezd. * * * Lastly, I have tried to show that towns like Yezd present a field not only workable for one class of missionary organization, but approachable in many different ways.

There are a number of illustrations from photographs by the author and others, and some colored drawings by a native artist.

MAY FORCE OUT HOOKER TO AVOID EXTRA SESSION

Strong Pressure Will Be Used to Obtain Resignation.

GOV. HIGGINS VISITS PLATT

Meeting Was to Discuss Bills Now Awaiting Signature—Railway Board May Not Be Enlarged.

That Gov. Higgins may not sign the bill creating two additional Railroad Commissioners, that strong political pressure will be used upon Supreme Court Justice Warren B. Hooker to get him to resign and thereby remove the necessity for a special session of the Legislature, and that the Governor is flooded with applications for places on the State Commission of Gas and Electricity were three pieces of information made known yesterday as a result of half an hour's conference between Gov. Higgins and Senator Platt at the Fifth Avenue Hotel.

Senator Platt arrived in the city in the early morning, and Gov. Higgins reached the Albemarle shortly after noon. The Governor called on the Senator by appointment at the Fifth Avenue shortly after 3 o'clock. Senator Platt had sent word to Gov. Higgins that he would like to see him about certain legislation pending before him, if convenient. The conference was short, because Senator Platt had arranged to take the 4 o'clock train back to Highland Mills. He had expected the Governor to call earlier in the day.

An embarrassing and at the same time amusing incident occurred in connection with the sending of the Governor's card to Mr. Platt's room. The card was given to a boy, who did not know the Governor. When he took the card to Senator Platt, the Senator asked what the name was.

"It is McGuire or McGinnis," said the boy.

The Senator said to tell the gentleman he could not see him. The boy reported the Senator's message to the Governor as the Governor was standing with some friends in the corridor. The Governor looked surprised and embarrassed, but made no comment. One of his friends, realizing that a mistake had been made, went to the desk, explanations were made, and the Governor was escorted to the Senator's room at once.

At the end of the interview Senator Platt was in a hurry to catch his train, and had little to say about what passed between him and the Governor.

DISCUSSED LIGHTING COMMISSION.

"I don't think the Governor will sign the bill creating two additional members of the Railroad Commission," said the Senator, "but that is merely my personal opinion and not based upon anything which the Governor said. We discussed the State Lighting Commission bill and other matters, but there were no important conclusions reached."

On leaving Senator Platt Gov. Higgins went at once to his suite in the Albemarle. When seen there he said:

"The Senator and I discussed three subjects, of which the State Lighting Commission bill was one and another was a bill in which Senator Platt is personally interested on account of a friend."

The Governor would not say what the bill in which Senator Platt is specially interested is, but it is understood to be the bill taking from the Board of Aldermen the franchise-giving power. It was a matter of current gossip in Albany at the session that that bill had been handed to Senator Platt by Mr. Cassatt.

When asked if he and the Senator had discussed appointments to the new commissions the Governor said that nothing would be done about those places until he had acted upon the bills creating the commissions. Responding to an inquiry as to whether there were many applicants for places on the State Commission of Gas and Electricity and the State Water Commission Gov. Higgins said:

"I do not believe I will have the slightest difficulty in finding gentlemen who will be willing to accept. The Water Commission bill gives the Governor the power to fix the compensation which the Commissioners shall receive. I suggested that such a provision be incorporated in the bill because I thought that, inasmuch as the Commissioners, after having passed upon the questions involved in New York's acquisition of new water rights, might not have anything else to do for a year or more, it would be in the nature of 'graft' to fix a large salary for those places. Since it has become known what my ideas are on that subject there has been considerable shifting on the part of applicants for Commissionerships from the Water Commission to the Lighting Commission, the members of which are to receive a salary of $8,000 annually."

ODELL SUPPORTING HALPIN?

Gov. Higgins said he did not know that William Halpin, Chairman of the Republican County Committee, was an applicant for appointment as a member of the Lighting Commission. It is said that State Chairman Odell will urge Mr. Halpin's appointment. Mr. Halpin is now a State Tax Commissioner at a salary of $5,000 a year.

With respect to the special session of the Legislature, Gov. Higgins said:

"The session will be called either for June or for late in the Fall. The members of the Legislature are divided in their opinion as to which would be the best period, but they are all opposed to coming to Albany in the middle of the Summer. I haven't decided what subjects will be brought before the special session. The Constitution does not require that I should specify in the call what will be taken up. I can recommend to the Legislature from time to time after it is in session."

On the subject of gas he said:

"There are some who think it would be good policy to push the gas legislation, and some hold to the contrary. Opinion on that subject is divided all over the State."

The Governor returned to Albany on an afternoon train. He said before his departure that he had so many bills before him that he would have to give part of the Sabbath to their consideration.

If Senator Platt's opinion that the Governor will veto the bill adding two members to the Railroad Commission should prove correct, George W. Aldridge, the Republican leader of Monroe County, probably will be offered a place on the State Lighting Commission. The only other names being mentioned in connection with the Lighting Commission are those of Charles E. Hughes, who was the attorney for the Stevens Committee; William Halpin, and Theodore P. Gilman.

Forbids Misuse of Badges.

ALBANY, May 20.—Before leaving here to-day the Governor signed the bills introduced by Assemblyman Grattan for the purpose of strengthening the law against the unauthorized use of the names and badges of various patriotic, fraternal, and secret societies, and designed particularly to protect the order of Elks.

TURF CLUB PUTS UP BARS.

Objection to Women Guests Causes Action by Club Authorities.

Objections by members of the Turf and Field Club to certain of the women guests of associate members who have occupied seats in the club boxes at Belmont Park at the meeting now in progress have caused the authorities of the club to decide that for the future restrictions shall be placed on the issuance of cards admitting guests to the club stand inclosure.

The objections raised concerned several women, whose names are familiar to New Yorkers, and who have attracted much public attention by their betting operations, one in particular having been talked of for a time as a "woman plunger."

On each important race day of the meeting this woman has occupied a box in the inclosure reserved for members, while the other women to whom objection was made have appeared in boxes and also on the lawn before the club stand, escorted by "annual subscribers," as the associate members now are designated, and by male guests of the club.

Cards or tickets of admission to club privileges will hereafter be recorded by numbers as issued, so that the responsibility for introducing objectionable persons may be fixed beyond question.

VIGILANCE BANDS FIGHTS GAS.

Philadelphia Citizens Form Committee to Influence Votes on Lease.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, May 20.—At a secret meeting to-day, prominent citizens decided to organize a vigilance committee with a branch in every ward in the city. The general plan contemplates the formation of ward organizations whose sole duty it will be to influence members of the City Councils. The effrontery of the local machine in jamming the gas lease through Councils is responsible for this procedure.

The ward committees are to have no political complexion. They will be formed at once, so that the work of asking Councilmen to uphold the Mayor's expected veto of the ordinance may begin promptly.

Oscar Noll, an Assistant Commissioner of Highways and a member of the Republican City Committee from the Thirty-seventh Ward, was summoned before Mayor Weaver to-day and suspended, pending investigation of his presence at the meeting of the City Councils last Thursday.

In view of the fight occasioned by the passage of the gas lease ordinance, a number of city officers who have been serving as members of the Division and Ward Committees throughout the city, to-day forwarded their resignations as members of such committees. Whether Mayor Weaver was directly responsible for this move could not be learned.

The leaders are momentarily expecting the announcement that the Mayor has broken with them. Insurance Commissioner Durham, Senator McNichol, Select Councilman Seger, and other close political friends were in Atlantic City to-day, but were kept fully advised regarding every move made by the Mayor.

Rudolph Blankenburg, Chairman of the Committee of Seventy, and Francis B. Reeves, President of the Girard National Bank and member of the Committee of Nine, together with several Councilmen who voted against the lease, had conferences with the Mayor to-day. It was intimated to-night by persons close to Mayor Weaver that he would not hesitate to ask for the resignation of his entire Cabinet to strike at the organization.

BEEF TRUST WINS VICTORY.

Montana Court's Decision Adverse to the State.

Special to The New York Times.

HELENA, Mont., May 20.—Holding that the Montana statute is violative of the Constitution of the United States in this particular, Judge Henry C. Smith of the department of the District Court of Lewis and Clark County, sustained to-day the demurrer of the defendants in what are commonly known as the Beef Trust cases, and proceedings are therefore at an end, for the time being, at least.

The case is that of the State of Montana against the Armour Packing Company, Swift & Co., the Cudahy Packing Company, and the Hammond Packing Company of Chicago and Pueblo, and was started by Attorney General James Donovan before the expiration of his term of office last Winter.

An information was filed by the Attorney General, who had the agents of the companies arrested. Lawyers representing the defendants moved the discharge of the agents on the ground that no offense was charged against them, and the court ruled in their favor. A few weeks ago the matter was revived by Attorney General Albert J. Galen and Lawyer Gunn filed a demurrer to the information on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to show a public offense on the part of the defendant companies.

When the demurrer came up for argument before Judge Smith to-day Mr. Gunn based his argument mainly on the fact that the State statute relating to trusts excepts persons engaged in horticultural and agricultural pursuits from the operations of the law, and that therefore the statute is unconstitutional because violative of the provision of the Federal Constitution prohibiting a State from depriving persons of equal protection at the hands of the law.

The State will appeal.

SITE OF PIRATE'S HOME SOLD.

Pearl and Hanover Street Corner Where Kidd Lived 200 Years Ago.

The southwest corner of Pearl and Hanover Streets, where stood, about 200 years ago, the residence of Capt. Kidd, has just been bought by Charles E. Rushmore, through the firm of L. J. Phillips & Co. The immediate corner was sold by the Post estate, and the adjoining parcel by August Klipstein—the two together making a plot about 40 by 68 feet, upon which there are now two four-story buildings.

Kidd lived in the original house on this site during the closing years of the seventeenth century. The house was built about 1650 by Govert Loockermans. The property was inherited by his stepdaughter, wife of Jacob Leisler, from whom it passed to various owners, and finally to the widow of William Cox, who in May, 1693, became Mrs. Kidd.

BOOKMAKERS PUZZLED BY FREE BETTING RING

Believe Struggle Postponed Until Gravesend Meeting Opens.

DWYER MAY BEAR THE BRUNT

Increase in Price of Admission and Separate Inclosure for Layers Among the Possibilities.

A betting ring, free of charge for special privileges, was open to bookmakers at the Belmont Park race course yesterday, and for the second day in the newest phase of the contention between the layers of odds and the track management, the betting men transacted business without cost. They were still wondering, however, what was behind the unprecedented move by the track managers, and what the next development might be.

Open and free as was the ring it was so only to men who have been actively occupied there in the early part of the meeting or who are well known to John Cavanagh, manager of the inclosure for the track owners. Metropolitan Turf Association members still had their places in the first line, or "big ring," although there was no recognition of their association as a body, and the back line men made the usual rear guard, and accepted the overflow wagers that the front line let escape. A horde of men willing to become bookmakers if no fee was required were on hand, but learned early that there were limitations to the betting privilege.

Three new men of the Metropolitan Association took places in the first line as though they had been transacting business at the track throughout the meeting. Their coming swelled the total of the Metropolitan members to sixty-two, and Cavanagh then put in six men from the back line, making a "big ring" of sixty-eight layers. The minimum number for the first line early in the meeting was fixed at eighty.

All the layers came to the track prepared to pay the usual fee for the betting privilege, but they were informed at the start of the day's business that there would be no collection. Similar action was taken in the field stand, where the usual number of bookmakers transacted business without the payment of any fee. The bookmakers, however, were required to pay admission to the track, the M. T. A. buttons no longer being recognized, and badges that had been issued to bookmakers at the opening of the meeting were taken up.

The bookmakers began and ended the day in ignorance of what the move by the track managers means. Few are inclined to believe the report current Friday afternoon that the managers of the race tracks intend to surrender voluntarily the revenue that the betting ring heretofore has paid. It was asserted again that the track managers would forego that revenue and try to replace it by increasing the price of admission, but no authority for the statement could be found. The pushed bookmakers of the Metropolitan Turf Association will meet at their clubhouse in West Twenty-sixth Street at 4 o'clock this afternoon to discuss the situation.

The bookmakers expect the free ring to last through the three days remaining of the Belmont Park meeting, and are preparing themselves for the introduction of something new in the management of betting affairs when racing opens at the Gravesend track of the Brooklyn Jockey Club next Thursday. Philip J. Dwyer, the President of the Brooklyn Jockey Club, has had much experience in the conduct of turf warfare, and has fought resolutely and successfully every effort to deprive his track of its profits. His most notable fights have been made against lawyers acting on behalf of poolroom keepers who sought revenge on him for the part charged to him in causing the closing of the poolrooms, and the bookmakers therefore have decided that the burden of the new controversy is to fall on the Dwyer track.

The layers scoff at the idea that President Dwyer will surrender the $6,000 to $7,000 daily revenue that his club drew under the old conditions. That he will depend on an increase in the price of admission to make up the loss is not regarded as at all probable, because the stakes and purses for the meeting were graded in their value according to receipts under old conditions, and the layers do not believe that President Dwyer intends to start in on any business venture with a prospective loss confronting him.

The report that his old enemies of the poolrooms have planned to renew their attacks on the Dwyer track has been current for more than a week, but Mr. Dwyer had nothing to say on the subject yesterday. If the fight is started there, in the poolroom men's threatened effort to break up racing in New York, the litigation will be in courts within the limits of New York, whereas had the attack been made on Belmont Park, the cases would have gone into courts in Queens County.

The provision of a special inclosure for betting, which it is asserted would be permissible under the law, has been suggested as a possible means of keeping up the track earnings without compromising the racing associations in connection with the betting interests.

BIG PITCHBLENDE DEPOSIT.

Colorado Miner Finds Largest Quantity of Radium-Producing Ore.

Special to The New York Times.

DENVER, Col., May 20.—What is regarded as the richest known deposit of pitchblende, from which radium is obtained, has been discovered in Colorado. L. G. Nesmith, a mine worker, is the owner.

The value of the pitchblende is $2 a pound. Up to this time pitchblende has been found in crevices in rocks, scarcely thicker than a knifeblade, but Mr. Nesmith has followed his vein until he has found a large body of the ore. During a recent visit here he exhibited a piece said to be the largest in the world. It has made one shipment to Germany, and will soon go there with a large lot.

CAR HITS GATES'S CARRIAGE.

Mr. Gates Not In It When It is Smashed in Sixth Avenue.

John W. Gates's victoria was smashed by a Sixth Avenue car at Thirty-second Street yesterday afternoon at 2 o'clock. The motorman, John Slattery of 52 Amsterdam Avenue, could not hold his car, which threw the Gates vehicle against an elevated railroad pillar.

The victoria was put out of commission. Its driver, Thomas Duff of 103 West Fifty-second Street, was only bruised. He wouldn't go to the hospital.

Mr. Gates wasn't in the victoria. Duff was driving it over to the Waldorf-Astoria, where Mr. Gates lives, when the car caught him.

TIFFANY & CO. ROBBED?

Parts of Excelsior Diamond Worth $90,000 Said to Have Vanished.

It was reported yesterday that diamonds valued at $90,000 had disappeared from Tiffany & Co.'s store in Union Square on May 4. The diamonds said to be missing numbered only three, and were parts of the famous Excelsior, which was found at Jagersfontein, South Africa, in 1893.

That big stone was cut into ten diamonds, with an aggregate value of nearly half a million dollars. The weight of the Excelsior in the rough was 971 carats. It was the largest diamond ever cut up. The division of the huge gem was made by the Tiffanys, and five of the individual diamonds were sold.

The stones now said to be missing were given to a workman late last month to be set in rings. He is an old and trusted employe, and no suspicion attaches to him. When he finished his work on May 4 he wrapped the diamonds up in the usual manner and placed them with other packages containing valuable jewels, to be locked in the safe.

The supposition is that they were taken between that moment and the time when the manager of the department stored such packages as he found ready.

C. T. Cook, President of the Tiffany Company, declined last night to confirm or deny the story of the disappearance of the gems.

George F. Kunz of Tiffany's said, last night, when asked about the missing diamonds belonging to the firm, that neither the Excelsior diamond nor any part of it was missing. He would say no more.

ODELL SUITS DISCONTINUED.

Action Taken on ex-Governor's $170,000 Shipbuilding Actions.

NEWBURG, N. Y., May 20.—The shipbuilding suits recently brought by ex-Gov. Benjamin B. Odell, Jr., were discontinued to-day before Judge Dickey, in the cases of the defendants James T. Boothroyd and John W. Young.

The case of Benjamin B. Odell, Jr., vs. the Mercantile Trust Company, which was an action to recover $170,000 for alleged fraud in inducing Mr. Odell to invest in the bonds of the United States Shipbuilding Company, was on the April calendar of the Supreme Court at Newburg, but was put off on account of the absence of Mr. Odell in Europe. The case was to have come up again next month.

Gov. Odell, in a statement made to THE NEW YORK TIMES last year concerning the Shipbuilding suits, said that he was acting entirely for himself in bringing the suits, and was trying to get back what he had lost on the deal. He said his actions were against several firms and corporations which were originally interested in the Shipbuilding Company. When he went into the concern he paid about $200,000 for the stock which he had received, and when it was sold at auction he received between $40,000 and $50,000. It was for the difference, he said, he went into the courts. He said he did not know who got the stock he sold, but that he was going after the "original thieves" to get back his losses.

"When the case comes to trial," he said, "the people will see that everything is open and above board. I have been charged frequently in one of the New York newspapers with being wrongfully connected with another business concern, and with using my political influence to the concern's advantage. This is not true, and the people will see at the trial of this case that my part in it has been purely a business one, such as any man might have."

ROBBERS BURN OIL DEPOT.

Murder Watchman and Then Set Fire to Building at Raleigh.

Special to The New York Times.

RALEIGH, N. C., May 20.—The depot of the Standard Oil Company here was destroyed by an incendiary fire last night after the watchman had been murdered and the safe robbed.

There were five tanks at the depot, each holding 30,000 gallons. A safe was kept in the office, but it never contained more than $100, and last night there was only $15 in it.

At 2 A. M. to-day a policeman saw that the office building was on fire and turned in an alarm. The firemen were unable to do more than prevent the conflagration from spreading to other buildings. Strickland, the watchman, could not be found.

The oil in the tanks caught fire very soon and exploded. The fire was so brilliant that the people thought a great portion of the city was in flames.

To-day, as soon as an examination of the ruins could be made, it was found that the safe had been cut with a chisel and that the lock had been blown off. In the back part of the premises, where the mules and wagons were kept, the charred body of Strickland was found. His skull had been crushed by a terrible blow. The lantern he carried was found in front of the office.

There are two theories. One is that the watchman caught the robbers at the safe and was killed, his body being carried to the stable. The other is that the watchman was attacked in the stable and killed; that the safe was then robbed, and to hide the crime the premises were set on fire. The verdict of the Coroner's jury is that Strickland was murdered and the premises fired to conceal the murder and robbery.

The loss is $60,000, with no insurance.

PITTSBURG THEATRE PANIC.

Smoke from Burning Paper Causes Rush for the Exits.

PITTSBURG, May 20.—During the vaudeville performance at the Grand Opera House to-night the audience of 2,500 persons was thrown into a panic by the sight of smoke coming from under the stage. The orchestra stopped playing and the operation of a miniature mannekin exhibit ceased.

Some of the people cried fire, and in spite of the efforts of the attaches, a rush was made for the exits. About half of the audience reached the street before quiet was restored.

The alarm of fire brought many downtown companies into the crowded Fifth Avenue, and started a turmoil there also. The smoke was caused by flames in a huge box under the stage in which old programmes were kept. The organized brigade among theatre employes had a stream of water on the blaze in a few moments and put it out without damage of any kind. No one was injured and the loss was immaterial.

What caused the fire is not known. After the blaze had been extinguished the performance was resumed.

CESNOLA'S COLLECTION STOLEN FROM DAUGHTER

Art Treasures Found in Elevator Boy's Hall Room.

COLLECTOR HIMSELF, MAYBE

He Doesn't Seem to Have Pawned What He Pilfered—Well-Gowned Women Visit Him.

Piled up and hung in the hall bedroom of Frank McCarthy, an elevator boy at the Seymour Hotel, detectives from the East Fifty-first Street Station found last night a small fortune in paintings, bric-a-brac, autograph copies of famous books, and rare pieces of sculpture.

Twice a cab made a trip to the house of the boy, at 777 Eighth Avenue, to bring the stuff to the station. It all lay in Capt. Lantry's office last night. Its value can hardly be reckoned. The police calculate that the part recovered is worth at least $5,000. More may be found.

The detectives arrested young McCarthy at the hotel and locked him up charged with having systematically stolen from the suite of Mrs. Guy E. Baker at the Seymour. She is the daughter of the late Gen. Palma di Cesnola, director of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, and the art objects were out of a collection personally gathered and given by him to her.

Mrs. Baker and her husband, Capt. Baker, left the city for their country place up State three days ago, and the detectives do not know whether they have recovered all the articles she has lost, nor can they properly estimate their value. In the absence of pawn tickets in McCarthy's room they believe that he kept all he stole. One suggestion was that the youth may have stolen the stuff because he was himself a lover of art.

The prisoner is a clean, well-groomed young man, with a face indicating no little refinement. He was visited late at night by two expensively dressed women, who refused to give the police their names.

Capt. and Mrs. Baker have lived at the Seymour a long time. Some two months ago they began to miss articles from their rooms, on the ninth floor of the hotel. One by one they disappeared, and no clue could be found to indicate who the thief might be.

At first only small things were taken, such as miniatures, rare vases, a book now and then with the signature and well wishes of the author written on its pages for Gen. di Cesnola. By and by the thief took larger things. Even pictures were missed from the walls.

In the load hauled from the young man's room last night was a small picture bearing the signature "Murillo," and another signed "Arenz." Whether these are copies or originals can be told only by an expert or by Mrs. Baker herself.

Capt Lantry expects that Mrs. Baker will come home immediately to look after the recovered art works.

When Mrs. Baker first began to miss things from her rooms she reported the fact to the East Fifty-first Street police. Detectives Conroy and Summers were assigned to catch the thief. They suspected some one in the building and watched the employes. They soon came to the conclusion that it was young McCarthy, the good looking elevator boy, who had the best opportunity to enter the rooms unobserved.

McCarthy had a passkey to all the apartments. Though no one had seen him carrying away such articles as had been missed, suspicion rested on him. So last night the detectives seized him, took out of his pockets the key to his Eighth Avenue hall bedroom, and went there to investigate.

The detectives were dazed by what they saw. Antiques and works of art almost choked the room. Some had evidently come in so recently that McCarthy hadn't had time to arrange them to suit his aesthetic tastes. These were dumped on the floor.

J. C. Miller is the proprietor of the Seymour. He told the police that the things stolen must be worth several thousand dollars at least.

Young McCarthy had been in the employ of the hotel only a few months. Little is known about him in the boarding house at 777 Eighth Avenue, where he lived.

PARK LABORER'S BRAVERY.

Two Little Girls Saved from Drowning at the Calvert Picnic.

The John Calvert Association's annual May walk, given for the children of the Thirty-fifth Assembly District, yesterday would have ended in a double tragedy had it not been for the bravery of Thomas Christie, an employe of the Park Department, who saved two little girls from drowning at the risk of his own life.

The John Calvert Association gives an outing to the children every year. Yesterday's was attended by 3,000 children, who gathered in Crotona Park and had the time of their lives. In the afternoon they began a mammoth game of tag. Grace and Ella Grogan, nine and eleven years old, were in it.

The players were grouped on the hills about Indian Pond, which is more than six feet deep and several acres in size. It is shut in at one end by an embankment. At this end Grace was "tagged," and started after her sister. In her excitement she slipped over the embankment. Ella caught at her dress as she went over, and was dragged after her.

Christie was working on the opposite side of the pond. He was the only man in sight. He heard the screams of the children, and racing to the edge of the pond, threw off his coat and plunged to the rescue.

Grace was brought up unconscious. Then Christie saved Ella, diving to the bottom after her. She was unconscious.

An ambulance was called, and volunteers began working to save the children. Before the ambulance arrived both had been restored. They were sent to their home, 1,894 Bathgate Avenue, in a cab.

Officers of the association, when they learned of Christie's bravery, started a purse for him.

KNOXVILLE MERCHANT SHOT.

Attacked in His Office by Three Men —Wounded, 'Phones for Help.

Special to The New York Times.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., May 20.—Hal. Dick, a merchant of this city, while seated at his desk at his store in the Northern portion of the city to-night was surprised by three masked men who entered with a demand that he throw up his hands.

"Wait a minute," replied Mr. Dick, who stepped in the direction of his cash drawer, with the intention of procuring his revolver. The three men fired on him and all of the shots took effect. The intruders then fled from the store, and Dick walked to the telephone and called up Police Headquarters.

"Send a doctor; I think I will die," were his words and he fainted from loss of blood. Officers were dispatched in pursuit of the three men, but were unable to obtain any clue.

IT'S ALL IN THE BUSINESS.

What the Traffic Policeman Said When the Car Knocked Him Down.

Assisting a white-haired woman across Broadway at Seventeenth Street yesterday afternoon, Policeman Frederick Lubke of the Traffic Squad was knocked down by a north-bound Broadway car. He pushed the old woman across the track just in time to save her.

Lubke was picked up and sent to the New York Hospital. His head was gashed and his body was bruised. The old woman he had helped across the street remained at his side until he was put in the ambulance.

"I'm so sorry," she said to Lubke.

"Don't mention it, Madame," answered the policeman. "It's all in the business."

BADLY HURT BY AUTO.

Blacksmith Who Didn't See Heavy Car Knocked Twenty Feet.

Thomas Lally, a blacksmith, living with his family at 529 East Sixteenth Street, was removed to Bellevue Hospital early this morning unconscious and suffering from severe injuries received by being struck by a heavy automobile at Twenty-third Street and First Avenue.

The car was operated by Frederick Funk, of 772 Ninth Avenue. Lally was homeward bound, when the machine, according to Policeman Flynn, of the East Twenty-second Street Station, approached rapidly from the East. Lally apparently did not see the auto, for he walked directly in its path. When it struck him he was thrown twenty feet.

In the auto at the time were two men and two women, who gave their names as Mr. and Mrs. James Rascovar of 16 West Eighty-second Street, and Mr. and Mrs. Henry Myers of 486 Manhattan Avenue.

ROBBERY BY TAX SALES.

Scheme by Which Ring Gained Titles in San Francisco Uncovered.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 20.—A scheme has been in operation in the Tax Collector's office, according to The Chronicle, by which nearly $1,500,000 worth of property has been secured for little more than $100,000. Taxpayers have been charged wrongly with delinquencies, and in some cases have not even known that arrears were charged against them.

The profits have gone to a ring of tax scalpers, assisted by the defaulting Collector and his subordinates. Records have been manipulated.

CUMMINS VETOES BATH TUB.

Blocks Purchase for Iowa Capitol—Buys His Own, He Says.

Special to The New York Times.

DES MOINES, Ia., May 20.—Gov. Cummins informed the State Capitol Commission to-day that when he wanted a bathtub he would purchase one with his private funds and not ask the State to bear the expense.

The commission decided some time ago that the Governor's apartments at the State House should be equipped with a bathtub. An immense porcelain tank, weighing 1,840 pounds, was ordered. Gov. Cummins knew nothing of the matter until the huge tub was brought to the Capitol and a large force of plumbers reported for work.

The Governor stated that his successors might need something of the kind, but he should forbid the expense. The Capitol Commission is embarrassed, as it has a costly bathtub on its hands.

SHOEFUL OF SILVER.

A Find for Jersey Boys Who Kicked About an Old Valise.

NEWARK, N. J., May 20.—Roy Hunter and two other boys, who live in Harrison, found a satchel in an old barn at Harrison Avenue and Seventh Street yesterday. Workmen began to tear down the barn yesterday. One of them came across the valise and threw it away. It seemed to contain only an old shoe. The boys began tossing the valise about and out came the silver from the shoe.

LINEVITCH INTENDS TO ACCEPT BATTLE

But It Is Still Doubtful Whence Oyama's Blow Will Fall.

RUSSIAN ATTACKS REPULSED

Three Mixed Columns Driven Northward and 500 Cavalry Dispersed with Heavy Loss.

GUNSHU PASS, May 20.—A general engagement is imminent.

Field Marshal Oyama is deploying heavy forces against Gen. Linevitch's left, and is contracting his troops along the centre, but his base is opposite the Russian right. It is not yet clear which wing is making a demonstration and which will deliver the main blow.

It is evident from Linevitch's preparations that he intends to accept a decisive battle.

TOKIO, May 20.—It was announced this evening rom the headquarters of the Japanese armies in the field that three Russian columns of mixed forces advanced southward on May 18 to the vicinity of the railroad. The Japanese engaged them and drove them northward.

Simultaneously five hundred Russian cavalry attacked a Japanese field hospital at Kang-Pin, on the right bank of the Liao River. Japanese artillery and infantry dispersed the attacking cavalrymen, inflicting heavy loss upon them.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 20.—The War Office confirms the report from Gunshu Pass that Marshal Oyama is on the eve of taking the general offensive, and no doubt is entertained here that Gen. Linevitch will accept battle in his present positions.

The General Staff believes Oyama's advance was precipitated by the doubt regarding the issue of the coming naval battle. With an unbeaten army in front of him, Oyama's position might be critical if his communications with Japan were interrupted even temporarily.

FRENCH ADMIRAL WATCHFUL.

Again Inspecting Coast — Fleet of Junks to Meet Rojestvensky?

SAIGON, May 20.—Admiral de Jonquières, the French naval commander, sailed from here to-day on the cruiser Guichen.

His destination was not announced, but it is understood that he is going to make another inspection of the cost to see if French neutrality is being infringed.

HONGKONG, May 20.—According to information received here to-day the 150 deeply laden junks, presumably loaded with provisions for the Russian fleet, which were sighted on May 16 twenty miles off Cape St. John by a correspondent who proceeded from here to Kwang-Chou Bay, north of the Island of Hainan, have left the vicinity of Cape St. John.

It is stated that they are probably seeking to effect a junction with Admiral Rojestvensky's fleet.

ORGIES AT HARBIN.

Champagne Flowing Like Water—Linevitch Takes Action.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sunday, May 21.—Dispatches from Harbin report a carnival of drunkenness and dissipation among the hangers-on of the rear army. Champagne at $10 a bottle is said to be flowing like water, dives are abundant, and a multitude of sharpers and gamblers are reaping a rich harvest.

The Emperor, at Gen. Linevitch's request, has appointed a new Provost Marshal General, and the Commander in Chief intends to wage a vigorous campaign to restore order and institute satisfactory conditions in the rear.

NO SEIZURE BY GERMANY.

Explanation of How the Report About Hai-Chow Originated.

PEKING, May 20.—In an official denial of the report of the seizure by Germany of the Island of Iyon-Chow and the Bay of Hai-Chow, the Chinese Government has furnished an explanation of the origin of the report.

There is much shipping passing the island, and the Germans decided to survey and chart the vicinity, but failed to notify China of such intention, hence the misunderstanding.

The Chinese complain that the Germans did not ask for permission

WOMAN STRANGLED, ARMS MARKED BY BONDS

Physician Reported Death but Said Nothing of Circumstances.

SHE HAD RECEIVED ANNUITY

Lawrence Harnett, Her Husband, Is in Philippines, but Man Called Daily Until Wednesday.

A woman, forty years old, who, as Mrs. Newell, engaged a rear room on the first floor at 205 East Fifteenth Street on May 15, and who, the police say, is Mrs. Lawrence Harnett, was found dead there yesterday afternoon under circumstances that point strongly to murder. Seemingly she had been strangled to death with a towel, which was found tied tightly about her neck.

Mrs. Minnie Wilkinson, the landlady, had asked her lodger for her rent on Friday, when it was due, but she was asked to wait. She did not see her tenant yesterday and in the afternoon knocked at the door to ask again. Receiving no response, she notified Policeman Sullivan, who forced in the door.

On the bed lay the woman, and a Dr. Bandler, who was summoned, said that she was dead. The case was reported simply as one of sudden death, and nothing further was thought of the matter until Capt. Hussy of the East Twenty-second Street Station called at the house to look over the case.

With Policeman Sullivan he examined the body and then the towel about the neck. It was tied very tightly, and the white collar underneath was pressed deep into the flesh. The face was purple, as though from strangulation.

About 7 o'clock Coroner Goldenkranz was called into the case. Then it was discovered that the right arm had been bent almost double under the body. About the right wrist was tied a silk muffler, and to this was fastened a piece of stout twine, the end of which appeared to have been cut with a knife.

The left wrist bore a deep red mark, as though the string had also been fastened to it, but had been cut later. No knife was found, but from the position of the woman it appeared that she could not have tied her wrists thus herself.

Detective Sergeant Carey from Police Headquarters was assigned to the case on the application of Capt. Hussey, and his investigations during the evening resulted in the discovery of much concerning the woman's past life.

According to Carey, the woman's husband, Lawrence Harnett, is in the United States service, in the Philippine Islands, as shown by a number of letters, the addresses of which showed that she had formerly lived with a Mrs. Joseph Cassidy, at 190 Third Avenue. Mrs. Cassidy called at the East Fifteenth Street address and identified the dead woman.

There were a number of letters among the dead woman's effects, addressed from Dublin, Ireland, which seemed to indicate that she had been receiving an annual allowance of about $1,000 on the condition that she should remain single. These letters were addressed to Miss Myra O. Newell, she having apparently kept from her family her marriage to Harnett.

These letters seemingly ceased about seven months ago, having previously arrived each month.

On May 11 last, Mrs. Cassidy says, Mrs. Harnett left her home, owing her $165 for board. She left the house, saying that she was going to Bath Beach to look for work. In spite of this she returned the next day and said that she had taken a room at the house on East Fifteenth Street. Mrs. Cassidy protested and urged her to remain at her house, even without paying any board.

Mrs. Wilkinson says that Mrs. Harnett appeared at the house with a man, who was believed to be her husband. He is described as being middle aged, with a black mustache and beard.

He called at the house daily. Nothing has been seen of him since last Wednesday. The last letter from Harnett was dated Feb. 23 last. In it he said that he was going from Cavite to the General Hospital at the Presidio, owing to illness. He said that he had fourteen months extra to serve because he had deserted several months ago.

All the letters from Harnett were in loving terms, except the last. This was seemingly in reply to a request for money, and its tone was changed.

The letter concluded: "I'm too disappointed to ever sign 'Your loving husband' again."

The police believe that the appearance of the man visitor may have been due to the effect of her husband's words.

An autopsy will be held.

FAMILY STRANGELY UNITED.

Parents on Vessel Going to Manila Meet Children Returning Home.

Special to The New York Times.

POUGHKEEPSIE, May 20.—The separations from home, family, and kindred imposed by army life bring about some interesting incidents, one of which is recorded by a passenger on the United States transport Buford, who thus describes it in a letter to a friend in this city:

"Col. Joseph F. Huston of the Nineteenth United States Infantry, with his wife, is a passenger on the Buford, en route with his command from Vancouver Barracks, Washington, to the Philippines. Col. and Mrs. Buford have two daughters married to officers in the Fourteenth Infantry, which was at the same time on its way home from Manila on the transport Sheridan, the two regiments exchanging places.

"Col. and Mrs. Huston had not seen their children for two years and had no prospect of seeing them for a long time to come unless the Buford and Sheridan should meet on the way at Honolulu, the only stopping place, which was not probable.

"The Buford reached Honolulu on April 12, and the day following her passengers were delighted to see a big vessel bearing the United States flag coming in from the west. She was the Sheridan and came to her berth almost alongside the Buford.

"There was a happy reunion of the Huston family which lasted for two days. At 12 noon on the 15th of April the Sheridan left for home, and at 4 P. M. the same day the Buford proceeded on her way to the Philippines, some of her passengers not expecting to meet again for at least another two years."

Three Officers of Texas Institution Indicted for Violating Law.

DALLAS, Texas, May 20.—J. G. Lowdon, Otto W. Steffens, and W. J. Thompson, President, Vice President, and cashier, respectively, of the American National Bank of Abilene, Texas, have been indicted by a special Federal Grand Jury. They are charged with violating the United States banking laws. One count charges two of the officers with abstracting money from the bank to use in cotton speculation.

Mrs. Livermore Thought Dying.

MELROSE, Mass., May 20.—The physician attending Mrs. Mary A. Livermore, the reformer and author, stated to-night that the patient had a sinking spell last night and since then had been in a semi-comatose condition. He said that she was failing rapidly and that the end was likely to come at any time.

HOSPITAL NURSE GONE.

Miss Jalonick Went Out for a Walk Three Days Ago and Vanished.

The police were asked last night to search for Miss Margaret Jalonick, a nurse attending the St. Luke's Hospital Training School, who has been missing since Wednesday last. Miss Jalonick is described as youthful and comely. She came here from Dallas, Texas, a few months ago, and was popular in the training school. She was devoted to her studies and was anxious to remain at the school until she could be graduated. She knew few people in New York and, her friends in the school say, had no male acquaintances here.

On Wednesday afternoon Miss Jalonick left the hospital, saying that she was going out for a walk. She has not been seen since. It had been her custom to stroll along Riverside Drive for ten or fifteen minutes at a time, but she seldom remained away more than half an hour. Her room showed that she had no intention of remaining away overnight.

The nurse had about $25 in her possession when she went away. Her father, who lives in Dallas, was notified, and he telegraphed that he would hurry to New York to aid in the search for her. He is expected here to-day. Late last night no trace of the girl had been discovered.

Special to The New York Times.

DALLAS, Texas, May 20.—Margaret Jalonick is about twenty-one years old, the daughter of one of the wealthiest citizens of Dallas, and a member of a family socially prominent in this city. Her father, George W. Jalonick, is President of the Southwestern Life Insurance Company of Dallas. Miss Jalonick, before going to New York, declared that God had directed her to relieve the suffering, so she had determined to become a professional nurse.

George W. Jalonick and his brother, Isaac Jalonick, started for New York late last night to assist in the search for the missing girl. They will join Texas friends at the Darlington Hotel to-morrow night or Sunday morning. It is evident that the girl did not contemplate anything rash. Last Wednesday she wrote a note to her father. The postmark shows that it was mailed in New York at 10:35 o'clock that night. It was received at her father's office in Dallas this afternoon. Here is the letter:

My Dear Papa: Inclosed I return you two checks. Please place them in the bank, as I do not need the money. I have decided to remain here, as I like the place, as I believe I wrote you before. I cannot write more now; it is within five minutes of duty. I will write you a letter to-night. Lovingly,

MARGARET.

Associates of Mr. Jalonick are saying that the girl may have been carried away to sea by accident on some steamship. Her mother is ill at the family home in Dallas, and has not been told that Margaret is missing. Mrs. Jalonick believes that her husband has gone to New Orleans on business.

MR. CLEVELAND DECLINED.

Wouldn't See 100 Delaware County Teachers at Princeton Home.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., May 20.—Over 100 women alighted from Trenton trolley cars this afternoon and marched up Nassau Street with determined faces. A large crowd of Princetonians followed the brigade and watched it advance up the driveway to Westlands, the home of ex-President Cleveland. After a few minutes the butler came to the door, and soon returned with an answer that was evidently unsatisfactory, for, with disconsolate looks, the aggregation reversed its steps. The ex-President had refused to give them an audience.

Later it developed that the women were members of the Delaware County Teachers' Association, under the escort of Francis E. Bell, who was determined to show the educators Grover Cleveland as one of the sights of Princeton. The teachers returned to Philadelphia to-night.

UNION SUPPORTS DAMROSCH.

Convention Sends Delegate to Adjust Matters with Local Body.

DETROIT, May 20.—The report of the Executive Board of the American Federation of Musicians sustaining Walter Damrosch, director of the New York Symphony Orchestra, in the case in which it was charged that he had imported three foreign musicians, was received to-day and approved. President Weber of the federation was directed to go to New York at once and try to effect a satisfactory understanding between Director Damrosch and the New York locals.

By a practically unanimous vote the delegates voted to recommend the adoption of a universal uniform for the federation.

After an animated debate, in which it was stated that one band director had made a contract for ninety-nine years, a rule was adopted prohibiting members from making contracts to run longer than one year. Long contracts, it was urged, virtually prevented the federation from having any control of rates.

Canal Engineers Appointed.

WASHINGTON, May 20.—It was announced at the War Department to-day that Brig. Gen. Henry L. Abbott, a retired engineer officer, Mr. Randolph of the Chicago Drainage Canal, and Mr. Schluesler, an engineer of California, have been appointed consulting engineers to the Isthmian Canal Commission in addition to the consulting engineers previously appointed. There are to be twelve engineers, two of whom are yet to be selected.

Gen. Davis Sees the President.

WASHINGTON, May 20.—Secretary Taft and Gen. George B. Davis of the Panama Canal Commission, the latter just returning from the Isthmus, had an interview with the President to-day regarding the general situation in Panama. Gen. Davis has recovered from the malarial attack from which he was suffering when he left Panama.

Cornwall Bank to Pay in Full.

NEWBURG, May 20.—It is likely that the depositors of the National Bank of Cornwall, which went into the hands of the Controller of the Currency on Friday, will not lose anything. The deposits amount to about $20,000. If the Controller will permit, there is a chance that the bank will be reorganized.

Watch Electric Locomotive Tests.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y., May 20.—The delegates to the International Railway Congress on the short tour were the guests of officials of the General Electric and American Locomotive Companies in this city to-day. A series of tests of the New York Central's electric locomotive No. 6,000 were made. The women of the party were entertained at the Country Club.

Sale of Sound Shore Realty.

Seventy-three acres of Sound shore property at New Rochelle is to be sold by H. E. Colwell, auctioneer, in lots and tracts of from one to ten acres. The property was formerly part of the estate of C. Oliver Iselin. It faces the Post Road, and is on the lines both of the New York, New Haven and Hartford and the Rapid Transit Subway Extension railroads.

EFFORT TO END STRIKE IN CHICAGO A FAILURE

Senator Platt's Order to Express Companies Prevents Peace.

REFUSES ANY CONCESSIONS

The Other Employers Willing to Take Back Such Men as They Have Room For.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, May 20.—The council of the Teamsters' Association, after a protracted meeting to-night, determined, because of the attitude of the express companies, to continue the strike. It had been confidently expected that peace would be brought about at the meeting. The express companies were the only element of the Employers' Association which refused to make concessions. The other employers promised to take back such men as they had room for.

Acting, it is said, on orders from Senator T. C. Platt of New York, the United States and other express companies refused to promise anything of the kind. On the contrary, they declared that under no circumstances would they take back any man who had gone out of their employment on a sympathetic strike.

When the terms of surrender were presented to the strikers they balked at the express companies' determination. The joint council went into session, and at midnight issued a statement declaring that the strikers were willing to meet the terms offered by the employers, but that the attitude of the express companies prevented them from signing the agreement. They therefore determined to continue the strike until such time as the express companies should see fit to rescind their decision to blacklist the striking teamsters.

The agents of the company are firm to-night, but it is thought the Employers' Association will bring some influence to bear to make them yield.

The terms announced by the employers were as follows:

The teamsters shall recognize the Employers' Teaming Company as a permanent institution, employing non-union drivers, and the "open shop" to prevail.

All the strikers are to be reinstated wherever vacancies exist, except that the employers will not consider the applications of men who have been guilty of lawless conduct during the strike.

The settlement of the strike with other concerns is not to include the express companies.

Union drivers must deliver goods to express companies irrespective of strike conditions.

Working conditions are to be the same as before the strike, as these, in fact, were never an issue in the strike.

Prosecutions already started in the Federal Court under the injunctions and in the Criminal Court under indictments are to be continued.

President Shea of the Teamsters' Union all day had held out against unconditional surrender, but had been overruled by the members of the National Executive Committee. Gompers was of the opinion that the terms were as good as could be obtained.

An exodus of strike-breakers began this afternoon. More than 300 men who had been imported to take the place of union teamsters started in a body to one railway depot.

Policeman Patrick E. Blackwell died to-day at Mercy Hospital. His death is the tenth ascribed to the teamsters' strike. Blackwell was injured while guarding a Wells-Fargo express wagon.

Sheriff Barrett said to-night after being informed of the action of the teamsters' joint council:

"It simply means that if the strike spreads the troops will have to be called. We have found it difficult to maintain the peace with the force of police and deputies we have had and now that there is a prospect of a much greater body of men being on strike, with all the chances of rioting that it entails, it will be out of the question for us to handle the trouble without the military."

Seeking to avenge the murder of Enoch Carlson, the eight-year-old boy who was shot and killed last Tuesday night by a negro, scores of men armed with revolvers, went forth last night determined to drive the non-union teamsters from the district. Negroes leaving the branch yards of the Peabody Coal Company, at Twenty-sixth Place and Canal Street, were followed and assaulted, and as a result two riots occurred, in which Bernard Endstrand, a union machinist, was shot and probably fatally wounded. Many others were hurt. Six arrests were made.

The first riot which resulted in the shooting of Endstrand occurred at Twenty-sixth Street and Princeton Avenue. George and John Williams, who have been employed as teamsters at the Peabody yards, were on their way home when at Twenty-sixth Street and Princeton Avenue they were attacked by a crowd.

The negroes defended themselves, but the crowd surrounded them, knocking the negroes down, and kicked them about the body. George Williams drew a knife and threatened to kill any person who came near him. His brother John drew a revolver and was holding back a crowd of pursuers.

Again the crowd closed in on negroes and the fight became general when the policeman, Nolan, appeared. With drawn club he ordered the crowd to disperse but was knocked down. At the same time four shots were fired and Endstrand fell to the ground.

The other riot occurred at Thirty-first and Lasalle Streets. Wm. Green and Charles Allison, negroes, were knocked down, kicked and beaten. A riot call brought the police and the crowd was dispersed after the negroes had been terribly beaten.

HELD FOR $6,700 FRAUD.

Baron Rosenbaum Arrested Here on Camden Indictment.

After a search extending over three months Michael Rosenbaum, said to be known in Philadelphia and in Camden, N. J., as Baron Rosenbaum, was arrested in Brooklyn yesterday afternoon on a warrant issued in Camden charging him with embezzlement. The specific charge in the indictment against Rosenbaum is that he embezzled $6,700 intrusted in his hands by Miss Abbie C. Doughton of 639 Market Street, Camden.

Rosenbaum was arrested in the Hotel San Carlos, 69 South Oxford Street. He was stopping there with his wife and the latter's eleven-year-old daughter, Elsie. The arrest was made by Detective Sergeants Brady and McCluskey of the Brooklyn Central Office.

When taken to Brooklyn Police Headquarters Rosenbaum protested his innocence and declared he would retain counsel and fight extradition to New Jersey.

Mrs. Rosenbaum said that her husband had dealt with Miss Doughton merely as a broker, and that the woman's speculative venture had turned out a loss.

Miss Doughton, who is a sister of Isaac Doughton, Deputy State Controller of New Jersey, says she made an investigation which led her to believe that no investment had actually been made.

Some years ago Rosenbaum was employed at a salary of $12,000 a year by the father of John W. Ferror, a manufacturer of crayons, of London, England. When the elder Ferror died the son took Rosenbaum as his partner in the business. There was a dispute, and Ferror, it is said, accused Rosenbaum of defrauding him of $50,000. Rosenbaum came to the United States and Ferror followed, pursuing him to various cities and once causing his arrest. Nothing came of this, however, and Ferror later returned to England.

Rosenbaum is an artist and his wife said last night that he had once painted for Mrs. Richard Croker a miniature portrait of the late Frank Croker. Mrs. Rosenbaum said there was a dispute about the payment for the work, and her husband brought a suit to recover what he claimed to be due him, the case being settled later.

Mrs. Rosenbaum is a daughter of Dr. Lamporter, a Philadelphia physician. About twelve years ago she married Charles Danler, a furrier of that city. The couple was divorced in Providence, Rhode MINISTER BARRETT HERE.

Yellow Fever Problem in Panama Serious, He Says.

John Barrett, Minister to Panama, who has just been transferred to the post of Minister to the United States of Colombia, was among the arrivals from Colon on the Panama liner Advance yesterday. Minister Barrett said that he saw no reason for deceiving the public concerning yellow fever conditions on the Isthmus. The only solution of the health problem down there, he said, was a system of sanitation as nearly perfect as could be made.

"The great problem on the Isthmus," said Mr. Barrett, "is not that of engineering, or the enforcement of law, but the great problem of health and sanitation. The engineering problems have been met and overcome, and the problem of law and American occupancy presents no great difficulties. When we come to the health conditions, however, we have the climate against us. That condition is ever present. The report of five cases of yellow fever in the City of Colon is alarming, as we had hoped that the situation there was well in hand. No fever had appeared there until a short time ago, and we were about to congratulate ourselves on our good luck.

"The great number of canal employes on the Isthmus tends to make the question even more serious. Fortunately the percentage of illness from other causes is small. I do not wish to be understood as implying that there is any cause for a panic, but I do believe that the situation is serious. It is up to the United States to solve the problem.

"Col. Gorgas and his assistants are doing a mighty work for health, and all this is bound to have its effect. Every building is frequently fumigated and the men are sleeping under nets to protect them from the disease-carrying mosquitos. The fever may continue until the end of the rainy season, which is about November.

"A great many of the employes are willing to remain on the Isthmus, but the deaths of Mr. West, the auditor, and Mr. Johnson, the chief architect, have created uneasiness, and some have already left. I do not wish to appear pessimistic, and my opinion is that the authorities who have the problem in hand will find a solution for it."

SHAW ON TARIFF WAR.

Secretary Says America Is Against It —Proposed Schedules.

CLEVELAND, May 20.—Leslie M. Shaw, Secretary of the Treasury, speaking before the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce this evening on the question of the tariff, said in the course of his speech:

"I have heard it intimated that an amendment to our present tariff laws is likely to be proposed at the next session—but with what prospect of passage I cannot say—substantially as follows:

"'Be it enacted, that whenever any country grants to the people of any other country privileges within its markets which are withholden from the people of the United States, then and in all such instances the tariff duties on all merchandise coming from those countries showing such preferences shall be — per cent. higher than provided in the schedules of existing tariff laws.'

"This would constitute a maximum and minimum tariff, the maximum to be enforced only against such countries as exact a maximum rate against us.

"I understand that those who advocate this course meet the charge that it means tariff war, with the suggestion that the United States will not first declare such a war. Being forced to follow the example of other countries is not the equivalent of a declaration of war, while yielding to the demand that the United States shall discriminate against those who do not discriminate against her might involve neutral powers in a universal tariff war. Such a war would necessarily harm us, but it would harm more seriously still those who drove us into it. The United States prefers to treat all alike, and fully appreciates like treatment by others."

Mr. Shaw compared the international commercial policies of the four great countries of the world.

"The United Kingdom," he said, "opens her markets to all on equal terms, and reserves to her own people no advantages whatsoever. France and Germany reserve to their own people by means of protective tariffs advantages on many articles, and they also grant to the people of some countries advantages in their markets over others. Both these countries discriminate in favor of their own people in their own markets, and they discriminate also as between the people of foreign countries. They both have what is known as 'most-favored-nation' clauses in their commercial treaties, and thus make reciprocal trade relations with certain countries, granting and receiving advantages over others.

"The United States follows the example of France and Germany in that she grants to her own people advantages on very many articles, and follows the example of Great Britain by making no distinction as between foreign countries. Barring a dozen or so unimportant articles, the United States admits the products of all foreign countries (the Republic of Cuba alone excepted) on equal terms.

"There is now in force a commercial treaty between the United States and Germany, by which the latter, in consideration of certain slight concessions, agrees not to discriminate against us, and I can not believe that the newspaper reports are true that Germany contemplates terminating this arrangement unless the United States will agree to discriminate against other countries and in her favor.

"I cannot believe that any country seriously considers putting in operation a revision of tariffs imposing new and severe discriminations against the people of the United States. Such action would be most unfortunate from every point of view to both countries. Certain it is the United States has done nothing, and will do nothing, to invite such a course."

The ceremony of laying the cornerstone of the new Federal building in Cleveland, held here this afternoon, was directed by Secretary Shaw. The Right Rev. William A. Leonard, Episcopalian Bishop of Ohio, offered the invocation. The occasion marked the commencement of the plan of grouping the Federal and city buildings in one neighborhood.

HELD AS VANDAL AT HARVARD.

Student Accused of Taking Bronze Tablet at Brooks House.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., May 20.—Benjamin Joy of New York, a senior at Harvard, waived examination in the Third District Court here to-day and was held in $1,500 bail for the Grand Jury, on a charge of breaking and entering the Phillips Brooks house at the college. Four students forced a window, according to the police, and removed a bronze tablet. The intruders were discovered by a freshman.

Joy was captured by the police in a half-mile chase, but the others escaped. The tablet was recovered. The alleged burglary is declared by students to be a "Med. Frac." joke. Another incident was the suspension of a human skeleton on a wire between dormitories outside the campus.

JERSEY STOCK EXCHANGE NOW HAS A CHARTER

Formed by Members of Consolidated, It Elects Officers.

JERSEY CITY PROBABLE HOME

First 100 Members Will Pay $500 Each; Others on Rising Scale Up to $1,500.

The New Jersey Stock Exchange, formed by brokers from this city for the express purpose of evading the recently enacted stock transfer law, may now be said to have begun its actual existence with the transfer of the charter from the dummies who obtained it to a committee appointed for that purpose by the men at the head of the undertaking, and with the election of officers and a board of twenty-four Directors. These proceedings took place yesterday and the day before, some of them in this city and others in East Orange, N. J.

The President of the new institution, which is to be housed and launched before Aug. 1 this year, is Miguel E. Aguero, the senior partner of the brokerage firm of M. E. & J. W. Aguero, with offices at 52 Broadway. He is a member of the Consolidated Stock Exchange, as is the Treasurer, Alan R. Hawley, a broker of 15 Broad Street, and all the Directors. The list of these includes the names of R. J. Hoffman, W. E. Valentine, R. N. Garvis, A. de Cordova, F. N. Nightingale, N. Farrelly, L. N. Morgenstern, Marcus Heim, and L. B. Wilson. The Directors and the officers formed a committee which went over to East Orange yesterday and took legal possession of the charter, which till then had been in the names of a number of clerks and other men selected to secure incorporation. The meeting took place in the offices of the New Jersey Registration and Trust Company, and the legal formalities were arranged by Lawyer James B. Dill of this city, who is the counsel for the new Exchange.

ALL CONSOLIDATED MEMBERS.

The meeting held in this city for the election of officers was attended by almost every one of the seventy-two members that have so far been admitted to the new corporation. They are all members of the Consolidated Exchange and have been carefully selected from more than 125 applicants. Great care has been exercised in this matter, and there is reason to believe that considerable chagrin has been caused among those who have been rejected by the guardians of the new venture. It was said last night that some lively times may be expected when the next annual election of the Consolidated Exchange comes around next June, as some of the disgruntled ones are likely to use their utmost powers to stir up trouble.

Mr. Aguero, Mr. Hawley, and the other men at the head of the undertaking do not anticipate any serious opposition, however, and even if such opposition should be shown they are sure that the new Exchange will be a success. The trouble will be to restrict the membership. It has been decided to limit it to 300 to begin with, and not to make any effort to bring it above 250. To accomplish this a sliding scale of admission fees has been arranged as follows: The first 100 members will pay only a general fee once for all of $500 for their seats, (barring annual assessments for expenses;) the next 100 members will have to pay $500 for their seats, and an extra initiation fee of $500, while the fifty members raising the total number to 250 will be required to pay an initiation fee of $1,000 besides the general fee of $500. Beyond that number no provisions have been made.

It has also been arranged to give the first chance to members of the Consolidated Exchange, and it seems likely that the entire membership will be filled from that source. A large number of outsiders have already applied, but they have so far been either rejected or told that they will have to wait. A committee of eight on membership was appointed yesterday, with instructions to redouble the care displayed in the selection of members.

MUTE AS TO HEADQUARTERS.

The officers refused yesterday to say where the new Exchange is to have its headquarters, but it is generally understood that Jersey City will be selected, and that the secretiveness of the officers is due to a desire to prevent any undue raising of prices on the building site to be purchased. Three sites have already been offered to the Directors, and the choice among them will be made soon. In the meantime temporary offices will be opened in this city. A Secretary and a force of clerks and other attendants will be hired, so that the preliminary work may begin in earnest in a few weeks.

One of the reasons why an efforts is not made to start operations immediately in Jersey is that many Consolidated Exchange brokers of a class desired by the new Exchange are holding back until it has been ascertained what attitude the Consolidated will take. While there is no rule at present prohibiting a member of the Consolidated from belonging to another Exchange, and while at least fifty of the members are also holders of seats in the Boston, Philadelphia, or Chicago Exchanges, it is realized that the organization of the Exchange as an association only, and not as an incorporated body, enables it to act with much more freedom from interference by the courts than were it a corporation.

"We have no reason to fear that the Consolidated can force us to relinquish our membership," said one of the organizers of the new institution last night, "and we have strong legal opinion backing our own faith in our right to belong to both bodies. But many among us have belonged for many years to the Consolidated and are unwilling to take any risk in regard to our seats. That is one of the reasons why we are going ahead with the greatest care. The Board of Governors of the Consolidated are naturally enough much opposed to the new venture. They would, of course, be opposed to any secession from their own institution and to the establishment of a new exchange which will work in direct competition with their own. They do not care about members belonging to the Philadelphia or Boston Exchanges because there can never be any real competition between them and the New York Exchanges. But the position of the New Jersey Exchange is a different one. Over there we will be dealing absolutely in the same securities as the Consolidated. I do not think, however, that the Consolidated will be able to enact a retroactive rule and get it upheld in the courts."

SANTA FE'S OIL PLANS.

Profitable Inter-State Tariff for Kansas Producers, It Is Said.

Special to The New York Times.

KANSAS CITY, May 20.—F. Dumont Smith, an attorney for the Oil Producers' Association, said to-day:

"The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad is going to give Kansas oil producers an inter-State tariff which will enable them to sell oil in competition with coal in Missouri, Iowa, and Nebraska. E. P. Ripley, President of the Santa Fé, has told me that the Santa Fé will put in the inter-State freight rates just as soon as the figures can be compiled.

"Mr. Ripley also said that the road had ordered 500 tank cars for the use of the Kansas producers, and that wherever necessary the Santa Fé will construct storage

JUDGE MORRIS DECLINES TO QUIT FOR M'COMAS

Hitch in President's Plan to Place ex-Senator on the Bench.

MOODY IS MUCH PERPLEXED

Roosevelt's Attitude Toward Federal Judiciary Causes Comment in Washington.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 20.—President Roosevelt's attitude toward the Federal judiciary, which has been the topic of a good deal of quiet talk here for some time, has been brought conspicuously to the front within the past two or three days by his announcement that he would place ex-Senator McComas of Maryland in the District Court of Appeals.

Senator Bailey some time ago delivered in the Senate a speech in which he declared that the President was following the policy of making the Federal bench a snug harbor for derelicts. It did not attract much attention at the time, but of late there have been frequent references to it.

It was first recalled to the minds of public men here by the President's appointment of Representative A. G. Dayton of West Virginia to succeed Judge Jackson on the Federal bench. The question of Mr. Dayton's knowledge of the law and experience in its practice was at once raised, and there were intimations that his confirmation would be opposed. All such talk, however, quickly died away, although many Senators took the opportunity to let the President know that they did not approve his manner of appointing Judges.

K. M. Landis of Illinois was next appointed to the new Judgeship created in that State by Congress. He is the brother of Representatives Charles B. Landis and Frederick Landis, both of Indiana, and has tried to get elected to Congress himself, but never succeeded. His public experience is limited to his service as private secretary of the late Secretary Gresham.

Now comes the appointment of McComas to succeed Judge Martin F. Morris of the District Court of Appeals, who, having reached seventy years of age, has the right to retire. Judge Morris does not want to resign, and is vigorously insisting that he will not get out. The President's friends assert that he had promised the President in a letter to retire and make way for McComas. This the Judge denies.

McComas was the boss of the Republican machine in Maryland. When the Democrats carried the State they elected Isador Rayner to succeed him, which left McComas unprovided for. The opposition to McComas in his own party is such that, divested of the patronage and power that go with the Senatorship, he cannot hope to get back into an elective office, and he wants a Judgeship.

Attorney General Moody yesterday announced that the Judge would retire and McComas would be appointed to succeed him. To-day the Attorney General says he gave out this statement by order of the President, but Judge Morris says he knows nothing about his retirement.

"It is untrue, absolutely untrue," he said. "I have not decided when I will retire. I have not indicated such an intention to the President or anybody else, and I consider the stories that are being circulated under the circumstances to be in very bad taste."

After reading the statement of Judge Morris, Attorney General Moody said that if the Judge had been correctly quoted there was a big misunderstanding and that somebody was very much mistaken. This afternoon Attorney General Moody talked of the matter with the President and later announcement was made that a statement would be given out on Monday, which it is probable will include the letter of Judge Morris.

McMaster Gets Consulship Papers.

WASHINGTON, May 20.—The long-standing case of Frederick McMaster of New York has been settled by the issue of a commission to him as American Consul to Zanzibar, the appointee having reached an understanding with the attorneys for his wife as to maintenance for his child.

Circus Stops Work at Mines.

MAHANOY CITY, Penn., May 20.—Sixteen collieries, employing 12,000 men and boys, were forced to suspend operations to-day because of the appearance here for the first time of a circus. Less than 10 per cent. of the employes reported for duty.

WOMAN FATALLY HURT IN A RUNAWAY CRASH

Daughter Drove Horse Into Embankment to Avoid Collision.

WILD RUN IN PROSPECT PARK

Mrs. Salmon, 72 Years Old, and Mrs. Tooker Also Badly Injured Driving When Animal Bolted.

Mrs. Emily M. Salmon, seventy-two years old, of 258 Hancock Street, Brooklyn, and her daughter, Mrs. Lillian Tooker, were taken insensible to the Seney Hospital yesterday afternoon, suffering from injuries received in a runaway accident in Prospect Park shortly after 4 o'clock. Mrs. Salmon, who received a fracture of the skull and internal injuries, will probably die. Mrs. Tooker's condition is also serious.

Mrs. Salmon, who is the widow of Hamilton H. Salmon, a chemical importer, and Mrs. Tooker are both expert whips. The mother and daughter left their private stable in Hancock Street in a light runabout drawn by a big bay trotter.

Mrs. Tooker was driving along the Eastern Parkway when, opposite the museum of the Brooklyn Institute, the animal took fright at something and bolted down the hill into the plaza at the entrance to Prospect Park. The plaza at that hour was crowded with equipages going in and out on the east drive. The runaway dashed straight across the plaza to the park entrance, miraculously missing a collision with several vehicles. Only Mrs. Tooker's expert driving saved an accident then.

Down the east drive of the Park, which was also crowded with vehicles, went the runaway. Mrs. Tooker did her best to avert a collision. The horse had the bit in its teeth, however, and as she told the surgeons in the Seney Hospital last night, seeing that a collision could not be averted she decided to stop the runaway at once.

Mrs. Tooker pulled hard on the right rein. The bay swerved and dashed into the embankment. The runabout struck a tree and was smashed like a matchbox, while its occupants were thrown out. The bay dashed on, but was presently captured by a policeman.

When Mrs. Salmon and Mrs. Tooker were taken from the wreck both were unconscious. The Seney Hospital was telephoned for an ambulance in a hurry, while the hundreds, who had witnessed the accident, crowded around. Several women while awaiting the arrival of the ambulance tried to revive Mrs. Salmon and Mrs. Tooker. Mrs. Salmon is not expected to live through the night. Mrs. Tooker received a broken ankle, and dislocation of the left hip. At midnight Mrs. Salmon had not recovered consciousness.

Mrs. Salmon is the mother of Hamilton H. Salmon, who is well known in connection with the Brooklyn Riding and Driving School. Mrs. Tooker is also a widow. Her husband was William Tooker, a manufacturer of ammunition. Mrs. Tooker and Mrs. Salmon lived together at the Hancock Street address.

THREE RUNAWAYS AT ONCE.

Horse Broke from Victoria and Caused Two Smashups—Three Men Hurt.

One of a team of horses attached to a victoria started to run in West Seventy-second Street yesterday afternoon. The animal turned into Columbus Avenue and struck a horse attached to a grocery wagon, causing it to run away. This horse bumped into a supply wagon of the Salvation Army, throwing out two men.

The team attached to the victoria were large bays, and were driven out of Central Park at Seventy-second Street. In the victoria were two women, who refused to tell their names, and Arthur Segert, of 2,150 Eighth Avenue, who was driving.

When near Columbus Avenue, in Seventy-second Street, the near horse showed symptoms of the blind staggers. The driver hurridly unhitched the animal and started to bleed him, as is done in such cases. This left the off horse free, except that he was still fastened to the pole. He bolted, dragging the pole with him. He ran across Columbus Avenue, and the pole was dashed through one of the large plate glass windows of a grocery store. The horse dashed on down Columbus Avenue, still dragging the broken pole. In front of No. 208, another grocery store, was standing a horse hitched to a wagon. This horse then started at a mad pace down the avenue.

Policemen Slattery and Grobler of the West Sixty-eighth Street Station, were at Sixty-seventh Street, and they ran after the first runaway. Slattery seized the horse by the coliar and Grobler got hold of the pole, and between them the animal was stopped.

In the wagon belonging to the Salvation Army Industrial Home at 528 West Thirtieth Street, which was hit by the second runaway, were Robert A. Ryan, the driver, and James McCabe, a helper. They were thrown out. Ryan, however, held on to the reins, and when his horse also started to run he pulled him around so sharply that he ran into an elevated pillar and stopped. The men were only bruised.

The grocery wagon horse was stopped by Dennis Breen of 437 West Thirty-third Street. He was knocked down and the horse stepped on his leg.

FOUR HURT IN SMASHUP.

Runaway First Hits a Race Track Car and Then an Auto.

Four persons were more or less seriously injured at Richmond Hill, L. I., yesterday afternoon, when a runaway horse attached to a light runabout collided at Union Place and Jamaica Avenue with a crowded trolley car returning from Belmont Park, and immediately afterward with an automobile owned by Albert Reuter, a broker, of 142 Madison Street, Brooklyn. Both the car and the automobile were damaged. The runabout was wrecked.

Mr. and Mrs. Reuter, who were in the automobile, were thrown out and both injured, as were the occupants of the runabout, George Allen of Ozone Park and his son, Elmer. The son was taken to St. Mary's Hospital, Jamaica, suffering from severe bruises and possible internal injuries. He was afterward sent home.

Allen and his son were driving along Jamaica Avenue when the horse took fright under a Long Island Railroad bridge at the shriek of the whistle of a Rockaway Beach train. The animal bolted up the avenue at great speed. At the corner of Union Place and Jamaica Avenue the runaway smashed into the car. The windows of the car were shattered and there was a panic among the passengers, none of whom was hurt.

With a piece of the cart still hanging to the harness, the horse dashed on, and a few yards beyond the car went headlong into the Reuter automobile. Mr. and Mrs. Reuter were on their way to visit a friend, and had just stopped in front of the house when the runaway came along. The single shaft remaining in the harness struck the side of the automobile and went clear through, the force of the shock sending Mr. Reuter and Mrs. Reuter to the ground.

69th to Have a New Company.

Col. Duffy of the Sixty-ninth Regiment has received permission from Gov. Higgins to add another company to his command. At present the Sixty-ninth has only nine companies. It needs the tenth before September, so that the regiment can then enter its new armory with ten

WOULD FINANCE EDUCATION.

Training in New Commercialism F. A. Vanderlip's Plan.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, May 20.—At the one hundred and fifty-fifth anniversary of the birthday of Stephen Girard, at Girard College to-day, Frank A. Vanderlip, ex-Assistant Secretary of the Treasury and now Vice President of the National City Bank of New York, proclaimed the necessity for further revolution in education.

His main idea was that Captains of industry should organize the whole educational system to prevent untold waste of money and of the precious time and energy of youth. He proposed a new central fund, to be placed in the hands of the "wisest body of men," who, with a view to distribute the income, should look to the whole field of education, to the co-ordination of effort among all universities and colleges.

Technical engineering education he said had been forced upon professional educators in a revolutionary manner, and he proposed to attempt a new and grander revolution to top off the general university education with a course of university training in the principles of the new commercialism.

PRESBYTERIANS IN THE NAVY.

Ask More Chaplains—Vote for Church Union—Harlan an Umpire.

WINONA LAKE, Ind., May 20.—The Presbyterian Assembly to-day adopted the recommendations of the Relief Committee. In its report on Christian work among seamen the committee requested the Assembly to ask the President of the United States for larger representation of the Presbyterian Church in the appointment of Naval Chaplains, the Church now being represented in the navy by one man.

Speaking briefly to this report, Justice John M. Harlan said:

"By common concession this country has become a world power and countries are maintaining their places as world powers largely through their navies. I believe the recommendations of the committee should be approved. In the public life at Washington the Presbyterian Church has never had a sufficient number of representatives, although this Church helped to lay the foundation of the Government in the War of the Revolution and in framing the Constitution."

The proposed union with the Cumberland Presbyterian Church will be called as a special order of business on Monday. Following the announcement that the vote on the proposed consolidation was 194 to 39 in favor of the union, a committee was appointed to consider plans for the contemplated union.

Justice Harlan this afternoon umpired a baseball game which resulted in the defeat of a team composed of visiting preachers by the Winona Agricultural College team by a score of 11 to 5. Several of the preachers were formerly members of the Princeton University baseball team.

MORRIS UPHOLDS ROOSEVELT.

His Stand on Arbitration Right, He Says, in Yale Lecture.

NEW HAVEN, May 20.—Robert C. Morris of New York to-day delivered a lecture upon "International Arbitration and Procedure" at the Yale Law School.

He defended President Roosevelt's attitude in his recent conflict with the Senate relating to the use of the word "agreement" instead of "treaty" in arbitration measures. Mr. Morris added:

"As to the power of the Senate to have done under the Constitution what the President requested, there can be no question, and this would be so even if this was a matter which the Constitution clearly made subject to the consent and approval of the Senate. As a principle of constitutional law, it is well settled in this country that the legislative branch of the Government can confer upon the Executive the power to carry out in detail the powers given it by the Constitution.

"The Government acts in such cases, not in its own behalf, but simply as the necessary agent for its own citizens. To say that the Executive should not have the power to pass on the claims made by citizens of this country against foreign Governments and determine which of such claims it is proper for it to insist upon an adjustment of, and if it cannot arrange them by intervention of diplomacy, to determine the proper occasions for arbitration, but that all questions of such private character must be acted upon by the Senate, is, to say the least, imposing on the citizens of this country an unnecessary obstacle to the protection of their rights. The contrary is, I think, what was clearly contemplated by our Constitution."

CHICAGO'S LONGEST LAWSUIT.

Decision After Ten Years of Litigation —Pullman Estate Hit.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, May 20.—The most intricate and the longest litigation ever taken through the courts of Cook County reached the appeal stage to-day, when Judge Tuley signed a decree of 125 pages. The suit is that of the Buda Foundry and Manufacturing Company against the Columbian Celebration Company, which partly built the Mackaye spectatorium adjacent to the fair grounds in Jackson Park and then failed.

By Judge Tuley's decree the bond and stock holders of the company must stand behind their stock and bond subscriptions with their fortunes. The estate of George M. Pullman is hit for $50,000 and that of Edson Keith for $10,000. Many of the wealthiest men in Chicago in days before the Exposition of 1893 were interested in the company and will be called upon to help pay the $230,000 debts.

NAVY YARD PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Washington Education Association to Agitate for Them.

WASHINGTON, May 20.—With a view to arousing National interest in an effort to induce Congress to provide for the establishment of public schools upon naval reservations, the Public Education Association of Washington to-night held a meeting at which plans were perfected for carrying on the work. Such schools are in operation on military reservations, but none so far have been placed in Navy Yards.

In his last annual message to Congress President Roosevelt urged the necessity for providing schools of that character, and it was in furtherance of that recommendation that the association met to-night. It is said that the citizens of the several States where navy yards are located will join in the movement inaugurated in this city.

SMALLPOX SCARE IN JAILS.

130 Persons in Passaic County and City Prisons Vaccinated.

PATERSON, N. J., May 20.—A smallpox scare has resulted in the vaccination of 130 persons in the Passaic County and Passaic City jails, all the Police Court attendants, and the keepers in both jails. It has also caused considerable friction between the county officials and those of Passaic City.

Five negro prisoners who had been remanded to the county jail in Paterson by Recorder Dairymple of Passaic on the charge of grand larceny were found to be suffering from smallpox by County Physician Andrew McBride. The malady had been diagnosed as chickenpox by Dr. David Crouse, City Physician of Passaic. The prisoners are William Gray, George Jackson, George Thompson, Theodore Demarm, and John Johnson.

CASTRO'S COURT ANNULS ASPHALT CONCESSION

Contract Held by New York and Bermudez Company Upset.

STATE DEPARTMENT MAY ACT

Expected That Proposal for Arbitration Will Be Renewed Now That Courts Have Finished.

CARACAS, May 20.—The President of the Federal Court of Cassation, sitting as a tribunal of first instance, to-day, in the case of the Government of Venesuela against the New York and Bermudez Asphalt Company regarding the Hamilton contract, dissolved the contract and ordered the company to pay damages.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 20.—The decision of the Venezuelan Court of Cassation in the asphalt case probably will afford an opportunity for renewed remonstrances with Venezuela by this Government. So far President Castro has succeeded in carrying out his policy exactly as he intended.

His attitude from the first has been that he could not permit foreign interference in a matter pending before the Venezuelan courts. He has carried the matter to the end in his courts without foreign interference, and therefore has done what he set out to do.

The charge against the Asphalt Trust is that it violated its contract, and the suit has been to annul the concession. At all stages of the proceedings the trust has appealed to the United States for protection and has sought to have the State Department intervene to ward off the threatened annulment.

The State Department made various representations to President Castro, but he has refused to entertain the idea of American interference. He has declared that it would be impossible to allow an international matter to be made of a suit not yet settled by the Venezuelan courts.

Abitration has been suggested, but Castro has taken the ground that an unsettled lawsuit is not a fit subject for arbitration.

Of late the United States has acquiesced at least to the extent that the matter has been permitted to go its way in the courts without interference. The decision will enable the United States to approach Castro again and renew its proposition for arbitration.

HOW COURT REVERSED ITSELF.

After Castro Demanded $9,650,000—Rival Claimant to Lake.

On July 12, 1904, President Castro demanded $9,650,000 from the New York and Bermudez Asphalt Company upon the allegation that it had given material aid to the revolutionary movement in which Gen. Matos figured, and which necessitated the expenditure, according to Castro, of the amount stated.

The suit was the culmination of litigation growing out of the claim of a rival concern—the Warner-Quinlan syndicate—to part of the asphalt lake at Felicidad. The Superior Court of Venezuela had given judgment in favor of the New York and Bermudez Company some months previous.

On July 29 Ambrose Howard Carner, formerly a Director of the New York and Bermudez Asphalt Company, who was appointed receiver, under President Castro's suit, arrived at Guanoco in a Venezuelan gunboat and took possession of the properties of the company.

On Aug. 1 Minister Bowen, from Caracas, reported that because of the company's failure to carry out certain concessions, the Venesuelan Government had secured an embargo (corresponding to the American injunction) which had resulted in the appointment of Mr. Carner as receiver. Mr. Bowen had been authorized by the State Department, which was keeping a close watch on the case, to protest against the seizure of the properties. The protest was lodged, but Castro refused to restore the properties pending the final decision of the court.

In February last a semi-official dispatch was received from Caracas that the Venezuelan court, under pressure from President Castro, had ordered the sequestration of the asphalt company's property. The action of the court brought the dispute to an acute stage, the State Department keeping in close touch with the situation.

In March President Castro began proceedings against the French Cable Company and cut the coast cable from La Guayra east and west.

On March 24 Minister Bowen cabled the State Department that Castro had refused to arbitrate the issues between Venesuela and the asphalt company. Castro's deal with England and Germany was an embarrassing feature of the situation.

At the annual meeting of the General Asphalt Company held in Camden on May 16, John M. Mack, the President, referred in his report to the New York and Bermudez Company as follows:

"Inasmuch as this company has sought consideration of its grievance by the Government of the United States, and the subject has thereby come to have diplomatic and international aspects, the General Asphalt Company is obviously restrained from further comment, except that, in view of certain errors or misunderstandings which have appeared in newspaper articles, the company may be permitted to repeat the statement made in the printed pamphlet heretofore mentioned, that the New York and Bermudez Company holds three grants from the Venezuelan Government.

"First, an exclusive concession, obtained in 1883 for twenty-five years, for the exploitation of asphalt and other natural products in the former State of Bermudez; second, a definite mining title for ninety-nine years to Bermudez Lake, a large deposit of asphalt in the State of Bermudez, secured in 1888; third, a title in fee simple to more than twelve square miles of land under and surrounding the lake, secured in 1888.

"While the Venezuelan Government seeks to have the concession forfeited, for an alleged default which, if it exists at all, has existed for more than twenty years with that Government's knowledge and acquiescence, yet the Venezuelan Government has not impeached the company's mining and land titles, although, under color of the attempted forfeiture of the concession, it has seized the property covered by those independent titles."

NO DECISION IN BOWEN CASE.

Taft Announces His Intention to Call More Witnesses.

WASHINGTON, May 20.—President Roosevelt and Secretary Taft had a conference to-day regarding the Loomis-Bowen case. At its conclusion Secretary Taft said that no decision had yet been reached.

His intention is to call other witnesses and hear their testimony before he makes a formal statement concerning the case to the President. These witnesses will be Mr. Dater, a New York newspaper man; Richard Harding Davis, and Caspar Whitney of New York.

Mr. Loomis to-day submitted his rejoinder to Secretary Taft, a copy of which, together with

LAWSON'S DATE FOR TROUBLE

Says It's Coming To-morrow, or at Latest Tuesday.

Thomas W. Lawson sent dispatches from Boston yesterday saying that the stock market panic which he has predicted will come to-morrow, when London, Berlin, and Paris "will deluge Wall Street with selling orders."

Mr. Lawson qualifies that, however, by saying that if it does not come Monday it surely will on Tuesday, by which time foreign financiers will have had time to digest his latest pronunciamento on "the system."

TO TURN DOWN FORAKER.

Plan Credited to Herrick-Dick Faction in Ohio Convention.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 20.—Republican politicians are awaiting with interest the assembling of the Ohio State Convention at Columbus next Tuesday. Secretary Taft will preside and is expected to deliver an address in which he will indicate the policies of the Administration regarding the tariff, railroad rates, and other questions that are receiving attention. It is not improbable that Secretary Taft will also use the occasion to make explanation of what is proposed to be done regarding the purchase of supplies for the Panama Canal.

The convention will be controlled by the Herrick-Dick faction, and there are indications that little consideration will be given to Senator Foraker and his friends. Contrary to the usual custom, the Herrick-Dick managers failed to invite Foraker to attend the gathering, but this omission will not prevent him from putting in an appearance.

There are intimations that a resolution will be introduced declaring that Foraker is the choice of the Republicans of Ohio for President in 1908, the purpose being to reject the resolution by a large majority, and thus make it appear that Foraker has fallen from the high place he once held in the estimation of the Ohio Republicans.

Senator Foraker has been advised of the scheme and will do what he can to defeat it. He said this evening:

"If any such plans are being made, which I doubt, it is without my knowledge, without my approval, and without any semblance of authority from me. I do not desire such action by the convention, even were the movement started in good faith."

JUST ESCAPE LYNCHING.

Father and Two Sons Saved from Mob by Sheriff.

Special to The New York Times.

RICHLAND CENTRE, Wis., May 20.—Charles Tyler and his sons, Roy and William, accused of attacking a girl, narrowly escaped lynching to-night because of anger aroused at the action of a Justice who allowed their release on bonds of $100 each, though the girl may die from her injuries.

The determined attitude of the Sheriff saved the men from the mob.

MET ON STREET FATHER LONG MOURNED AS DEAD

Ex-Judge A. D. Mitchell of Chicago Found in Denver.

WAS A HOMELESS WANDERER

Supposed to Have Died Twenty-four Years Ago—Recognition Mutual and Instantaneous.

Special to The New York Times.

DENVER, Col., May 20.—Alvin Deval Mitchell, who was a Supreme Court Judge in Illinois before the Chicago fire in 1871, and was supposed by his son, Alvin Deval Mitchell, Jr., to have died twenty-four years ago, has been located in Denver. The father and son met on the corner of Sixteenth and California Streets to-day. The son immediately recognized him.

"Your name is Alvin Mitchell and you are my father," he said.

"Yes," answered the father, "and you are my oldest son."

When the fire in Chicago in 1871 caused Mr. Mitchell to lose all his money his mind left him. He became ill, and it was not thought he would recover. He did, however, and removed to Kansas City, where, with his brother, he engaged in business and amassed a fortune. Fate was against him, however, and before very long he had lost his all again. His son moved to New York and took with him his younger brother. They entered the real estate business there, and prospered.

Meanwhile Alvin Deval Mitchell, having lost his all, took to drink, and was a homeless wanderer when his son found him to-day.

Last week Alvin Deval Mitchell, Jr., came to Denver and bought some real estate on Capitol Hill at the price of $75,000. He already possessed considerable property in Denver and decided to make this city his home. He telegraphed to Kansas City and ordered that the remains of his mother and father be sent here for burial. The mother's remains were sent and duly buried here, but the Kansas City undertaker could not find the father's remains or any record that he had been buried there. The son telegraphed an urgent request that further search be made. Two hours after his telegram had gone he met his father, who now will be made happy for the rest of his life.

POBIEDONOSTZEFF SEES RUIN AHEAD FOR RUSSIA

Reactionary Leader Dying, an Embittered Old Man.

POWER SHATTERED AT LAST

Mestchersky Gloats Over His Downfall—Project for Assembly to be Published Soon.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 20.—The power of M. Pobiedonostzeff, Procurator General of the Holy Synod, who during twenty-five years has been the dominating reactionary influence in Russia, seems shattered at last. He is over eighty years old, is confined to bed practically continuously, believes that he sees everything for which he fought slipping away, and is dying an embittered old man. Yet with the threads of life snapping he still protests against reform with all the fire of his remarkable mentality.

M. Pobiedonostzeff has been denominated a fanatic by the West. The secret of his wonderful sway over the minds of two Emperors has been his unshaken belief in and devotion to the principles of autocracy and orthodoxy as the twin cornerstones of Russia's future greatness. Holy Russia, he has believed with all the intensity of his soul, was destined to dominate the globe, and he was ever fond of asserting, as he did to Senator Beveridge of Indiana: "Russia! Russia is not a State. Russia is a world."

But the crowning defeat of M. Pobiedonostzeff came with the imperial ukase striking the shackles from religion, the blow being all the harder because it was delivered on the anniversary of his jubilee as Procurator of the Holy Synod.

To intimates who are admitted to his bedroom M. Pobiedonostzeff talks bitterly. He says he has lost hope and washes his hands of everything. He sees only ruin ahead for Church and State. The Government, he declares, has gone mad, and to allow the people to play with questions of State as they would with new toys is deplorable. The present crisis he attributes to the lack of a strong and commanding statesman, and he severely blames the Emperor for his weakness in yielding to the importunities of the Liberals. Yesterday M. Pobiedonostzeff said to a friend:

"Ten years ago one of the Emperor's subjects would have been exiled to Siberia for saying what the Emperor now proclaims in his imperial manifesto."

Prince Mestchersky, editor of the Grashdanin and political defender of the autocracy, gloats over the downfall of his religious rival. While admitting the Procurator General's passionate love and veneration for the Church, Prince Mestchersky describes him as the incarnation of negation not only with regard to foreign ideas, but toward everything new.

"If Christ Himself should appear before Pobiedonostzeff," Prince Mestchersky says, "he would fall down upon his knees and worship Him; but he would deny the living Word. Pobiedonostzeff will brook no opposition. He has dominated men and made them puppets to do his will."

The Bouligin Rescript Commission has practically completed its labors, and it can be announced that it will recommend the establishment of a representative assembly with limited legislative powers. The project will be published at the end of May, after which it will be considered by appointed representatives of the various classes, and it will then go to the Council of the empire for final action.

A proposition for the erection of a legislative chamber on the Champ de Mars is already being considered.

The Catholics, Molokans, Stundists, and followers of the dissident creeds throughout the empire are testifying their appreciation of the grant of religious freedom and are holding thanksgiving services.

JAPAN'S CONTROL IN KOREA.

France Hears That Things Are Being Carried with a High Hand.

PARIS, May 20.—Reports received here through authoritative channels represent Japan as carrying things with a high hand in Korea.

Whether the reports are influenced by sentiment it is impossible to say, but they recite a number of specific facts supporting the view that M. Hayashi, the Japanese Minister to Korea, no longer respects the position of the other Ministers at Söul. He is said to consider himself a sort of Resident General or Viceroy, thus taking precedence over his diplomatic colleagues, who are obliged to await his convenience in dealing with the Court and Government.

The General commanding the Japanese troops is represented as seconding this assumption of precedence on the part of the Japanese Minister.

Official reports confirm the reports from Peking that the Japanese recently exerted strong pressure upon the Emperor of Korea to induce him to leave the country and go to Japan, with the evident purpose of removing him as an obstacle to the development of Japanese control.

The Emperor is said to have requested the departure of the Japanese officials who made these representations, and to have taken discreet means to permit the European Governments to learn of the prospect of his removal. Finally, when this information reached the St. Petersburg Foreign Office, it issued a protest against Japan's assumption of control of the affairs of Korea.

PRESIDENT MUCH INTERESTED.

Getting All the Information He Can About the Coming Sea Fight.

WASHINGTON, May 20.—Secretary of the Navy Morton and Commander Schroeder, Chief of the Bureau of Naval Intelligence, had an interview with President Roosevelt to-day concerning the prospective battle between the Russian and Japanese fleets.

Commander Schroeder has prepared a document, in which he compares the strength and qualities of the two fleets. He explained to the President his figures and deductions.

The President is deeply interested in the situation, and is taking every opportunity to obtain information bearing upon it.

Theft at Police Headquarters.

John Boyd, an electrician, of 51 Greenwich Avenue, was arrested yesterday in Brooklyn by Detective Sergeants Tinker and Gargan, charged with stealing a check for $36 from the desk of Jeremiah J. Bacon, the auditor at Police Headquarters. The check was made out to a man named McCarthy for work done at Headquarters. McCarthy died before collecting it. The check disappeared. It was cashed in a saloon in University Place, and traced to Boyd, who had been working about Headquarters.

A FRANCO-GERMAN PUZZLE.

Some Things Make for More Trouble and Others for Harmony.

PARIS, May 20.—Although there are no further developments in the Franco-German conflict in Morocco the officials here are prepared for a renewal of the strain at any moment. This leads to marked sensitiveness on various subjects in which Germany is interested.

Emperor William's action in receiving from Cardinal Kopp at Metz the Grand Cross of the Order of the Holy Sepulchre is discussed as another move of German diplomacy toward establishing German ascendency at the Vatican at the moment France is breaking off relations with the Holy See. The action is also interpreted as a German move to displace France in the protectorate over Catholic residents in the near and Far East.

On the other hand, Franco-German relations have received a favorable turn by the appointment of a French mission to attend the wedding at Berlin of Crown Prince William, and the suggestion in certain German quarters of the possible return of Alsace-Lorraine to France. The mission, which will be headed by Gen. Lacroix, will arrive in Berlin on June 2.

The suggestion that Germany might eventually return Alsace-Lorraine is welcomed here, but the French officials consider it purely platonic and impossible of practical realization, at least during the present generation.

KNAPP ANSWERS RAILROADS.

Head of Inter-State Commission Heard by Senate Committee.

WASHINGTON, May 20.—Chairman Martin A. Knapp of the Inter-State Commerce Commission was heard by the Senate Committee on Inter-State Commerce to-day. He did not favor a radical departure from the present law, but desired to have its defects corrected and its weak points strengthened.

He referred to the statement filed by President Stickney of the Chicago Great Western Railroad and remarked that Mr. Stickney was always surprising, whether filing a statement or making a tariff.

Mr. Knapp did not believe in the argument that there was danger of inflexibility in rates or of fixed mileage rates in case the proposed legislation were adopted, as seemed to be feared by the railroad men. Notwithstanding the fluctuations in the price of cotton, there had been no change in transportation on cotton in ten years. Mr. Knapp cited this as an answer to the assertion often made that rates must constantly change to meet changed conditions.

He did not regard the courts as the best remedy for unreasonable rates. "If you want to regulate railroads," said the Commissioner, "do it yourselves, and do it by legislation. If you don't want to regulate them, leave it to the courts."

Howard Elliott, President of the Northern Pacific Railroad, told the committee that he agreed with the President when he said the great highways of the country should be kept open upon equal terms to all, and that rebates should cease. He opposed giving any Government commission power to fix rates.

H. B. Browne, attorney for the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé, denied a statement that had been put in evidence that an official of that road had acknowledged giving rebates.

VOTE FOR CHURCH MUSIC.

But Only, Say the Covenanters, Where Congregations Want It.

After an agitation lasting several years the General Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, in session at the First Church, in Twelfth Street, west of Sixth Avenue, decided yesterday that instrumental music might be used in the services of churches of the denomination. The body, better known as the Covenanters, is notable for its stern adherence to ancient ideals. But even these rock-ribbed Presbyterians have at last yielded slightly to the spirit of the age, although not without strenuous opposition, and with a condition attached which may to a large extent negative the step taken.

The retiring Moderator, the Rev. William J. Smiley of Sparta, Ill., presented a resolution in opposition to the proposed move. The preamble recited the historic attitude of the denomination in opposition to instrumental music, and the resolution directed all the Presbyteries and sessions to conform to the action of General Synod in the matter.

A substitute resolution, authorizing the session of each church to settle the matter for its own people, was moved by Dr. David McKinney, of Cincinnati, and seconded by the Rev. James D. Steele, pastor of the First Church in this city. After a warm discussion the substitute was finally passed, but only after a preamble moved by the Rev. J. L. Ritchie of Lisbon, Ohio, had been prefixed, and a special condition had been added, on the motion of James W. Houston of Pittsburg. As finally passed, the resolution says:

Without hereby approving the action of those who have introduced the use of instrumental music without waiting for the permission of the General Synod,

Resolved, That the question of instrumental aid in the praise service be left to the discretion of the sessions of the congregations under our control.

In no case shall any session attempt the introduction of an instrument when it would distract the peace and harmony of the congregation.

In this form the measure was passed by a vote of 29 to 20. The vote of the Presbytery which takes in New York was unanimous in the affirmative.

PEOPLE'S PALACE DEDICATED.

Annex to Pastor Scudder's Church Is Formally Opened.

The People's Palace, an amusement hall of the Rev. John L. Scudder's First Congregational Church, of Jersey City, was dedicated yesterday afternoon. It is at the northeast corner of Forrest Street and Bergen Avenue, near the church. The building cost $200,000, and another $100,000 is to be spent in extensions and improvements. Joseph Milbank, a parishioner, furnished the money.

About 3,000 persons attended the exercises yesterday. Mr. Milbank presented the keys of the building to Chairman William Rowland of the Church Board of Trustees and eulogized Pastor Scudder and the "institutional Church." Pastor Scudder gave a history of the People's Palace and Mayor Fagan congratulated the congregation upon its new building.

Other speakers were the Rev. Henry M. Sanders, D. D.; Dr. K. Boyce Tupper of Philadelphia, Dr. Josiah Strong, President of the New York Institute for Social Service; William D. Murphy of the New York Union League Club, and Alfred E. Marling. The exercises closed with a dance in the assembly hall in the evening. The hall seats 1,100 persons.

The membership of the People's Palace Club includes more than 600 men and boys and more than 300 women and girls. There are reading rooms, a library, two halls for entertainments, a roof garden, billiard and pool tables, a shooting gallery, and a gymnasium. Military drills are given weekly. Classes in dancing for old and young have frequent sessions.

CAPT. CLADO DISMISSED FROM THE RUSSIAN NAVY

Patience of the Admiralty with Its Critic Exhausted.

IGNORED REPEATED ORDERS

Nothing Could Stop His Campaign in the Press—Has Been Called the Marchand of Russia.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sunday, May 21.—The dismissal from the navy of Capt. Clado is gazetted.

Capt. Clado has been called the "Marchand of Russia." Doubtless owing to his recognized ability, the authorities have forgiven him again and again, but repeated warnings, and even orders to him to refrain from publishing articles without previous authorization have all been contemptuously disregarded by the young naval tactician.

Clado is one of the most picturesque figures brought into prominence by the war. A few months ago no one outside of Russia had heard of him, and he first came into notice after the Dogger Bank affair, when Clado, who had been Rojestvensky's chief tactician, was detached from the Baltic Squadron in order to give evidence before the commission in Paris.

Pending the inquiry Clado returned to St. Petersburg and at once began a campaign in the Novoe Vremya for the reinforcement of the Baltic fleet. He attacked the Admiralty, the High Admiral Alexis, and the Foreign Office, and he caused resentment in the highest quarters by his declaration that Rojestvensky, unless he were reinforced, would not have a fighting chance against Togo. The Foreign Office asked for his head because of his urgent advice that the Black Sea fleet be sent out in defiance of treaties.

The Grand Duke Alexis ordered the arrest of Clado, but he was soon released and went to Paris to testify before the Dogger Bank board. On his return to St. Petersburg he renewed his campaign, this time directing his criticisms mainly against Admiral Avellan. The Admiral's aide challenged Clado to a duel, but Clado apologized.

Nothing, however, could stop Clado's campaign in the press, and recently it was announced that he had been assigned to a post on the Amur River, which meant virtual banishment. Later, it seems, the authorities decided to give him one more chance, for it was said that he would be navigating officer of one of the new battleships. Even this prospect failed to check his criticisms, and at last his dismissal has come.

BRITISH WARSHIPS LAUNCHED

LONDON, May 20.—The first-class battleship Africa was launched at Chatham Dock Yard to-day. She is of the King Edward VII. type. When completed she will have cost $7,500,000.

The armored cruiser Cochrane of the Duke of Edinburgh type was launched at Glasgow to-day.

The Admiralty has invited engineering firms at Glasgow to make tenders for the construction of turbine machinery for one of the battleships to be built in the Government dockyards. The specifications demand that the engines develop 23,000 horse power.

The battleships of the King Edward VII. type, of which Great Britain will soon have eight, are slightly less in size than some battleships being constructed for Japan, Russia, and the United States. The British vessels are of 16,350 tons each.

The Africa's engines are to be of 18,000 horse power. She has an armored belt of 9 inches of steel, has 8.7 inches of armor above the belt, 12 inches of steel armor over her bulkheads, 12.6 inches of steel armor over her heavy gun positions, 7 inches of Krupp steel over her secondary battery, and an armored deck from 1 to 2 inches thick.

The armament of the King Edward VII. type of battleship is the subject of some criticism, the British Admiralty being blamed for adhering to the six-inch gun after the lessons of the Russo-Japanese war. The Africa will have four 12-inch guns, four 9.2-inch, ten 6-inch, and twenty-eight smaller guns. She has four torpedo tubes, is designed to steam 18.5 knots an hour, and will have a complement of 776 officers and men.

The Cochrane is of 13,550 tons, is to have 23,500 horse power, and is expected to develop a speed of over 22 knots. Her armor is six inches thick, and her armament will consist of six 9.2-inch guns, four 7.5-inch, two 12-pounders, and thirty smaller guns. The cruiser has three torpedo tubes and her complement will be 704 officers and men. When completed she will have cost about $5,735,000.

HAY TO VISIT CAPITALS.

Going to Paris and London—Will Sail for Home June 7.

BAD NAUHEIM, May 20.—Secretary Hay will have finished the prescribed cure next week and will leave Bad Nauheim on May 27 for Paris. Thence he will go to London and will sail for New York on the White Star liner Baltic, leaving Liverpool June 7.

The Secretary intended to go to Berlin, but Prof. Groedel advised him against the tiring railroad journey.

While in Paris Mr. Hay will call on Foreign Minister Delcassé, and he will probably be received by President Loubet. These calls will be social, for no international business will be discussed seriously.

Secretary Hay has sent word to the American Embassy in Paris that he regrets that he will be unable to accept invitations while there. That will also be his course in London.

Mr. Hay will go direct to Washington from New York and remain at the State Department until the President leaves for the Summer. Then the Secretary will go to New Hampshire.

Consul General Mason has returned to Berlin from Bad Nauheim.

Mrs. Hay will remain in Paris until Mr. Hay joins her there.

WANTS THE KAISER WARNED.

Paper Says Continual Activities Will Overtax His Strength.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, May 20.—The Vossische Zeitung prints an editorial article in which it asks:

"Is there no one in the Government or at Court who considers it his duty to protect the Emperor from the excessive demands on his vitality caused by his continuous journeys and the festivities in which he takes part? Does no statesman or courtier consider it his duty to spare the Emperor the exertions which even his strength cannot stand for long?"

The paper recounts the Emperor's recent visits to Morocco and Italy, with the numerous festivities in which he took part, which have been followed by his extended journey in Germany. As soon as he returns here the elaborate ceremonies in connection with the Crown Prince's marriage will begin, and these in turn will be followed by the yachting week at Kiel.

The Vossische Zeitung says these activities not only tax the strength of the Emperor but also lead the people to displays of extravagance which they can ill afford.

DELCASSE SOON TO RESIGN?

It Is Thought He Will Give Up Office After Alfonso's Visit.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, May 20.—It is improbable that M. Delcassé will remain Minister of Foreign Affairs after King Alfonso's visit to France is ended, and a new complication has arisen which may hasten his resignation.

France has begun negotiations at London and Rome to induce the British and Italian Governments to agree that the control of the railway in Abyssinia between Jibuti and Addis Ababa be left entirely in French hands. It is believed at the Quai d'Orsay that these negotiations will be successful. In that case the Negus Menelik, who desires that the railway shall be an international undertaking and that its administration shall be in the hands of a mixed French, English, and Italian Board of Directors, will be confronted with a fait accompli.

This is M. Delcassé's wish, but there are reasons for disposing of the portion of the railway already constructed to a new international financial group, and those interested in this combination are strongly represented in Premier Rouvier's Cabinet.

MOORISH PIRATES AGAIN.

British Vessel Attacked — Lowther Mission Starts for Fez.

PARIS, May 20.—The Temps publishes a dispatch from Tangier saying that a small British vessel cruising on the Moorish coast was recently attacked by pirates, who fired on the crew and riddled the British flag with bullets.

Representations, it is added, have been made to the British Minister at Tangier with a view to obtaining redress.

TANGIER, May 20.—Gerard A. Lowther, the British Minister, and the British Diplomatic Mission started to-day for Fez.

A MOVE AGAINST CANADA.

Germany Will Try to Stop Getting Her Wheat via America.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, May 20.—The shipping of Canadian wheat to Germany by way of the United States will form one of the subjects which the German Government will bring up in the tariff negotiations with the latter country. It is felt here that in view of the existing tariff situation between Germany and Canada it is unfair that the Dominion should send its wheat to the United States, have it ground into flour there, and then send it to Germany as a product of the United States.

Germany will indeavor to include in the commercial treaty with the United States a provision that a certificate of origin shall accompany all flour from America.

CUBA'S FOURTH OF JULY.

Celebration in Havana—None in Santiago Owing to Gomez's Illness.

HAVANA, May 20.—The third anniversary of the inauguration of the Cuban Republic was celebrated to-day.

The holiday, which was universally observed, was similar to a Fourth of July celebration in the United States. There was a parade of artillery, infantry, mounted Rural Guards, and police, which was reviewed by President Palma. Big crowds gathered along the line of march and the buildings generally were decorated.

By order of the City Council fifty sewing machines were presented at the Mayor's office to deserving poor people. There were boat races in the afternoon and fireworks in the evening.

The celebration was more generally observed than on either of the preceding anniversaries. This afternoon President Palma received the diplomatic corps, officials, and public. This evening, besides appearing at other functions, the President was the guest of honor at the Spanish Casino, an aristocratic club, which for the first time gave a ball in honor of the anniversary, and at which the most cordial feeling prevailed. The Spanish press has congratulated and commended the Cuban Government.

The National Liberal convention, which is in session here, suspended work for the day. The convention will meet again to-morrow.

SANTIAGO, Cuba, May 20.—Sunday quiet prevailed here to-day, the Mayor having issued a proclamation suspending the celebration of the anniversary of the inauguration of the republic owing to the illness of Gen. Maximo Gomez. Masses for the sick General took the place of noisy demonstrations.

Gen. Gomez continues to improve.

PICTURESQUE WELCOME FOR FUTURE KAISERIN

FOUR DAYS OF FESTIVITIES

Will Last from June 3 Till June 6—Wedding Entertainments Are to be Comparatively Private.

BERLIN, May 20.—The entertainments in celebration of the wedding of Crown Prince Frederick William and the Duchess Cecilia of Mecklenburg-Schwerin will last four days, beginning Saturday, June 3, the day the bride and her family arrive here from Schwerin and take up their residence in the Bellevue Palace.

The Duchess will be received at the Brandenburg Gate by the Chief Burgomaster and the City Fathers and by 100 young women of leading families, who have been drawn by lot from several hundred candidates, and who will present flowers to their future Empress. The girls will be dressed alike in Gretchen costumes, with their hair in braids down the back.

Behind the Crown Prince and his bride will ride butchers, postmen, and deputations from other trades and occupations, according to immemorial custom. Those chosen to form the cavalcade are now in training at the garrison riding schools.

The Emperor has commanded that this entrance into the city, which will be the only public celebration, shall be simple, and if possible beautiful. The three-quarters of a mile of Unter den Linden, from the Brandenburg Gate to the Palace, where the Emperor and Empress will await the Duchess Cecilia, will be hung with garlands of roses. Artificial ones will be the only sort used, as they will have to stand four days' exposure. Eighty thousand garlands have been ordered.

Seats and windows along Unter den Linden have been selling for from $7.50 for the former to $125 for the latter.

Except for the numerous Court equipages and uniforms which will be seen in the streets and the Princes going and coming from every hotel, there will not be anything else for the public to see, as the festivities will be private, and only members of royal families, Ambassadors, officials, and a few other important personages will take part in them.

The chapel of the Palace, where the wedding will take place, holds only about 300 persons, but there will be a service at the cathedral on Sunday, and a dinner, at which the Hohenzollern and Mecklenburg-Schwerin families and the visiting Princes, of whom there are to be fifty or sixty, will be present.

There are so many Princes coming, each of whom must be treated ceremoniously, that the Imperial Court Marshal's office is perplexed over questions of precedence. The Ambassadors will probably be invited only to one or two functions, so as to avoid placing them below members of small German houses.

The wedding gifts will be presented in the palace on the morning of Monday, June 5, when deputations with congratulatory addresses will also be received. Later there will be a breakfast, and the State dinner will be served at 5:30 in the afternoon so as to be ended in time to permit of the punctual appearance of all the guests at a gala performance at the opera the same evening.

The civil marriage ceremony on June 6 will be performed by House Minister von Wedel, and the religious rite will be celebrated by Dr. Dryander, the Court Chaplain, in the palace chapel.

The procedure to be observed in the wedding of the Crown Prince fills 113 pages of the "Book of Ceremonies of the House of Hohenzollern."

KING RECEIVES MR. STOKES.

Italian Ruler Much Interested in the Work of the Y. M. C. A.

ROME, May 20.—King Victor Emanuel to-day received James Stokes of New York, Vice President of the Young Men's Christian Association, in private audience. The King spoke lengthily to Mr. Stokes about the work accomplished in Italy and other countries by the Young Men's Christian Association, manifesting great interest in the progress of the association.

In the course of his stay here Mr. Stokes has also been received by Premier Fortis and the Ministers of War, the Navy, and Agriculture, discussing with them the work of the association among the soldiers, sailors, and Government employes.

SIGHTS FLEUR DE LYS WITH THE ENDYMION

Tramp Steamer Reports Kaiser Cup Boats on Southerly Course.

MAKING FOR GULF STREAM

Apache Is Again Seen by Ocean Liner —Was Sixty-five Miles East of Nantucket.

Special to The New York Times.

Estimating the positions of the yachts reported thus far in the Kaiser Cup race from the places last sighted and their speed under conditions known to exist it would appear that:

The Hamburg and Atlantic had traversed 900 miles or more by Saturday midnight.

The Endymion and Fleur de Lys ought to be nearly as far advanced on a more southerly course.

The Alisa is likely to have made from 750 to 800 miles.

The Valhalla ought to be about 700 miles out.

The Apache has probably made something under 650 miles.

BOSTON, Mass., May 20.—The Endymion and the Fleur de Lys have been sighted, making the sixth and seventh boats heard from since the start of the ocean race for the Kaiser's Cup. They were passed by the British tramp steamer Kennell, which arrived here to-day from Cienfuegos, Cuba. They were spoken on Thursday night by the Kennell well south of the Nantucket Shoal Lightship, and proceeding on a more southerly route than that taken by any of the other yachts reported. They were proceeding east, with the evident intention of avoiding the beaten track followed usually by ocean liners and of picking up a Gulf Stream current which would aid their speed.

This bears out the report of the course taken by the Endymion as made by the party of Indian Harbor yachtsmen who followed their representative forty-five miles out on the first day. It shows Capt. Loesch knows what he is doing, and is missing no tricks in this race. That Capt. Bohlin, on the Fleur de Lys, is following the same general direction is not surprising. It was thought these two old sea dogs knew the same tricks, and would follow a line different from that pursued by any other skippers. What advantage they may find is not known, but it is safe to say they are confident that they are taking the wiser course.

The speed of the two boats up until the time spoken was not as great as that shown to have been attained by the Atlantic and the Hamburg. The German and the Marshall boats were undoubtedly leaders on Thursday night. Capt. Loesch and Capt. Bohlin were making good progress, nevertheless, and undoubtedly have a satisfactory position in the race at this time, if they have experienced anything like equal luck.

The Endymion was reported in longitude 70 degrees 6 minutes west, latitude 39 degrees 45 minutes north. The time was 6:10 P. M. on Thursday. This position lies south of the Nantucket Lightship 23 degrees west, true 57 miles, and is about 25 miles west of Nantucket and 50 miles south. This means the Endymion had covered about 187 miles from New York in the thirty hours she had been out and was making about six and a quarter miles an hour on the average. This was about a mile slower than the Atlantic and the Hamburg were recording.

The Fleur de Lys was sighted three hours later, at 9:10 P. M., Thursday. She was reported in longitude 69 degrees 49 minutes west, latitude 40 degrees 8 minutes north. This position is south of Nantucket Lightship 18 degrees west, true 31 miles, and is about 17 miles west of Nantucket and 22 miles south. This would mean the Fleur de Lys was 195 miles from New York in thirty-three hours and making an average of 6 miles an hour.

The Hildegarde also took the same direction as the Endymion and the Fleur de Lys. She ought to be somewhere in the same general neighborhood.

Capt. Torney of the Kennell said he had recognized the Endymion readily in a good light. He described her as a black painted hull, flying the pennant of the Indian Harbor Yacht Club and the signal letters "K. P. Q. L.," her special signal for this race. She had balloon jib and spinnaker set, and was making good headway.

The Fleur de Lys he did not see clearly in the darkness, though he saw she had a white hull and showed a green, red, green night signal. This is the private code signal for Dr. Stimson's boat in the race.

Edmund Randolph's bark Apache has been again sighted. The North German Lloyd steamer Prinzess Alice, which arrived in New York yesterday, passed her sixty-five miles east of Nantucket at 3:30 o'clock Friday afternoon. She was then heading east under full sail with a twenty-knot breeze blowing off port quarter from west-northwest. She was footing fast, and appeared to be making a good pace, probably about ten knots. Her position was some 120 miles east of where she was previously reported seventeen hours before, so that she had averaged in that time a trifle under eight and one-quarter miles an hour.

When seen by the Grosser Kurfurst, 136 miles out, she was beating against a head wind and making very little headway. The wind continued for quite three or four hours, according to the outward-bound steamer's report, so that the Apache could not have advanced more than fifteen miles or so against it. The wind shifted to north-northwest and freshened after this, the conditions improving to the bark's liking, and in the thirteen hours that elapsed before she met the Prinzess Alice she apparently averaged over nine miles an hour. In view of the softening of the breeze during part of that time, she evidently was giving a good account of herself.

The Nantucket Light lies sixty miles east of where she was sighted by the Grosser Kurfurst at 10 o'clock on Thursday night. It doubtless took her nine hours to make the distance, in view of the head winds that prevailed half the time. This would mean she passed in the neighborhood of the lightship at 7 o'clock Friday morning. Since it was clear then, she must have passed well south of the shoals.

The Valhalla had been reported there at midnight Thursday. She thus had a seven-hour start of her big square-rigged rival. In that time under prevailing conditions she might be expected to make from nine to ten knots an hour. This would mean that she would have proceeded 75 miles before the Apache passed the shoal light. The Valhalla would thus be about 130 miles beyond Nantucket Light when the Apache met the Prinzess Alice.

Both these boats should make faster time with westerly winds than either the Hamburg or the Atlantic. Estimating the speed the two so-called "leaders" were making when last sighted, it is presumed that in the same time they would have run about 350 miles from their former position. They would thus be just short of 1,000 miles out, or about 200 miles west of the Lizard, and about 200 to 250 miles ahead of

AUTO UPSETS CAB IN PARK.

Chauffeur Escapes with Machine, Leaving Two Women Hurt.

A large touring automobile crashed into a cab containing two women in the west drive near Eighty-first Street, in Central Park, shortly after 12 o'clock to-day. The cab was overturned, both women thrown out, the cab demolished, and the horse killed.

After the crash, the automobile backed from the wreckage and started down the Drive at a rapid rate. Mounted policemen started after them, blowing their whistles, but the machine pulled away and left the policemen far behind.

The cab was owned by Emil Seelig of 238 West Fifty-fourth Street, and was driven by Michael Cochran of 789 Ninth Avenue. Both the women were slightly injured. They refused to give their names to the police.

DOCTOR SLEEPING TO DEATH.

Trouble Diagnosed as Form of Meningitis—Trephining of No Avail.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, Penn., May 20.—Dr. Erwin Fischer of the East End is dying from oversleeping. He has been asleep about five weeks, and it is feared cannot recover. Overwork and worry about patients caused the breakdown.

Dr. Carl A. Emmerling to-day diagnosed the case as meningitis, but of an entirely different nature from the cerebro-spinal form.

As a last hope the operation of trephining was performed at the home of the patient last Tuesday. Dr. Carl Beck of St. Mary's Hospital, New York; Dr. Carl A. Emmerling and his son, and Dr. Stewart of Mercy Hospital were in attendance. Little hope, however, is entertained of Dr. Fischer's recovery.

At the Fischer residence it was announced that Mrs. Fischer was prostrated, and could not be seen. Her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Carl Bersch of Washington, the former an artist, have come to Pittsburg.

LIKE A ROAD, BUT IT'S A DAM.

And You Mustn't Travel More Than Four Miles an Hour on It.

It has been discovered that a splendid piece of hard roadway in the western part of Patchogue, L. I., is a "dam." The discovery was made while poring over some old records. Vehicles are allowed to go no faster than four miles an hour over dams, so the Deputy Sheriffs have had signs set out on either side of what is known as West Lake, reading, "Slow Down to 4 Miles an Hour While Crossing This Dam."

When the designation of dam was given to the strip it was really a dam, twelve feet wide, and any kind of speeding over it would have been a menace to its safety. But certain Patchoguers scorn the use of the old-time designation at present. H. O. Davis says he "hopes the town will not be disgraced by the enforcement of this statute while murderers and chicken thieves go unpunished."

All the same, Deputies are to be in attendance to-day with stop watches and specially prepared signals, and any autoist whose machine travels at the rate of four miles and a quarter or better will be arrested.

1,000,000 BEERS HIS GIFT.

Constable, Recipient of Brewer's Bounty, Sorry Life Is So Short.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, May 20.—Perhaps the most envied man in Western Pennsylvania to-day is Constable John Bertges of Alderman Stork's office.

The constable having done some slight favor for Anton Lutz, the brewer, and having refused cash payment, has just received an order for 1,000,000 glasses of beer. The order is not transferable, nor can Bertges collect in bulk, the agreement being that he shall call at the different breweries controlled by Lutz as he becomes thirsty and drink the beer on the premises.

Bertges spent most of to-day seeing if the order was good. It was. To-night he did a little figuring, and is now sore that life is so short. His figures show that, drinking fourteen glasses a day, Sundays included, it would take him 208 years to get rid of the little present made to him by the brewer.

WARSHIP IN SEVERN RIVER.

The Texas Successfully Tests Dredged Channel at Annapolis.

Special to The New York Times.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., May 20.—The battleship Texas steamed into the Severn River Friday, and is the first battleship that had ever done so. Since the channel has been deepened thirty feet, it will permit of the entrance of any of the ships of the navy.

When the Texas first came there was some indecision as to whether she could come into the river, but after much consideration Admiral Dickens decided to steam into port. The big battleship is now moored at the Santee dock. The Texas will remain here now until the midshipmen embark for their Summer cruise.

The Severn channel was dredged at a cost of $30,000. Before this was done it was necessary for battleships or other large craft to anchor in the roadstead outside of the harbor and in the open bay.

LINER FRIESLAND GROUNDED.

But Got Off Again in an Hour—Miss Sutton Aboard.

PHILADELPHIA, May 20.—As the American liner Friesland proceeded down the Delaware to-day on her voyage to Liverpool she grounded when just off Washington Park, and remained fast for an hour. She succeeded in releasing herself without assistance, and sailed from Delaware Breakwater to-night.

Among the cabin passengers who left on the Friesland was Miss May Sutton of California, the champion woman tennis player of the United States, who will try her skill against the best of the female British players. A dozen or more friends were at the wharf to see her off, and Miss Sutton, if wishes count for anything, will add new laurels to her already long string of victories.

TO SELL THE LIGHTHOUSE.

Vesey Street Structure Called Oldest in Manhattan Except St. Paul's.

The "Lighthouse," at the northwest corner of Vesey and Greenwich Streets, believed by many to be the oldest building on Manhattan Island except St. Paul's Church, is to be sold at auction on June 7 by Philip A. Smyth.

The property is owned by the estate of Joseph P. Graham. Several months ago the old structure was badly damaged by fire.

$2,000 for Mme. du Gast's Rescuer.

PARIS, May 20.—Mme. du Gast (who attempted to navigate her autoboat Camille in the race from Algiers to Toulon by way of Port Mahon, Minorca,) has sent 10,000f. to the sailor who jumped into the sea from the French cruiser Kléber and rescued her during the storm which scattered the racing boats.

Pardons Turkey Stealing Policemen.

NEWARK, N. J., May 20.—Thomas X. Finnerty, William F. Steele, and James M. Jackson, the three former policemen who were sentenced last February to nine months in the penitentiary for stealing turkeys, have been paroled by the Court of Pardons, and will probably be released next week. The court acted on May 11, but the fact was not made public.

BRODIE DUKE CONVEYS PROPERTY TO TRUSTEES

Turns Over Everything to Two Appointed for One Year.

WILL LIVE ON $100 A MONTH

Provision for Extending the Term Unless He Applies in Writing for Restoration.

ASHEVILLE, N. C., May 20.—Brodie L. Duke, a son of the late Washington Duke of Durham, N. C., to-day signed a deed of trust, transferring for one year to two trustees all control over all his property. The instrument in part said:

"For good and sufficient reasons the party of the first part (Brodie L. Duke) is desirous of relinquishing his power of alienation and all right of control over all real and personal property and estate of every name, and wheresoever the same may be situated or located of which he is now seized or possessed, for the period of at least one year."

The property is conveyed in due form to C. M. Edwards and R. B. Boone, as trustees. The instrument provides that $100 a month shall be paid to Brodie L. Duke for living expenses by the trustees out of the revenue. It is further provided that if, at the expiration of one year, Duke shall make written application for the property, it shall be reconveyed to him. Otherwise, the trust deed shall remain in full force. Provision also is made that if Duke dies in the meantime the property shall be reconveyed to his heirs. The trustees are to receive $100 a month each.

After failing of election to the North Carolina Legislature last Fall from the city of Durham, Brodie L. Duke, half-brother of James B. Duke of the American Tobacco Company, did not appear before the public until on the night of Jan. 1, this year, he was taken by detectives from the Park Avenue Hotel in this city, where he had been staying with his bride, formerly Miss Alice Webb of Chicago, to the Sanford Hall Sanitarium at Flushing, L. I. The warrant was issued by Judge Wyatt of Special Sessions on application of De Lancey Nicoll in behalf of the Duke family, and especially B. Lawrence Duke, a son.

It was alleged, as basis for the warrant, that Duke was enticed into marrying Miss Webb while irresponsible, and that she had obtained from him considerable cash, as well as promissory notes. Mrs. Duke left the hotel, but appeared on summons before District Attorney Jerome. One week after the arrest Mrs. Duke obtained from Justice Gaynor in Brooklyn an order for appointment of a commission in lunacy. This resulted in the transfer of Duke from the sanitarium to the Long Island Home at Amityville.

Immediately afterward lawyers for Duke began habeas corpus proceedings. At the examination there were three sets of lawyers, one for the Duke family, another representing Duke himself, and a third acting for Mrs. Duke. Duke finally was set free. In the meantime he had refused to see either his son or his wife.

About the end of January Mrs. Duke was arrested here at the request of the authorities of Nacogdoches County, Texas, who were investigating an alleged loan swindle. After an exchange of many telegrams she was released, the Texas authorities having failed to produce evidence that a crime had been committed.

HALIFAX MAY NOW DRINK.

Reversion of Provincial License Law Put Through After Contest.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 20.—"For the first time in many years it will be legal to drink a glass of beer or whisky in a barroom in the City of Halifax," writes Consul General W. R. Holloway. "A liquor license bill for the city, proposed by the Halifax Aldermen, has been passed by the Legislature. It is a complete reversion of the provincial license law, and was bitterly opposed by the temperance people.

"Under the new amendments a scale of high-license fees is adopted. The hours for selling are extended from 9 to 10 o'clock at night, except on Saturday, when the time is extended from 6 o'clock in the evening till 9 o'clock, and selling by the glass is made legal. The City Council guaranteed in effect that if these amendments were passed the law would be strictly enforced, including the prohibition of Sunday selling."

CAR TWICE AFIRE.

Woman Hurt in the Scramble to Get Out—Six Cut in a Collision.

There was a stampede of passengers from a crowded Flushing Avenue trolley car on its way to the bridge in Brooklyn yesterday morning when it was discovered that the floor was on fire. The car had then reached Sands and Bridge Streets. Defective insulation caused the fire.

Some one turned in a fire alarm, and when the firemen arrived they put out the fire—or thought they put it out—with chemical extinguishers. The car went on. It had gone only a block or two when the woodwork caught fire again. This time the firemen made sure of the job in putting it out. In the first scramble to get out of the car a woman wrenched her ankle. Friends took her home.

About the same time two cars of the Putnam Avenue line collided at the switch at Fulton Street and Greene Avenue. Half a dozen of the passengers were cut and bruised. Two men and a woman were attended by a physician.

United Brethren's Books Involved.

TOPEKA, Kan., May 20.—A commission of the United Brethren Church to-day refused to accept the report of Dr. McKee of Dayton, Ohio, as Treasurer. He was placed in charge four years ago when the General Conference adopted a new system of bookkeeping. The committee makes no charges against Dr. McKee, but asserts that a bad system of bookkeeping has mixed up the accounts. It is expected that he will resign.

Plank Made Excise Attorney.

OGDENSBURG, N. Y., May 20.—Charles S. Plank, Assemblyman from the First St. Lawrence District for six years, has accepted office as attorney in the State Excise Department, and will leave the Legislature. Fred J. Gray is the only announced Republican candidate for the vacancy in the Assembly.

THE UNITED SERVICE.

The Army.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 20.—Lieut. Col. James S. Pettit, Military Secretary, is relieved from treatment at the general hospital, Hot Springs, Ark., and will join his proper station.

The retirement from active service of Lieut. Col. Edward T. Comegys, Deputy Surgeon General, at his own request on account of thirty years' service is announced.

Major C. G. Wood, Artillery, and First Lieut. Ernest V. Murphy, Twenty-ninth Infantry, are detailed to attend the encampment of the organized militia of Wisconsin from July 1 to 31.

Major William C. Borden, Surgeon, will proceed to New York City for the purpose of consulting with architects regarding plans for the army general hospital to be constructed at Washington.

Capt. S. A. Cheney, Engineers, is assigned as chief engineer officer, Northern Division, to take effect upon his relief as aide de camp to Major Gen. John C. Bates.

METER SWINDLE CHARGED.

Police Get After the Hoyt Company Alleging False Pretences.

Mrs. Anna Hoyt, said to be the head of the Hoyt Inspection Company, which makes a specialty of inspecting gas and water meters, was in the Tombs Court yesterday on a charge of swindling, which later was changed to one alleging violation of the statute prohibiting a corporation or individual from doing business under an assumed name except where notice had been filed with the County Clerk. Under the latter charge Mrs. Hoyt was paroled in the custody of her counsel until to-morrow afternoon, when a further examination will be held.

The woman was arraigned by Detective Sergeant Herlihy, who told Magistrate Finn that many complaints regarding the Hoyt Inspection Company had been received at Police Headquarters. Before the charge was amended Ludwig Sutro, President of the Sutro Brothers' Braid Company of 127 Spring Street, was the complainant.

He said that a man representing himself as an emissary of the Hoyt Inspection Company called at the office of the Sutro firm about a month ago and offered to inspect the six meters on the premises at a rate of $3.50 for each inspection, with the further pledge that if it should be found that the meters were registering too fast the inspection company would put in a claim to the gas company and recover what Sutro Brothers had paid in excess of the legitimate charge.

Mr. Sutro said he fell in with the proposal, and that another man, who called later and tested the meters certified that they registered 5 per cent. too fast. After collecting $19 for his work he went away, promising a refund check on the excess charge. This, Mr. Sutro avers, was the last he saw or heard from the Inspector or the company.

Mr. Sutro, who lives at 44 West Seventy-sixth Street, said last night at his home that under similar pledges and with similar results the inspection concern had been retained by Mrs. Sutro to inspect the gas meter at their residence, and his son Herbert had had a similar experience. Mrs. Hoyt, whose husband, according to Detective Sergeant Herlihy, was the active head of the company until recently, when he went to Connecticut to live, could not be found last night.

TWO MEN AND WOMAN KILLED IN ELEVATORS

Three Accidents in Different Downtown Buildings.

ELEVATOR RUNNER ARRESTED

Man Crushed to Death on Twenty-first Floor of Trinity Building —A Porter Killed.

Two men and a woman were killed by elevators in different downtown buildings in business hours yesterday. Alice Rodden, thirty-three years old, who lived at 317 Furman Street, Brooklyn, a scrub-woman in the Lord's Court Building, 27 William Street, was killed on the thirteenth floor in the morning. Eugene Brickman, the elevator runner, was arrested on a charge of homicide, and was later paroled in the custody of his counsel by Coroner Goldenkrantz.

Samuel Goldstein, who ran one of the eleven elevators of the new Trinity Building, 115 Broadway, was crushed to death at the twenty-first floor. No one saw the accident. The elevator descended to the basement and the body was then found. Goldstein was twenty years old, and lived at 544 Newark Avenue, Jersey City.

Carl Phillips, sixty years old, of 7 East One Hundred and Fifth Street, porter for the American Hard Rubber Company, 9-13 Mercer Street, became wedged in the door of the elevator shaft and was killed by the descending car.

Paul Richards, forty years old, of 416 Traphagen Street, Hoboken, the elevator runner, who was a close friend of Phillips, fainted when he realized what had happened and was still unconscious when he was removed to St. Vincent's Hospital, nominally a prisoner.

CHAS. M. HOGAN DEAD AFTER A BRIEF ILLNESS

He Was General Manager of the Siegel Cooper Company.

STARTED WITH WANAMAKER

Robert C. Ogden's Tribute to Him as a Valuable Organizer and a Popular Figure in the Dry Goods Trade.

Charles M. Hogan, General Manager and Secretary of the Siegel Cooper Company, died yesterday afternoon of erysipelas at his residence, 302 Central Park West. Mr. Hogan had been ill about two weeks, and those closest to him had known for several days that there was no chance for his recovery. Many of his friends, however, were not aware of his serious condition, and the news of his death came as a shock to them.

Mr. Hogan was born in Burlington, N. J., fifty-one years ago. He began his business career in Philadelphia when only seventeen years old. Starting in at the bottom of the ladder with John Wanamaker, his ability and tireless industry at once won recognition, and he was promoted from one post to another, till at a comparatively early age he was in charge of the credits and accounts of the establishment.

In 1804 he came to New York and associated himself with the management of the Hilton, Hughes & Co. store. Here he won new fame for himself, and when the Siegel-Cooper store was being prepared in 1896 he was chosen to be its manager. Several years ago he was made Secretary of the concern.

His connection with the enterprise was a story of unbroken success. During his long and busy career he acquired an extraordinary grasp of the best business methods, and an expert knowledge of every branch and division of store management. He was one of the foremost men in his particular field.

Mr. Hogan was interested in athletics. He was an enthusiastic member of the New York Athletic Club and other kindred organizations. In addition to his membership in these organizations he belonged to the Aldine Association, the Pennsylvania Society, the Sphinx Club, and the Presbyterian Union. He had been a member of the Central Presbyterian Church since he moved to New York, and was one of the foremost in its affairs.

Besides his connection with the Siegel-Cooper Company he was Secretary and a Director of the Joseph Benedict Company and the Manhattan Laboratories.

Mr. Hogan was one of the survivors of the Johnstown flood. He was in that city on business when the dam burst, and had a narrow escape. Mrs. Hogan survives her husband, as does one daughter, Edith. He will be buried in Camden, N. J., on Tuesday.

"I first knew Mr. Hogan twenty-five years ago, when I became connected with the Wanamaker store in Philadelphia," said Robert C. Ogden last night. "He was then holding a responsible position and enjoying the fullest confidence of the concern. He was with us until 1894, when he came to New York. The possessor of a quick and alert mind, he was wonderfully clear of comprehension and quick of action. These qualities with an absolute gift for organization won for him his place in the business world. Of genial and kindly spirit, he was easily approachable by all, and deservedly popular. I was deeply grieved to learn of his death."

The following resolution was adopted yesterday at a special meeting of the Executive Committee of the Sphinx Club, called to take action upon Mr. Hogan's death:

In the death of Charles M. Hogan the Sphinx Club of New York City has lost one of its most influential members. He had been a member of the Executive Committee for several years, and always manifested a lively concern in the welfare of the association.

His high character, his unusual ability, his courteous bearing, and his consideration for others greatly endeared him to all the members of the club, and, indeed, to all men with whom he came in contact. In his death the City of New York loses a valuable and public spirited citizen.

The Sphinx Club offers to the bereaved family the expression of its sincere sympathy.

BANK TELLER ROBBED.

Boy Burglars Gather in a Wagon Load from Marshall Clements's House.

Special to The New York Times.

MOUNT VERNON, N. Y., May 20.—The home of Marshall H. Clements, a teller in the Metropolitan Bank in New York, who lives at 123 Urban Street, this city, was discovered to-day had been looted in the absence of the family by boy burglars, who carried off nearly a wagon load of plunder and stored it in a cave on the outskirts of the city. There are six boys in the gang.

In the plunder was the Clements baby carriage, a bathrobe, a hall clock, and the contents of seven trunks. Besides taking the property found in the cave, they broke open an iron box containing Mr. Clemente's bonds and mortgages and kicked holes through a half dozen paintings.

BABY STOLEN; FOUND DEAD.

Mother Left It Outside While She Went Into Toronto Store.

TORONTO, May 20.—Mrs. William Murray left her nine-months-old baby in a gocart at the entrance to one of the department stores yesterday. When she returned in a few minutes the gocart and baby had disappeared. The police searched all night without avail.

This afternoon the child's body was found strapped in the gocart close beside the Grand Trunk Railway tracks, in the eastern limits of the city. It had been stripped of its underclothes, and there were bruises on the head.

B. B. OGDEN'S DOUBLE FREED.

Man Held in Tennessee Was Not Fugitive Jersey Mayor.

Special to The New York Times.

SMITHVILLE, Tenn., May 20.—Harry Palmer, arrested on suspicion of being Benjamin B. Ogden, formerly Mayor of Keyport, N. J., who disappeared some time ago, leaving big debts, has been released from custody, as the New Jersey detective failed to identify him.

The detective stated that while Palmer had the physical characteristics of Ogden, he was not the man wanted.

Biggest Five-Master Ashore.

NANTUCKET, Mass., May 20. — The schooner Jane Palmer of 2,823 tons, the largest five-masted schooner afloat, is ashore on Great Rip, off the east end of Nantucket. The crew came ashore in boats. The vessel was bound from Newport News for Portland with coal. She is in an exposed position, but is leaking only slightly. Steamers with wrecking crews are trying to save her.

IS IT PAUL JONES'S BODY?

Serious Doubts Expressed as to the "Find" of Ambassador Porter.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

For many years I have been so much interested in matters relating to the life and death of John Paul Jones, the founder of the American Navy, that I have accumulated quite a collection of newspaper and other clippings on the subject. I find a paucity of matter touching upon the later days, death and burial place of the illustrious naval man, and following that a flood of matter pertaining to the discovery of a body said to be that of John Paul Jones in the old St. Louis Cemetery, 14 Rue Grange aux Belles, Paris.

While I do not wish to cast doubt upon the integrity of Ambassador Porter, who is to be commended for his untiring efforts to determine the whereabouts of the Admiral's remains, or upon the authenticity of his find, the accounts which have so far reached me of the finding of the body and the measures taken to identify it have failed to drive out of my mind a suspicion that there may be a mistake somewhere. I consider it my duty and the duty of every citizen who has the dignity of his country at heart and who has a lingering suspicion like mine, to come forward with it, or "forever after hold his peace." To hold one's peace will be the only possible course after the supposed body of John Paul Jones is brought here by a squadron and interred with every solemn honor in some majestic tomb, unless, perhaps—but one shudders to think of the situation that might result were another body of John Paul Jones to be found—and who could say nay then who cannot say it now?—while under the vasty tomb hung with wreaths of glory lay the body of—whom?

It would be a grave situation for this country, but to the rest of the world the pathos of the United States' dilemma would begin with a "b." I can fancy Mr. Punch in his office in London rolling under the table in a species of convulsion while the Parisian wits laid wagers on its being Jules, who sold sausage strings in the Quartier Latin, or one of Henri Murger's devil-may-care Bohemians, who occupied the honored tomb of John Paul Jones, the founder of the American Navy—Rudolfo, who was carried through the streets of Paris with a military escort, or Schaunard, who was borne across the seas with a naval escort, or Colline over whose undeserved resting place muffled drums groaned and cannon fired.

It is because of this not absurd possibility and possibility of absurdity, that I would ask intelligent persons to convince one who may have less intelligence that the remains our navy proposes to bring to this country with every honor are those of John Paul Jones and not the body of some café celebrity who would, if such a thing were possible, turn in his grave and chuckle, with only one regret—that his old comrades were not around to hear a narration of this, his latest and craziest adventure. It is probable that Ambassador Porter really has found what he started out to find, but it does not seem that the evidence warrants the United States Government in throwing caution to the winds. Many men agree that while there is doubt it might be as well to "gang warily" about how many cannon are allowed to roar over the supposed remains of John Paul Jones. After all, the body is the least of the essentials to a display of patriotic spirit. Some memorial to theAdmiral, to be given to the world on July 20, which is said to be the anniversary of the founder's death, could be attended by all the naval and military honors without fear of a possible fiasco later. Let the good the man did live in a memorial, but let a possible evil lie interred with those possible bones.

Again, I have no wish to prejudice the mind against the probability of the remains found in the St. Louis Cemetery being those of John Paul Jones, but I will say that the search for and the finding of the body is apt to remind one of the story of Christopher Columbus, who found some islands, but was convinced that he had found a continent because he had previously set out to find one. His imagination supplied all the evidences which he considered necessary. Columbus thought he had found India. It was later found that he had done nothing of the kind, but had discovered something at least equally good. Ambassador Porter may have found the remains of some person deserving of honor, but the point is that the enthusiasm which carried the Ambassador through five years of search and a continuation of the same at his own expense, after an appropriation had not been granted, undoubtedly must have placed in every body he found a possible John Paul Jones!

In support of this, late in February a leaden casket was unearthed under one of the buildings which now cover the old St. Louis Cemetery in Paris. A cable dispatch dated Feb. 24 announced the find, and before the body had been viewed it was said that the casket was "believed to contain the body of John Paul Jones." The body turned out to be that of an Englishman who had been buried two years before Jones died.

Again we find that Ambassador Porter, in a report to his Government at the time when he asked for the appropriation to cover the cost of excavating, is reported to have said that he had found documentary proof that Jones had been buried in the old Protestant cemetery of St. Louis, in the northeast section of Paris. My collection of clippings may not be complete, but I fail to find any of the substance of this documentary proof. But here is a clipping from THE TIMES of March 12, 1905, which is from an interview with James Barnes, a descendant of Commodore Barry, who was an intimate friend of Jones and one of the founders of the navy:

"I have devoted some study to John Paul Jones and his life, and spent some time in Paris tracing the records of his life there, his death, and burial place. It is my opinion that the body of John Paul Jones will never be found. I traced them to the place where they were laid, only to discover that the burial ground had been torn up. The probability now is that the bones of the illustrious John Paul Jones are scattered in the catacombs of Paris."

By the same clipping I learn that the Barnes family possesses some interesting relics of Jones, including a log book of the Bon Homme Richard, written by Richard Dale, a mate of Jones and a great-granduncle of Mr. Barnes, also some books and a number of letters written by the Admiral. Perhaps some of those descendants of men who were intimate with John Paul Jones in his later days may have some evidence to give which will help to settle once and for all time the identity of the body found by Ambassador Porter.

The fact that four coffins were found, three with name plates and the fourth without a plate, is no evidence that the body in the fourth casket was that of the founder of the American Navy. And while expert anthropologists in Paris have given opinions which are interesting as coincidences, they may have felt the same enthusiasm and been as sanguine of the result of their examination as Ambassador Porter seems to have been about finding the body and Columbus was when he thought he had found India because the land he discovered looked like it.

MORE FUSS IN PATERSON OVER PASTOR DE LARME

Denial of His Engagement to Miss Mather Causes Trouble.

MINISTER MUST EXPLAIN

Church Trustees Have Refused to Accept His Resignation, but May Give Him a Vacation.

PATERSON, N. J., May 20.—The Board of Trustees of the First Baptist Church in this city are not inclined to accept the resignation of their pastor, the Rev. A. A. De Larme, and have offered him six months' leave of absence with pay.

Mr. De Larme requested that his resignation take effect on June 1, and gave as his reason for resigning that he was in poor health and needed a rest. The telegram he sent from Atlantic City denying that he was engaged to Miss Mary Mather, a young woman member of his flock, has caused a sensation in Paterson. To-day the following notice is printed in a local paper by Arthur Vandenbree, a brother-in-law of Miss Mather:

We have noticed the Rev. Mr. De Larme's denial of his engagement to Mary Mather, and we wish to reiterate that our announcement of the 18th inst. of such engagement is absolutely true. MR. AND MRS. VANDENBREE.

Miss Mather still declines to be interviewed, but Mr. Vandenbree intimates that when Mr. De Larme returns to Paterson she may have something to say if the minister does not fully explain why he had made a public denial of his engagement to her.

The Board of Trustees of the First Baptist Church has decided to have a committee investigate the public statements made by Miss Mather's relatives and Mr. De Larme's denial that he is engaged to be married. The pastor will be requested to appear before the committee and make a statement.

COOK'S CLOTHING ABLAZE.

Delia Reilly Stepped on Match on Boarding-House Stair.

Delia Reilly, the cook in the boarding house known as the Omar, at 2,047 Seventh Avenue, started up to her room at 9 o'clock last night and stepped on a match on the stairway. The match set fire to the cook's clothing. Screaming, she ran down stairs, and fell in a faint on the stair landing. The boarders ran into the hallway and threw rugs and bed clothing upon her until the flames were extinguished.

In the meantime the match had set fire to the stair carpet, and it seemed as if the house was doomed when the firemen arrived. The men of Truck 14 used hand grenades and extinguished the flames.

The owner of the house, Mrs. M. A. Wallace, sent for her physician, who dressed Delia Reilly's injuries. She was severely burned, but will recover.

CLUE TO DEATH IN WRECK.

George Rowley's Photograph Recognized as That of a Passenger.

HARRISBURG, Penn., May 20.—Mrs. E. Rowley of Plainfield, N. J., was at the Harrisburg Hospital to-day seeking information about her husband, George Rowley, who was on the wrecked Pennsylvania express near this city on the night of May 10.

Out of the twenty-three patients in the hospital she found one, a Swedish woman, who recognized Rowley's photograph. The woman said that the man was seated opposite her in a Pullman car when the crash occurred. Mrs. Rowley is convinced that her husband was killed.

$1 TO SON AND DAUGHTER.

Edward Stolte's Will Complains That They Were Unkind.

The will of Edward Stolte, who died recently in the Borough of the Bronx, was filed for probate in the Surrogate's office yesterday.

After naming bequests of a dollar to his daughter Emilie and a dollar to his son Edward there follows this statement in the will:

"My reason for disinheriting my said daughter Emilie and my said son Edward is that they were unkind, inattentive, ungrateful, and disrespectful to me and never cared for me, and my daughter Emilie received all of my household goods from me and spoke untruthful about me."

The residuary estate is bequeathed to the testator's other daughter, Mrs. Sophie Ruhe, of 721 East One Hundred and Thirty-seventh Street. Mrs. Ruhe's husband, Bernard Ruhe, a bird dealer of Grand Street, is named as executor. The value of Stolte's estate is not given.

WAS PRISONER IN OFFICE.

Woman Stenographer Locked In Until Policemen Freed Her.

Miss Ballard, a stenographer employed in the office of Mooney & Boland at 130 Broadway, remained to finish some work last night and, at 7 o'clock, when she was ready to go home, found that the caretaker of the building had locked the door of the office on the outside.

After a wait of two hours Miss Ballard attracted the attention of Patrolman Grosky of the Church Street Station, who called Patrolman Denglehardt to assist him. The two policemen climbed the fire escape and reached the third floor. They threw a box over the transom to Miss Ballard, and she climbed upon this and was able to reach the transom. She climbed through with the aid of the policemen. Miss Ballard thanked Grosky and Denglehardt and, refusing to give her address, hurried home.

TWO ASK DIVORCES.

Wife Names as Co-respondent Wife of Man Who Names Her Husband.

WHITE PLAINS, May 20.—Two closely related divorce actions came up before Judge Keogh in the Supreme Court here to-day. One was the application of Mrs. Jennie Fletcher for a divorce from her husband, James Fletcher of Croton-on-Hudson, and the other was the suit for divorce brought by William H. Paine of Peekskill against his wife, Abbie Paine. In Mrs. Fletcher's suit Mrs. Paine was named as co-respondent, and Fletcher was made co-respondent in the action of Mr. Paine. No defense was made in either case.

A Sheriff's jury yesterday awarded Mrs. Fletcher $10,000 damages in a suit against Mrs. Paine for the alleged alienation of Mr. Fletcher's affections.

Gorham Co. Buys Durgin Concern.

The Gorham Manufacturing Company, Broadway and Nineteenth Street, which has works in this city and in Providence, R. I., has purchased the William B. Durgin Company, which has its New York office at 41 Union Square and its factory at Concord, N. H. The business of the Durgin Company will be continued by the new owners under the old name as a separate enterprise. The Durgin Company is one of the oldest and largest silver manufacturing concerns in the country.

Woman Who Lived Alone Found Dead.

WOODBURY, N. J., May 20.—Miss Margaret Bradley, aged fifty years, who lived alone in a small house at Franklinville, near here, was found dead late last night. She is supposed to have been dead for nearly a week, as nothing had been seen of her since last Sunday. Testimony at the inquest showed that the woman suffered from heart trouble, and the Coroner decided that she had died of natural causes. She ran a small truck farm.

STATEN ISLAND MAY NOT GET WATER FROM JERSEY

Injunction Will Be Served on the Hudson Company.

WILL STOP LAYING THE PIPES

Litigation May Be Continued by the State Until the Legislature Meets.

TRENTON, May 20.—Attorney General McCarter has announced the State's determination to fight to the bitter end the attempt of the Staten Island authorities to take drinking water out of New Jersey. The act signed by Gov. Stokes last week to prevent the diversion of the waters authorizes an application to Chancery against any company attempting it.

The Hudson County Water Company, an offshoot of the East Jersey Water Company, has contracted with the Bayonne city authorities to lay pipes from the public dock at Bayonne and under the Kill von Kull to Staten Island. The company had not carried its work, at the time the act was signed, where the act could not reach it, and the State will, if the company continues to lay pipes toward the waterway, seek to stop it by injunction. The water company says that the act is unconstitutional. That question will be adjudicated in the injunction proceedings. It is a question whether the court granting a temporary injunction, if it finds the act of questionable validity, will make the injunction good till the end of the litigation in the courts of appeal. A dissolution of the temporary restraining order might permit the company to go on with its work in spite of the act.

If, however, the injunction holds to the end, and there is serious doubt of the validity of the act, the State authorities will keep the litigation alive until the Legislature at the next session can amend it. There is talk, if the exigency demands it, of a special session of the Legislature for the purpose of passing a supplemental act strengthening that about to be litigated.

JOHANN HOCH COLLAPSES.

Murderer Spends Time Weeping—Says He Was Not Properly Convicted.

CHICAGO, May 20.—Johann Hoch has collapsed. The convicted wife poisoner, who all through his trial seemed to regard the charge against him as a joke and its possible outcome as a matter of no consequence, seemed to-day to realize for the first time the situation in which he is placed.

He spent the greater part of the day in his cell weeping, and at times his sobs were audible throughout the greater part of the jail. His lamentations brought scanty sympathy from his fellow-prisoners, who jeered at him and constantly urged him to "brace up and die like a man."

He asserts that he was not properly convicted, because the three "car barn" murderers were found guilty in forty-five minutes, and he was convicted in less than thirty minutes.

Daughter of Bishop Lawrence Weds.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., May 20.—Miss Julia Lawrence, second daughter of Bishop William Lawrence of Massachusetts, and Morton L. Fearey of Albany, N. Y., were married to-day at St. John's Memorial Chapel in this city. The bridegroom was graduated from Yale in 1898 and from the Harvard Law School in 1902. The ushers were well-known Harvard and Yale graduates. Bishop Lawrence performed the ceremony, assisted by Dean Hodges of the Episcopal Theological School of this city.

MT. POCONO REGION BUSY.

Good Train Service Expected to Aid Lively Season.

Special to The New York Times.

MOUNT POCONO, Penn., May 20.—News from the many hotels and camping grounds scattered over the 300 square miles of the Pocono Plateau indicate they will be more popular in the coming season than ever before. None of these resorts is more than three hours and a half by train from New York, an advantage to be considered by people with children, and especially business men who want to be within reaching district of the city on their vacations. The Delaware and Lackawanna Railroad has arranged for a fast and frequent train service.

The golf course here is being rapidly put in shape and many laborers are now at work on the putting greens in anticipation of the golfers who will begin the season with Memorial Day.

The hotels at the Delaware Water Gap are making engagements for Decoration Day, expecting a record-breaking holiday crowd. Many improvements have been made in the mountain walks and drives in anticipation of an early opening of the season. The Caldeno Golf Club has a large force of men at work on the links. Everybody here expects the liveliest sort of a season.

SPECIAL CARS FOR BATHERS.

Will Convey Scantily Clad to Atlantic City's Beach.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., May 20.—The local trolley car company proposes an innovation that will attract the attention of all bathing resort patrons. There has been much criticism for years past of the propriety of bathers running through the streets to and from the beaches in their bathing costumes.

The habit has been the object of several restraining city ordinances that are poorly observed.

The trolley car company is to undertake to meet the situation by running special trolley cars for the use of bathers in surf garb. Several cars are being rebuilt and arranged with particular view to the service. They will be run frequently in the bathing hours and will be put on about June 10.

GOT $800 FROM A BUGGY.

Stranger Fooled Cleveland Firm's Cashier, Who Was Driving.

CLEVELAND, May 20.—Just after the cashier of the Julier Baking Company had placed a satchel containing $800 with which to meet the payroll to-day under the seat in his buggy, after drawing it from the bank, a stranger attracted his attention to some trouble with the horse's bit.

When he returned to get into the buggy he discovered that the money had been stolen.

PROHIBITION WON; SAG HARBOR DOUBLY DRY

Contributions for Watering the Streets Refused.

RETALIATION FOR "NO LIQUOR"

Women Who Worked for Temperance Rebuffed in Campaign for Street Sprinkler.

Special to The New York Times.

SAG HARBOR, L. I., May 20.—For several years the streets of Sag Harbor, L. I., have been sprinkled with water that was hauled about the streets by a wagon owned and run by members of the Sag Harbor Ladies' Village Improvement Association. "It takes the women to run things," said the merchants, and dipped down into their pockets when asked for contributions for the support of the water wagon. The streets were a delight all Summer long because the dust was well laid.

Early this Spring the women began a campaign against the sale of liquor in the town of East Hampton, and "The Water Wagon" was the slogan. Prohibition won.

"I've called for a contribution for the water wagon," said a smiling woman yesterday as she tendered a subscription paper and a pencil to one of Sag Harbor's merchants.

"I'll not give one kopeck for the water wagon, real or fanciful," said the merchant sourly. "This town has been voted 'dry' and dry it will be."

Other merchants of convivial tastes are said to have declined contributions. The streets of Sag Harbor may be as dry this Summer as will be the throats of her residents.

WALLS DRIPPED HONEY.

Twelve Pailfuls Taken from Old House in Rahway.

Special to The New York Times.

RAHWAY, N. J., May 20.—Workmen engaged in overhauling the McMahon mansion, on Elm Avenue, this morning discovered that the walls of a room in the third story were dripping with honey, which was oozing from between the plaster and the outside boards. A dozen large pailfuls of honey were taken out, and more remains. The bees swarmed the room while the honey was being removed and severely stung Moses Reed.

The house has been unoccupied two years. Roses and wistaria vines grow over it.

Mrs. Murray, formerly Miss McMahon, says she had noticed bees flying about the house for years and had heard their hum and whirr in the walls.

STATEN ISLAND, JOYFUL, SEES FERRY LAUNCHING

Last of Five Municipal Boats Rides Kill von Kull.

CROWDS CHEER, BANDS PLAY

Richmond Is Expected to Make Trip Between Battery and St. George in Twenty Minutes.

The new ferryboat Richmond, named for that borough, and the last to be completed in the fleet of five modern boats constructed at the city's expense for its new municipal ferry service between the Battery and Staten Island, was launched yesterday morning at the yards of the Burlee Dry Dock Company, Port Richmond, S. I.

The launching was most successful, and in that respect differed from the launching of the four other ferryboats at Sparrow's Point, Md., a few weeks ago, where two of the four vessels could not be budged from the ways. Mayor McClellan traveled to Port Richmond on the Dock Department's tender Manhattan, accompanied by Dock Commissioner Featherson, Corporation Counsel Delany, some other city officials, and a large committee from the Board of Aldermen. The Mayor and his party were received at Port Richmond by Borough President Cromwell.

Staten Island was in holiday array for the occasion. From Tottenville to Mariner's Harbor on the North Shore public buildings and private dwellings were decorated with bunting, and American flags fluttering in the sharp breeze everywhere gave evidence of the pride and pleasure Staten Islanders took in the event. Large delegations from the Staten Island Board of Trade and Transportation, the North Shore Board of Trade, and the Staten Island Chamber of Commerce went to the launching in special cars as guests of William J. Burlee, President of the company. Nearly every person of any prominence in the Borough of Richmond and 1,500 guests from other boroughs were present by special invitation. Among the guests were many women.

The weather was ideal and a large crowd of spectators filled the spacious shipyard as well as every possible vantage point from which the launching could be seen, when the gates were thrown open to the general public at 9:30 o'clock yesterday morning.

EARLY HOUR WAS FIXED.

Mean high tide was at 9:35 yesterday morning and the launching had of necessity been fixed for the hour when the tide should be at its highest in the Kill von Kull. The ceremony was started on schedule time, even though some of the official guests had not arrived.

The Mayor and his party were on hand. On May 19 last year, when Mayor McClellan assisted at laying the corner stone of the Richmond Borough Hall, he said in his speech that within a year he expected to visit Staten Island as a passenger on one of the city's own ferryboats. So anxious was the Mayor to make good his prediction that preparatory to the launching he boarded the Richmond together with Dock Commissioner Featherson and stood on her upper deck as the flag-decked craft slid down the ways.

The party of official guests were escorted to a flag-decked stand which had been erected at the inshore end of the ways, directly under the bows of the ferryboat. Miss Mae Frances Davidson, the seventeen-year-old daughter of William J. Davidson, Vice President of the Burlee Dry Dock Company, who was to [illegible] the new boat, was waiting there for the guests, the centre of a little group composed of her parents and many girl friends. She wore a becoming lavender gown and a large picture hat.

At 9:30 sharp Municipal Judge Thomas C. Brown of Staten Island, who is Chairman of the North Shore Board of Trade, gave the signal for the ceremony to begin. The last shores were knocked away, Miss Davidson broke the traditional bottle of champagne over the bow of the vessel, and the sharp breeze wafted a fine shower of the liquid back over the guests and the young woman herself.

The vessel did not wait for the naming ceremony to be completed, but slid off the ways with express speed, and in an instant was midway in the Kill.

WELCOME TO NEW CRAFT.

The multitude cheered, caps and flags were waved, two bands played on the shore, and small steam craft in the Kill tooted their whistles joyfully in welcome to their bigger sister, as the Richmond, stately and graceful, rode the waves where, in the middle of the seventeenth century, the Aquehonga and Raritan Indians who in those days roamed the wilds of Staten Island emerged from the forest and, with trunks of trees hollowed out by means of heated stones, established the first ferry service between the "Sleeping Beauty of the Bay" and the mainland.

About 1,500 guests had been invited to the luncheon that followed the launching ceremony. Not a few of the breakfastless visitors who had been invited to partake of good cheer returned unfed because the police reserves sent down to maintain order insisted upon doing their full duty, and established a triple line between the hungry ones and the feast which had been spread in the moldroom of the yard. After the luncheon there were speeches by the Mayor, Dock Commissioner Featherson, Borough President Cromwell, Judge Brown, and District Attorney Kenney of Richmond County.

The Mayor was warmly greeted as he arose to speak, and seemed very pleased as repeatedly cries of "Four years more!" were borne to his ears. He congratulated Borough President Cromwell, Mr. Burlee, and all concerned upon the completion of the Richmond.

"I am glad to say," he continued, "that we have found a way of retaining all the splendid old crews of these ferries, from pilot down.

"Ladies and Gentlemen: I drink to the good ship Richmond; may she see many years of useful service to the city, and when she is relegated to the scrap heap, may she have the record of never having been late or missed a train."

The Richmond, which is almost ready for her trial trip, is 250 feet long, with 66 feet beam and 12 feet draught. The hull is of steel, with six water-tight compartments. Her speed will be about 18 knots, and she will make the trip between the Battery and St. George in something like twenty minutes. All the cabins are fitted with cross seats, and she will have seating accommodation for 861 passengers in stationary seats alone.

HORSE BROKE POLICE RULES.

Dragged Patrolmen Into Saloon and Upset Pinochle Game.

The driver of a horse owned by Nienhanck & Volge, Jersey City, left horse and wagon standing in front of 110 Oak Street yesterday while delivering some goods. The horse ran away. As it turned the corner into Jackson Avenue Policeman Douglass seized the bridle. The horse swerved to the sidewalk and crashed through the window of Thomas Costello's saloon, dragging Douglass into the barroom in violation of the Police Department rules.

Neither he nor the horse was hurt, but Douglass was severely scolded by an irate barman, one of a party who were playing pinochle. He had just melded 150 trumps and 100 aces, and lost it all because his friends, in trying to get out of the horse's way upset the table.

The driver soon arrived and said the

HUMMEL CASE UP TUESDAY.

To Use Move to Disbar Him as Argument for Quashing Indictments.

While to-morrow is the day fixed by Justice Davy for the counsel of Abraham Hummel, Benjamin Steinhardt, and ex-Judge Edgar L. Furman, Jr., all of whom are under indictment in connection with the Dodge-Morse case, to appear before him and make whatever motions they may desire, nothing will be done until Tuesday, according to an agreement reached between counsel and District Attorney Jerome.

When the cases are called on Tuesday, De Lancey Nicoll, who represents Mr. Hummel, will move for the dismissal of the three indictments against his client, two for subornation of perjury and one for conspiracy to deceive the courts, on the ground that Mr. Hummel was called as a witness before the Grand Jury during the investigation preceding the finding of those indictments, although the District Attorney had already begun disbarment proceedings against him before the Bar Association, and thus placed him in the position of a man accused of a crime.

Mr. Nicoll will also contend that the real object of the criminal proceedings now brought by the District Attorney is not to obtain a conviction by a jury, but to secure evidence which may be used subsequently in the disbarment proceedings.

What will be the action taken by ex-Judge D Cady Herrick and John R. Dos Passos, the counsel for the other two defendants, is not yet known, but it is expected that the cases will be permitted to go over until the questions raised in connection with the Hummel case have been passed on.

Mr. Hummel has already been disbarred once. It happened more than twenty-five years ago, and not long after he had been admitted to the bar. The trial took place before Justices Davis, Brady, and Daniels, and it resulted in a verdict that kept Mr. Hummel from the practice of his profession for three years, at the end of which period he was reinstated on the petition of a number of lawyers, who advanced as an excuse for his offense that he had been led astray by an older lawyer. Mr. Hummel confessed when tried that he had paid money to another lawyer to be handed to the Judge who was trying his client's case.

DUGROS IN A RUNAWAY.

Wife and Daughter Thrown Out, but Almost Unhurt.

Mrs. Dugro, wife of Justice P. H. Dugro of the Supreme Court, with Miss Dugro, left the Savoy Hotel, their home, early yesterday morning in a dogcart, bound for the Twenty-third Street Ferry. Miss Dugro drove. Alfred T. Downs of 338 West Fifty-ninth Street, a servant, sat behind. The spirited pony decided that he wouldn't pass a beer truck that stood in front of 45 West Twenty-fourth Street. Workmen had been digging up the street there, so that only a narrow passage was left. The pony bolted toward the team of truck horses.

One of the dogcart shafts wounded the shoulder of the near horse, and all three animals reared and began to fight to free themselves from their harness. The dogcart was upset, but the occupants were not injured beyond a few scratches.

Policeman W. F. O'Connell ran up, and he, Downs, and the truck driver straightened out the tangle. The wounded truck horse was turned over to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

Mrs. Dugro and her daughter went on their way in a cab.

Summer Residents Flock to the Resort on the Ocean.

Special to The New York Times.

ASBURY PARK, May 20.—Cottagers have flocked to Asbury Park in droves this week, despite the disagreeable weather. The almost continuous rain interfered with outdoor pastimes early in the week, but Thursday brought the sunshine and caused the beach resorts once more to teem with life.

It was officially announced this week that the steel pier project had been resuscitated by the promoters and that work on the structure, to be built on the shore front at Eighth Avenue, would be started within a day or two, and that at least 400 feet of the structure would be ready for the public by the middle of July.

Complications over the appointment by Mayor Ten Broeck of three new members of the Public Grounds Commission this week have been satisfactorily settled. The term of J. Lyle Kinmonth expired last month by limitation. Mayor Ten Broeck refused him a reappointment. His colleagues, Henry C. Winsor and Clarence S. Steiner, then sent their resignations to the Aldermen. The Mayor then appointed a new board, consisting of Dr. Fred F. Coleman, Scott F. Hazelrigg, and Theodore H. Beringer. Mr. Beringer was appointed in Kinmonth's place for a full term. The Board of Trade, in the interest of harmony, named a "peace" committee to wait on the Mayor and seek to induce him to reconsider his determination to drop Kinmonth. They were unable to see the city's Executive, who, in the meantime, sent a communication to the Aldermen asking them to confirm his new appointees. At a special meeting Alderman Atkins withdrew the two resignations, and, contending that there was but one vacancy in the commission, Beringer was confirmed. Messrs. Winsor and Atkins are once more acting as Commissioners. Mayor Ten Broeck does not take kindly to their change of front, but will, it is said, abide by the action taken by the Aldermen.

Recent cottage rentals include the following: Police Commissioner Laurence T. Fell of Orange, N. J., in Sixth Avenue; J. C. Craven of Jersey City, N. J., in Seventh Avenue; William M. Keenan of Troy, N. Y., in Emory Street; William L. Waring of New York, in Sixth Avenue; Selig Scheuer of Newark, N. J., in Seventh Avenue, and L. Weingarten of the same city, in Fourth Avenue; E. L. Pearsall of New York, in Third Avenue; William Hutton, Jr., of Troy, N. Y., in Asbury Avenue, and T. P. Dowling of the same city, in Fourth Avenue; J. C. De Winter of New York in Sixth Avenue; William S. Bogert of Leonia, N. J., in Third Avenue; Edward T. Jenkins of Brooklyn, in Seventh Avenue; William M. Perkins of New York, in Grand Avenue, and M. J. Kenny of Summit, N. J., in Sixth Avenue.

Bishop Potter Talks to Alumnae.

At the annual Spring reunion of the Associated Alumnae of the Normal College, held in the old chapel of the college yesterday, Bishop Potter was the chief guest and principal speaker. He talked about the present public school system and the close association of different nationalities in the schools. Among other speakers were President Thomas Hunter of the Normal College, Miss Isabella Sullivan, President of the Alumnae, and Mrs. Archibald A. Hill. The alumnae attended the reunion in great force.

Wedding Plans Changed by Death.

Owing to the recent death of Mrs. J. H. V. Arnold, the marriage of her son, Mortimer Percy Arnold, to Miss Mary Constance Berry will be a quiet affair, at the home of the bride's grandmother, Mrs. Thomas Andrews, 48 East Sixty-seventh Street, instead of at the Fifth Avenue Collegiate Church, as intended. The ceremony will be performed on Saturday, June 10.

Nap on Bridge Will Cost Life.

While asleep on the inside seat of a Brooklyn trolley car near the New York anchorage of the Brooklyn Bridge, Albert Footner, twenty-two years old, janitor of Public School No. 2, at 116 Henry Street, slipped off the seat and fell between the stone wall and the car, a space of about ten inches. He was rolled along, and when picked up and removed to the Hudson Street Hospital it was found that

15,000 HAPPY CHILDREN AT HAGAN'S MAY PARTY

West Side Youngsters Have Glorious Day in Central Park.

LUNCHEON SERVED TO 19,000

Hospital Tent Has Only One Patient, but Bureau for the Lost Is Kept Busy.

The big ball grounds in Central Park presented a gay scene yesterday, when 15,000 children of the west side were the guests of James J. Hagan, Democratic leader of the Nineteenth Assembly District, who was giving his annual May party.

It was an ideal day for an outing. Spring had just put the finishing touches to Summer's new gown, and in the open field the sun drove the sharpness out of the brisk wind. To the nostrils came the odor of crushed grass, to the ears music and laughter, and to the eyes a vista of dancing colors, red, blue, pink, and royal purple, against a background of restless black, white, and green.

The children of the west side invited to Hagan's big May party met at the corner of Sixtieth Street and Amsterdam Avenue shortly before 10 o'clock. So vast was the army that it was found necessary to divide it into ten divisions. In the middle of Division No. 1, in a gocart decorated with flowers and ribbons, were gaudy cushions for the King and Queen of May, Madeline Conway of 162 West Sixty-sixth Street was the Queen and Freddy Kirk of 132 West Sixty-third Street was the King.

The King was on time and was considerably alarmed when his Queen did not put in an appearance. His Majesty dispatched a courier to her residence. The Queen came running when she heard that the suite was waiting. She explained that she sat up so late learning "Call Me Early, Mother, Dear," that she overslept.

To the tune of "Good-bye, My Bluebell," the procession started, headed by 100 flower girls dressed in white and wearing wreaths of blossoms. The Democratic leader's son, Foster L. Hagan, and Lucy Cooke of 138 West Sixty-third Street were, respectively, Prince and Princess of Flowers.

As soon as the Park was reached the army disbanded. The children gave themselves up to frolic, while Leader Hagan superintended the erection of departmental tents around the field and the bringing up of the commissariat. Ten tents were given over to the various divisions, and tea, coffee, sandwiches, bonbons, ice cream, and other things that gladden the heart of the small boy and girl were served. Several other tents were erected. One was a bureau for lost children, and another was a hospital where a corps of physicians was ready in case of sickness or accident.

For an hour the children did as they pleased, pending the settlement of 19,000 luncheons served out to families, parents, and children. The mothers basked in the sunshine, nursing the younger hopefuls, while the boys and girls played ball, coaxed squirrels with candies and nuts, or climbed the rocks and played shooting imaginary Indians in the trees.

In the afternoon there was a Maypole dance, at which the King and the Queen were crowned. The Maypole was missing for about five minutes, and dismay reigned. The pole was found, but not before Hagan, who is thin and tall, said:

"All right, kids, if it isn't found in five minutes, I'll be the Maypole."

After the dance the children settled down to games and singing and dancing. The band played on. The sun did not lose patience, nor did Hagan, who was here, there, and everywhere, keeping the fun going, dancing with the children, helping them in the singing, and responding to every "play ball, Mister Hagan."

The hospital tent had only one patient. She was little Marie Cumisky of 147 Amsterdam Avenue. She hadn't slept the night before, thinking of the grand day she was going to have, and had eaten more ice cream than was good for her.

All day long the Bureau for Lost Children was crowded with mothers critically examining a number of lost youngsters who sat in rows munching things and apparently quite contented that there was no one to check their consumption of candy.

Shortly after 4 o'clock the huge procession moved back to Sixtieth Street and Amsterdam Avenue, where, after a tumult of cheering, the army was finally mustered out.

William F. King gave a May treat in Central Park yesterday to nearly 200 girls of the Gospel Settlement at 211 Clinton Street. Five coaches conveyed the children from the Home to Seventy-second Street and Fifth Avenue, near which the May party was held. The programme included songs, recitations, and appropriate choruses. The feature of the day, however, was the Maypole dances in which Molly Steinberger was chosen Queen. The Queen made a little speech to Mr. King, thanking him on behalf of the girls for his kindness.

Contrary to the usual custom, the May Queen and her attendants are chosen for merit and good conduct in the Gospel Home. For the same qualities a gold medal is also given. The latter was won by Freda Libowits.

AT SPRING LAKE.

New Yorkers Filling Up Cottages at the Jersey Resort.

Special to The New York Times.

SPRING LAKE, N. J., May 20.—The new Monmouth Hotel will open for the season on June 1. It will be managed by F. F. Shute, who last Winter conducted the Laurel-in-the-Pines at Lakewood.

Mrs. M. A. Corlies of Brooklyn has leased a cottage at the corner of Brighton and First Avenues. Justice J. Franklin Fort of Newark, N. J., is arranging his Newark Avenue residence for early occupancy, as is Congressman Benjamin F. Howell of New Brunswick, N. J., who owns a cottage at Brighton and Second Avenues. Edward C. Haight of New York has secured the Howland cottage in Brighton Avenue. James Moses of New York is occupying his seaside home at Ocean and Passaic Avenues. F. B. Worrall of New York will spend the Summer at his cottage in Mercer Avenue. Another New Yorker with a cottage in the same avenue is Lemuel E. Wells. Mrs. H. Leroy Cox of New York will again occupy a cottage at Tuttle and Third Avenues.

SEA BRIGHT NOTES.

Special to The New York Times.

SEA BRIGHT, N. J., May 20.—Carl Von Bergen and family, who have rented the Auchincloss cottage, arrived Wednesday for the season.

C. K. Couillard and family are among the recent cottage arrivals.

Mrs. W. W. Skippen of New York has arrived for the season.

J. R. Williston and family of New York are here for the Summer.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Carmichael have moved into their cottage.

A. G. Milbank of New York has taken up his Summer residence here.

Randall Kendall and family of New York are among the cottagers who have recently arrived.

H. A. Caesar and family are at their country seat for the Summer.

ATLANTIC CITY'S GUESTS.

Rush to Resort—Plans for Marine Parade and Other Events.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, May 20.—In anticipation of the opening of the boating season on Memorial Day most of the yachts owned by members of the Atlantic City Yacht Club are being prepared to go into commission on May 30. A marine parade along the city's ocean front will be held, and the club will also keep open house on that day; as is their custom.

The Seaside Yacht Club has arranged for several races and regattas to be held this season. The schedule includes contests for 15-foot cricket boats, launch races, and races for sneakboxes. Yachtsmen at the Inlet are creating interest in an ocean race for the sloop yachts about July 10. A dozen crack boats will contest for the pennant.

Elaborate arrangements are being made for the meeting of the Advisory Council of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, which will be held here on June 7 and 8, and which will be attended by many of the leading club women of New Jersey. Headquarters will be at the Hotel Chalfonte.

Something of a rush marked travel to the shore yesterday and to-day. The beach-front hotels found a sudden demand for accommodations, and scenes along the boardwalk and Strand were characteristic of June rather than May. Bathing masters are hoping for a continuance of warm weather and an early Summer. The prospects are very bright for a remarkable season.

Cottage owners in Chelsea report an excellent renting season. This news is interesting because it bears out the general judgment, long asserted and often disputed, that Chelsea, rather than any other section of the city, was to build up first as a select cottage section outside of the older parts of the city.

The annual floral parade on the Boardwalk will be held on June 7. The committee has decided to have five divisions in the parade—hotel class, individual class, commercial class, humorous class, and floats. The humorous class is a new feature this year, and is expected to attract considerable attention. The start will be made from in front of the Royal Palace Hotel, and the parade will proceed down the Boardwalk to Florida Avenue, countermarching to the Steel Pier, where the judges will award handsome prizes to the winners in each class.

Mrs. Sheffield Phelps of New York City, who is spending May at the Brighton, is a daughter of Gov. Preston Lea of Delaware.

Gen. R. N. J. Reed of Philadelphia, Chief of Staff of the Sons of Veterans, spent the week at the Glendale, with his son, Col. Theodore A. Reed.

Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Johnson of New York are here for the season. Mrs. Johnson, who was Miss Rose Barnet of this city, was married last February while she was filling an engagement with May Irwin. She has received a pretty villa as a wedding gift from her parents. Mrs. Johnson is an expert whip as well as a good golf player.

Vice President Taylor, manager of the Pittsburg Division of the Pennsylvania Railroad, arrived here the other day in his private car. He is accompanied by his family. They are stopping at the Brighton.

Mrs. James A. Roosevelt of New York, who is stopping at the Chalfonte, is a cousin of President Roosevelt. She is accompanied by her daughter, Miss Christine B. Roosevelt, and Miss E. M. Reilly.

United States Senator Hansbrough of North Dakota spent the week at the Hotel Traymore.

Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, wife of the President of Princeton University, is a guest at the Chalfonte.

Lieut. Col. D. M. Taylor, United States Army, accompanied by his wife and Miss Taylor, are occupying quarters at the Iroquois.

Miss Sallie Horn of Philadelphia, who is a cousin of Admiral Dewey, is here for the season.

Gen. Haupe, United States Army, retired, is a guest with his sister at the Wiltshire. Gen. Haupe is a figure of National interest by reason of the fact that he is the oldest living graduate of the West Point Military Academy.

Among the New Yorkers at the St. Charles are Mr. and Mrs. C. Seitz, Miss C. J. Jennings, Mr. and Mrs. J. Sondheim, Mr. and Mrs. John A. Weser, and Miss E. Bennett.

Mrs. M. Nast, Mrs. J. Schloss, Miss Laura Rosenbert, and Mrs. D. Toplitz are at the Pierrepont.

Mrs. L. C. Carey and daughter, Mrs. Henry Miller, and Miss C. Dowley of New York are guests at the Berkshire Inn.

AT LONG BRANCH.

Bad Weather Delays the Cottagers—Rush Expected Soon.

Special to The New York Times.

LONG BRANCH, N. J., May 20.—The bad weather of the past week has delayed the influx of cottagers, but it is expected that within a short time now the houses will all be filled. A majority of the cottages are rented.

Mrs. Uriah H. Painter of Washington has moved into her cottage at Takanassee Lake.

Harry J. Braker of New York has already arrived at his Norwood Avenue cottage.

I. R. Benjamin of New York, who owns considerable property at Hollywood, is here for the Summer. Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin are occupying the Edwards cottage on Branchport Avenue.

The New Jersey Mortgage Company has purchased the P. T. Troutman property, Ocean and Chelsea Avenues.

P. W. De Witt of New York took possession of his Monmouth Beach cottage on Friday.

Henry Block and family of New York are now occupying their Cedar Avenue cottage.

Mrs. George J. Jackson took possession of her Monmouth Beach cottage on Thursday.

Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Barber arrived at the Coddington cottage, in Ocean Avenue, West End, for the season on Monday.

The Church of the Precious Blood at Monmouth Beach will open for the Summer to-morrow.

NEW HOMES AT DEAL BEACH.

Richard Croker, Jr., and A. J. Horgan, the Architect, to Build.

Special to The New York Times.

DEAL BEACH, N. J., May 20.—A number of handsome Summer homes are being erected here and at Allenhurst. Arthur J. Horgan, the New York architect, is building a stone residence in Monmouth Drive, which will be completed late in the Summer. Richard Croker, Jr., of New York, has purchased the block between Norwood Drive and Richmond Avenue, just north of the Deal Country Club, and contemplates the erection of a house. The house will cost about $50,000 and the stables and kennels for the housing of the Croker horses and dogs will call for an expenditure of an additional $10,000.

Daniel O'Day of New York, Vice President of the Standard Oil Company, will again occupy his country home, Kildysart, on the east branch of one of the arms of Deal Lake.

Col. George Harvey, the head of the Harper Publishing Company, is making extensive additions to his Summer home just west of this place.

Col. L. C. Bruce of New York has engaged a cottage in Sidney Avenue.

John F. Shanley of Newark, N. J., will again occupy a cottage in Allen Avenue, Allenhurst.

John C. Sheehan of New York will spend the Summer at his cottage in the Darlington Road.

URGE ODELL TO RETURN; NEEDED IN CITY FIGHT

Republican Leaders Alarmed by Attitude of Citizens' Union.

PLACED IN A HARD POSITION

To Accept Municipal Ownership Would Repudiate Their Own Party—Little Chance for Straight Ticket.

State Chairman Odell has been urged by cable messages from some of his local lieutenants not to delay his return from Europe. The independent attitude toward fusion assumed by the Citizens' Union has given the Republican sub-leaders great concern. They are practically unanimous in the opinion that a situation has now arisen which calls for all Chairman Odell's skill as a politician.

There will be a regular meeting of the Republican County Committee to-morrow night, but it was said by officers of the committee yesterday that nothing of any importance would be done until the monthly meeting after the return of State Chairman Odell.

In fact, the Republican politicians regard the situation created by the independent course adopted by the Citizens' Union as so delicate from a political standpoint that they are loath to even privately discuss either their own feelings or the probabilities. The declaration of the Citizens' Union was little short of offensive to them. They are, nevertheless, afraid to say anything about it until they know what the policy of Chairman Odell for the municipal campaign is to be.

Talks with members of the Citizens' Union confirm the impression made by the organization's declaration of principles that the Union will decline to fuse with the Republicans unless the Republicans are willing to accept the municipal ownership issue. There is only one way in which the local Republican organization can meet the Citizens' Union on that issue, and that is by virtually repudiating the Republican State organization. In the bill passed by the Legislature, and now awaiting Gov. Higgins's signature, providing for a State Commission of Gas and Electricity, there is a specific inhibition against any municipality establishing a municipal plant to furnish gas or electricity to private consumers unless with the consent of the commission. Therefore, if Mr. Odell desires to come to terms with the Citizens' Union for the nomination of a Fusion ticket, he probably will have to obtain the consent of the State Gas and Electricity Commission to municipal ownership of lighting plants in this city as a condition precedent to such an agreement. Otherwise he would have the alternative of repudiating the State organization, a rather difficult thing for him to do as State Chairman.

The Citizens' Union leaders figure that they have put up a hard proposition to Mr. Odell. If he should decline to come to them on their terms and should decide to put out a straight Republican ticket, the inevitable result, in the opinion of the Citizens' Union men, would be that the Republican candidate would come in a poor third. With three tickets in the field, one of them on a radical platform for municipal ownership of public utilities, it is the belief of the Citizens' Union politicians that many Republicans would go over to McClellan, just as they went over to Abram S. Hewitt in the Henry George campaign, when a similar issue was drawn.

As Mr. Odell will have to fight to hold his place at the head of the State organization when the municipal campaign is over, according to the Republican politicians who bear him a grudge for his action in declaring for Depew against Black in the Senatorship contest, it would be a decided blow to his prestige to have the Republican ticket behind both the Democratic and the Citizens' Union tickets in the Fall election. For that reason he is likely to ponder long, it is said, before he decides to take the long chance of a three-cornered fight.

Charles F. Murphy, the leader of Tammany, said yesterday that his organization would be willing to accept a communication from the Citizens' Union relative to the indorsement of Mayor McClellan for re-election.

"If such a letter shall be written," said Mr. Murphy, "I suppose that it would be sent to Mr. Crain, Chairman of the County Committee, or to Chairman McMahon of the Executive Committee, and not to me. If such a letter should be received I am sure that it will be properly answered in due time."

Mr. Murphy would not discuss the plan of the Citizens' Union to open negotiations with all parties for a non-partisan ticket.

ON THE BACK TRACK.

In that part of the opera of "Faust" that is called the garden scene there is a conflict between the forces of good and evil which philosophers and students of human nature watch with never-ending interest. Faust and Marguerite, brought together through the offices of Mephistopheles, discover and avow their mutual passion, but under the control of impulses that are still noble, notwithstanding the presence and machinations of the Evil Person, they prepare to separate. Faust is about to depart virtuously with Mephistopheles when the flinging open of the casement window and the appearance of Marguerite completely changes the course of events. The lovers fall into each other's arms. The forces of good have been baffled, the forces of evil triumph. Mephistopheles, seeing that things have "come his way," as he knew they would, rolls back upon his garden seat dissolved in inextinguishable and veritably diabolic laughter.

In such laughter the great chiefs of the protected interests must have been dissolved when they read yesterday morning that the President had recanted his startling heresies concerning the purchase of Panama Canal supplies, ships, and machinery in the cheapest market, and had proclaimed his desire to purchase all needed supplies from domestic manufacturers. The high resolution taken on Monday at the White House luncheon table with his Panama Commissioners about him had been abandoned. Ships will not be purchased abroad where $700,000 would buy two steamers costing here twice that sum, but at most will be "chartered." As for supplies and machinery, why, the President never intended that the Commission should "load up" with wares bought at low prices in foreign lands. He intended only to admonish American manufacturers and purveyors that as it was his solemn duty to buy in the cheapest market they must not put up their prices and so force him to have recourse to foreign markets, but be as easy as they can with him during the coming Summer, and when Congress meets the entire matter will be referred to that body for its mandate. Then there will be no further trouble, for it is expected that Congress will declare that there must be no buying in cheap foreign markets. "What we need," said President THEODORE P. SHONTS of the Canal Commission, "is legislative authority to purchase American supplies and ships only."

So here we see our fearless President on the back track, and making the best possible time to get away from the situation he created for himself when he declared it to be his sworn duty to buy canal supplies in the cheapest market. Before any common antagonist or any ordinary difficulty his firm nerves would never tremble. Of men who merge railroads and carry on the beef trade in circumstances of illicit combination he is not the least afraid. But when he said that the commodities needed for the Panama Canal would be procured abroad he disturbed in his lair a monster that even he dare not face. Confronted by the high tariff interests, the very ursus horribilis of our politics, THEODORE ROOSEVELT turned and fled.

It is painful, it is humiliating, but it is a fact. Between the proclamations of Executive policy made to the country on Tuesday morning following the luncheon conference at the White House, and the version of that proclamation shorn of all meat and meaning, bleached, neutralized, and attenuated, given to the world yesterday morning there is all the difference that exists between promise and denial, between Yes and No. THE TIMES has participated in the emotions that have stirred the "stand-patters," but in inverted order. It rejoiced when the President declared himself independent of the Cortelyou extortionists, when he announced that duty and his oath commanded him in buying canal materials to spend the people's money where it would go furthest. It has been with [illegible] back in the path of righteousness. THE TIMES thought it knew Mr. ROOSEVELT well enough to say to its readers that he would keep on—that nothing would turn him back. It now confesses itself mistaken, for he has turned back, the "stand-patters" have been too much for him. On Tuesday full of courage, on Friday he is in full retreat.

The gentlemen whom this reconsideration of his purpose will enable to squeeze many more millions out of the American taxpayers will not trouble themselves about the distressing moral tangle in which the President involves himself in first talking about his duty and his sworn obligation to buy in the cheapest market, and then letting it be known that he will buy as little as possible in the cheapest market until Congress has an opportunity to bid him buy in the dearest market. The path of duty does not lead two ways at once. In such a matter as this no oath of office can be honored by diametrically opposite policies. That, however, as we have said, is the least of the troubles that afflict the Dingleyites. Some of the President's friends will be troubled, however.

We venture the opinion that the President's own troubles are not over. The great grizzly bear of protection that he roused and ran away from will curl up in his lair and go to sleep again. He feels secure. But that will not repair the awful damage the President has done to the protectionists' argument and cause. The mere revocation of the President's order to the Commissioners to buy where they could buy cheapest will not efface from the memory of the American people the lesson they have learned during the past week. An Administration protest against tariff extortion has all the emphasis of Heaven's thunder. Everybody hears it.

NOT RADICAL ENOUGH.

In view of the probable diversion of business from this market on account of the stock transfer tax taking effect June 1, it is reported that the Governors of the New York Stock Exchange are taking thought how they may put obstacles in the way of the prompt procurement of their quotations by the Consolidated Exchange and by the Exchanges of Boston and Philadelphia.

That is all very well, but it does not go far enough. There is a large party who will insist that in present conditions the New York Stock Exchange quotations ought to have been suppressed altogether. Why not bury 'em? So long as the Stock Exchange Governors permit and this financial community tolerates the control of quotations by the most unscrupulous gang of bushwhackers that ever infested any stock market, what good purpose can the figures serve?

They are certainly not a measure of value. Every business man and every banker of large acquaintance with affairs knows that the basis of security values in this country is at present sound; industrial conditions are excellent, the country is prosperous. Yet Stock Exchange quotations behave as if the country's business was going straight to the dogs. "Room traders" rule the market, and according to widespread belief "wash sales" make up the bulk of the daily transactions. What is the sense of boasting about New York becoming a "financial centre" of the world so long as the control over market values from day to day and from month to month is left to the bushwhackers?

OUR STREET STATUES.

The Art Commission has done an excellent though unpretending service by bringing together in its latest annual report a list of all the works of art belonging to the city, with their several situations. The list is not, of course, upon the whole, particularly creditable to the municipality. There is scarcely a town on the Continent of Europe with a tenth of the population of New York which has not a more impressive collection to show. But to have the several and widely scattered public monuments of sculpture recalled to us by listing them is to be impressed with the fact that they are better as well as more numerous than one thought.

It is the placing of our public statues as brought to mind by such a list of them, even more than the artistic quality, which is adapted to depress the beholder. A stranger in New York, coming the other day upon the statue of HAMILTON in front of the Hamilton Club in Brooklyn, was overheard to remark that it was the only logically placed statue he had seen in the city. In this matter we have shown a very low degree of sensibility. In Paris, where the sensibility in such matters is keenest, a cabman has been known to observe to his fare that the new statue of WASHINGTON was "faced wrong." If the New York cabman were as sensitive as the Paris cabman, he might repeat this criticism at almost every statue he passed, and the placing of many of them might be expected to startle even his horse to shying or flight. A new statue is, as a rule, planted in the line of least resistance for that reason and no other. A monument which is conformed to its surroundings, or to which its surroundings are conformed, makes an immensely better impression, irrespectively of its artistic quality, than one that seems to be placed at haphazard. The Central Park is of course our chief museum of outdoor statuary. Perhaps the Mall, as the one formal and symmetrical feature of an otherwise irregular and "naturalistic" pleasure ground, is a fit place [illegible] suming the propriety of the subjects to such a commemoration, it were only to be wished that most of the statues were better, some being even ludicrously bad. A sort of cosmopolitan pantheon on the Mall is by no means a bad notion for so composite a community. But elsewhere in the Park it seems that the sculpture might properly be confined to ideal and decorative works, of which almost the only actual examples are "The Indian Hunter" and "The Falconer."

With regard to most of our park and street statues the wonder must be how they "got there." It is not doing any particular honor to a man to set a brazen image of him, bareheaded and exposed to the weather, at any casual spot that offers, especially if the effect of it upon a large proportion of the beholders is only to make them ask who he may have been and what he may have done. One of the many arguments for the association of sculpture with architecture is that such an association would tend to answer or to obviate such questions and to give the effigy a reason of being. The statue of Dr. MARION SIMS, which has no relevancy to the place in which it occurs, would be manifestly appropriate if it were attached or adjoined to the Woman's Hospital, which the inscription sets forth that he founded. The bust of HOLLEY, which certainly has no special appropriateness to Washington Square, would become evidently in place if it were attached to the building of the Society of Engineers. And even the statue of "Sunset" Cox, now on its travels, having been crowded out of Astor Place, would gain an explanation of its existence, and as much effect as its character would allow, if it were seen in connection with the Post Office, the subject's services to the occupants of which it commemorates. On the other hand, PETER COOPER is well placed in connection with the institution which he founded, and RICHARD MORRIS HUNT confronting the Lenox Library, which is one of the principal of his own works.

This latter monument shares with that of WILLIAM E. DODGE the advantage of being really a monument and not a mere detached effigy. All the same, the proper place for the commemoration of Mr. DODGE is evidently not a casual open space but the Chamber of Commerce, which had not in his time but now has a house of its own suitable for sculptural enrichment and commemoration, and which has made an excellent beginning of such a commemoration with the late ABRAM S. HEWITT. Such architectural projects as this building and as the new Hall of Records and the new Appellate Court Building, by providing for sculpture as an integral part of the structure, not only enable the monumental expression of the architecture to be carried further and made more specific. They have the further advantage of providing a lodgment for otherwise homeless statues of famous men.

GUARANTEEING SANTO DOMINGO.

The correspondence we published yesterday from Puerto Plata shows that our official procedures in Santo Domingo have borne the fruit that might have been expected of them. When it was once understood that a guarantor of undoubted solvency was indorsing the obligations of the Dominican Republic in blank, it was not to be supposed that the other aspiring yellow statesmen would leave MORALES in peaceable possession of such a source of revenue. Immediate revolution was "indicated" by the most obvious considerations of business prudence.

It is all very well for us to maintain that we mean to "sift" the indebtedness of the republic before discharging it. How can a transaction be satisfactorily "sifted" by which Santo Domingo agreed to pay something like thirty millions for a loan of which the actual proceeds are estimated all the way from five millions to ten, and of which only a beggarly $80,000 escaped the various toll takers and reached the Public Treasury. Next to MORALES and his coparceners the holders of the Dominican evidences of indebtedness are entitled to rejoice. Their belief in the impossibility of our "sifting" their claims is shown by the fact that Dominican "securities" so-called, which might have been bought up a few months ago for a small fraction of their face, have now leaped up to par. Our only practicable method of sifting would have been quietly to buy them up when they were cheap, before announcing our responsibility for the obligations of an insolvent. It is quite true that the Administration had no warrant of law for such a course. But the course it did take was quite as much without warrant of law, and immeasurably less businesslike.

THE ECONOMICS OF "TAINTED" MONEY.

The editor of The Yale Review submits some practical considerations as to the position taken by certain clergymen on the gift by Mr. ROCKEFELLER to aid of foreign missions.

He points out that the gift was not to the officers of the association through which it was made, but to "the beneficiaries for whom those officers act as trustees." Since criticism of the sources of a giver's money is not likely to check appropriation by similar means, but is likely to [illegible] benevolent purposes, the moral economic injury must presumably fall on those who otherwise would have had the benefit of the gift. Also it is [illegible] a consideration that cannot well be ignored by those who [illegible]

eral way we call benevolence. Moreover, as the editor of The Review points out, if the policy of criticising and discouraging gifts of this sort is generally adopted, it will tend to the concentration of wealth in the very hands regarded as least worthy. It is a direct stimulus to "plutocracy," whatever that precisely may mean.

Back of this argument and supporting it is another consideration—that of the general unfitness of the officers and agents of philanthropic organizations for the task of accurate and just judgment as to the goodness or badness of the sources of wealth. The formation of such a judgment is at best a difficult and delicate task. It requires special opportunities for knowledge such as very few men possess, and such as, without disrespect, these officers and agents almost never possess. If it were practicable, for instance, to inspire the Governors of the Clearing House Association of the City of New York with the ideas entertained by the critics of tainted money, and then they were asked to say just to what great fortunes in this town that term could fairly and correctly be applied, they would meet the request with something like dismay. To detect and define the tainted elements in the streams of wealth that flow into the bank account and the safe deposit box of very rich men would involve a skill in financial chemistry from which they would shrink pretty nearly in proportion to their knowledge. Any man in active business starting out with the determination to take no share of money from a source reasonably suspected of pollution would be dreadfully puzzled at times, but he could always give his conscience the benefit of the doubt. When it comes to refusing money for beneficence it is extremely questionable how far he could go without doing more harm than good.

It is related of ELIAS HICKS, the Quaker, that he once took to a fellow-Quaker, a bookseller, to distribute, some pamphlets which advocated abstention from the purchase of any product of slave labor. He was surprised to hear from the bookseller that with all sympathy in the work it would be impossible for him to sell the pamphlets. "Why not, pray?" ELIAS demanded. "Because," was the simple reply, "they are printed on paper made from cotton rags."

DR. JEKYLL AND MR. HYDE.

The important feature of the trial of the murderer GEORGE H. WOOD, doubtless a historic one for the plea entered by the defendant of double personality—that through an epileptic seizure he was transformed to a condition bordering on that of STEVENSON'S Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde, with no memory of the murder in his proper state—was the testimony of Dr. PIERCE BAILEY of the College of Physicians and Surgeons in this city. Dr. BAILEY admitted the possibility of a secondary consciousness, even without an inducing epileptic fit, and that there could be a dual or alternating personality. His asseveration that a person possessed of a dual consciousness would nevertheless be responsible for his crime, and Judge GARRETSON'S pronouncement upon WOOD of the maximum sentence of thirty years for the commission of murder in the second degree, distinguish this case as of more than curious significance.

WOOD left Plainfield on Jan. 30 last, three days before the murder, to meet a mysterious "Mac," the demon of his fantasy—although there is in the flesh an innocent and non-demoniac counterpart of this creature—who was to furnish some money for him in the iron business. Here his recollection fades, and is blank up to the date of his arrest on Feb. 2 at the house of a friend in New York. He had visited his grandmother's farm at Mount Horeb on Jan. 31, returned to town the following day, where he hired the Watchung grocer WILLIAMS to drive him back to the farm. WILLIAMS was found in the dense woods near the farm, dead in his sleigh of a shot in the back. After the crime it was shown that WOOD had concealed his hat and revolver and shaved his mustache, and had used other methods to escape arrest.

It would appear that WOOD'S initial impulse in starting upon this homicidal journey was to obtain $1,000, a sum which he needed badly, of the mythical "little dark man" Mac, who lived, he recalled vaguely, "in Pennsylvania." No robbery of WILLIAMS'S body was proved. The experts describe WOOD as sluggish intellectually, so that in the moment of commission of the murder and of the attendant mental derangement he may have forgotten his original motive. But it is conceivable that his desire for financial relief may have originally become uncontrollable, that the darker passions of his nature rose and were projected upon his disordered intellect with unwonted force and concreteness, so as to evolve the unreal "personality," and that the rest was too dreadful, and, perhaps, too dangerous to remember.

But this, though in an extraordinary degree, is the psychology of crime.

Between the acting of a dreadful thing
And the first motion, all the interim is Like a phantasma, or a hideous dream:
The genius and the mortal instruments
Are then in council; and the state of a man,
Like to a little kingdom, suffers then
The nature of an insurrection.

Some such insurrection, we may say, had been simmering in the depths of [illegible] "second personality" which impelled him to the deed of murder. [illegible]

Dr. Jekyll of STEVENSON'S story had already the elements of Hyde within him. HAWTHORNE'S Wakefield, a character usually overlooked by students of double personality in fiction, deliberately took the step that made him the "Outcast of the Universe." We cannot but feel impressed at the testimony given by Dr. BAILEY in the New Jersey courtroom that "a man with criminal inclinations while in a state of secondary consciousness would have similar inclinations while in a normal state, the ethics of the walking state being carried over into the dream state."

SCHOOLS, NOT ASYLUMS.

The Unwisdom of Confusing Them—Education of Blind and Deaf.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In to-day's issue mention is made in the headlines of a news article of "deaf and dumb children marching over from the asylum" to Central Park, referring to the Institution for the Deaf at Sixty-seventh Street and Lexington Avenue. For years those connected with the education of defective children have been endeavoring to enlighten the public to the fact that schools for abnormal pupils, like common schools supported by public taxation, are educational institutions, and not asylums or charitable institutions, and hence should be known as schools, as, for example, school for the deaf, school for the blind, &c.

Progress has certainly been made along this line, although even yet the highly objectionable terms "dummy," referring to a deaf man, and "dummy asylum" for a school for the deaf are all too often encountered. The term "asylum" was part of the corporate name of the first permanent school for the deaf in this country, founded in 1817, but at the present time, out of 133 schools for the deaf, not one has the appellation asylum, and most of them are simply designated schools for the deaf.

Schools for defective pupils are boarding schools for the most part, for reasons of economy and to secure better educational results. Of nearly forty schools for the blind, not one is known by the misnomer "asylum."

Very few of the deaf are literally dumb, which means inability to utter articulate sounds, like "the dumb brutes," consequently the term "dumb" is going out of use when applied to the deaf as a class. The official publication of educators of the deaf is The American Annals of the Deaf, the official body of teachers is known as the American Instructors of the Deaf, and the National Association of the Deaf is, what its name implies, the National body of the deaf themselves.

By calling attention to these facts THE TIMES will do a real service to those interested in refined and humane terminology in regard to the education of defective children.

THE SEAM IN THE FLAG.

How a Southerner Proposes to Iron It Out for Good.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

All this discussion on the part of the G. A. R. of Brooklyn against the Confederate Veterans marching in the Memorial Day parade is very unseemly in view of the fact that there are within the ranks of the G. A. R. of this city many Southern men and women who abandoned the Confederate cause. In one of the women's organizations a Southern woman is the head.

The G. A. R. takes care of its sick and buries its dead with honors. Still, the poor downtrodden Southern or Confederate societies are good enough for me, a Southerner, although I am not a member of either. It seems to me we have enough dead of our own to march for, at home, the ground having been soaked with blood of both sides. There are many Northern dead there, so let's all go home and march for them, one and all alike, and try to iron the seam out of the old flag. We have loads of flowers, too, the sweet home kind from gardens, so that we can cover the bloodstains and scars of Murfreesborough and many other fields with these, at home, sweet home. ALABAMA.

HATS AS ENEMIES OF HAIR.

Unventilated Headgear for Men as a Cause of Baldness.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Seeing in your paper the various reasons advanced as causes of baldness among men stenographers, I fell impelled to add my quota to the list, and trust that you will print this letter, as you have printed those written in a facetious vein, for I believe that I discern the true cause of the trouble and the remedy thereof, because the trouble is not confined to men in one vocation, but is becoming alarmingly prevalent among men generally.

Besides the "lack of personal care" suggested by "Old Subscriber," the foolish, ugly, air-tight hats that men wear with such devotion and reluctance to part from is the real cause. No matter how ridiculous may be the fashion in women's hats, still there is room for air to circulate through them, and the air is necessary to grow hair.

If men are too attached to the style of hats they wear to change the fashion, then they should make them with better ventilation, and in addition to this take every advantage that custom offers them in removing hats; in fact, remove them on every conceivable occasion, and not only will these courtly manners embellish and gladden every-day life, but they will surely have their reward in more luxuriant locks, and the well-intentioned friend will be able to remark that the baby looks like its father without severing friendship's sacred ties.

Pushcart Men's Troubles.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Mr. Louis M. Fisher's letter in this morning's TIMES on "The Pushcart Evil" expresses the sentiment of thousands of your readers, I think, and who with any feeling of humanity can look upon these poor, honest, half-starved pushcart men and not echo Mr. Fisher's statement? How often I have seen a man's entire little stock of wares, all his investment, tumbled into the street in his effort to "push on," as demanded by public officers. A public market place, with a small license fee, would surely solve this problem.

Let's start here to beautify our city, where it is most needed, and leave poor, ugly, Central Park alone for a while. R. T.

A NEW MANILA HARBOR.

What Is Being Done to Improve Our Oriental Port.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In line with your editorial of this morning on the future of Manila Harbor, it may be interesting to your readers to know what has already been done. Manila Bay is a circular body of water thirty miles in diameter, in which the typhoons are nearly as boisterous as in the China Sea itself. Two years ago work was begun which will result in reclaiming from the bay a tract equal in extent to the Walled City.

This tract was walled in on two sides from the bay and is bounded on the other two by the shore opposite to the old city and by the tongue of land bordering the right bank of the Pasig River, now occupied by the Quartermaster's wharves. This space has been filled by pumping in muddy water until the residuum of mud reached the level of the bordering land. Last Summer it was of such consistency that a stone thrown into the site of future warehouses disappeared, leaving a black hole in its wake.

Far outside this work the great breakwater which will separate the outer bay from the safe inner anchorage for ships is steadily progressing by the constant dumping of shiploads of stone. In another year or two the construction of warehouses on the reclaimed tract will begin and the front opposite to the city will be lined with wharves and slips, in which the great ocean liners may dock, which they are not able to do now at Nagasaki or in any of the ports on the Chinese coast.

The broad Malacou drive, bordered with cocoanut trees, extends along the shore of the bay from the Pasig River to the Lunetta, separating the reclaimed tract from the moats and fields lying outside the Walled City. For about half its length this beautiful avenue will be cut off from the shore which it originally bordered. When the breakwater is completed the surf will no longer boom on the beach outside the Lunetta, causing the mass of carriages to assemble to the windward side of the music stand.

W. H. SHELTON.

The Columbia-Academy Alliance.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

There is another side to the question now agitating the artists of New York. The protocol of a treaty of alliance between Columbia University and the National Academy of Design was submitted to delegates empowered to arrange details. At a meeting of the academy a majority of those present ratified the terms of agreement whereby the university will furnish land on the corner of Broadway and One Hundred and Sixteenth Street, if the academy raises half a million dollars and erects on that land a building suited for its schools. The reorganized School of Architecture of Columbia will find quarters in the building, and while the new organization will come beneath the aegis of the university as its Art Department, the identity of the National Academy is to be conserved.

The National Academy had its origin in a school of drawing or design, as its name shows; after the annual exhibitions became popular features in the life of New York the Academicians always clung to their schools with a tender if somewhat pathetic interest, considering the difficulty they found in keeping the classes up to the mark. Often the lack of money to provide for the classes properly was overcome by the zeal and self-sacrifice of individual artists. It is not without a pang that some of the Academicians look forward to a merger of the schools into the complex of a university. They have misgivings.

President Butler and President Dielman are doing what they sincerely believe the best for both parties; but may they not be mistaken? They say and believe that the National Academy will maintain its identity, though its schools are part of the university; but it is to be feared that they do not allow for the moral effect of the coalition upon such kittle-cattle as the budding artists. It is like a State coming into the Union; the glory is great, but the laws of gravitation are inevitable, and the Union controls the smaller body as the sun controls a planet. Preservation of identity, coalition, and autonomy are nice words, but the public will call it merger.

Art schools must always be out of place in undergraduate life because art students never have submitted and never will submit to the rules of conduct indispensable to college and university. The story of the schools of the Royal Academy in London and our academy here proves that art students are impatient even of the benevolent superintendence of Academicians, whose work they usually despise and whose teaching they listen to with irreverence. Fierce little democracies like the Art Students' League and the New York School of Art attract them far more, although they have to pay their way in order to belong to them. The ideal to attain would be an art college near but not part of a great university, where the scholarly atmosphere and the artistic would have a chance to set up that intellectual exchange which is more effectual than a closer union. Is there no believer in the higher educational who will establish beside Columbia University a foundation for all the arts? Our painters and sculptors are more in need of the strengthening companionship of the minor arts than the influences of scholarship. The latter is not to be despised, but the former is the chief agency to make our fine art vigorous and healthy at the roots. M. A. C.

As to English Speech.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your correspondent, "Anglo-American," in his letter published in your paper to-day, appears to run very wide of the mark. Englishmen as a rule—that is, nine-tenths of them—do drop their "h's." They not only drop the "h," but entirely lose sight of that "g" in "shooding," "singing," &c. Omitting the final letter in such words is just as common in London as in New York. Well bred Englishmen and well bred Americans are invariably correct in their pronunciation, but they are not the majority in either country. The slang of the Bowery is about as typical of the "American language" as is the vernacular of Whitechapel or Poplar. About the flag question "Anglo-American" should not fool himself. The tribute paid in London to the Stars and Stripes is paid to the good American dollars which our tourists leave in the British capital and not to any exuberance of friendship for Americans. J. S. ENGLAND ARRAIGNED.

Her Record Given as a Reason for Disliking Her.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In several of your recent issues I have observed references made by your correspondents to the dislike in which England is held by some people in this country. It would be, I am sure, an injustice to the American people to ascribe the feeling toward England to the bitterness remaining from the wars which we were compelled to wage with her. They are, indeed, in good measure forgotten, and any wrongs done by England at that distant period are forgiven. The dislike of England, such as there is, is based on the fact that there is so much of injustice in England's record, especially in connection with her colonies, or rather her conquests, that the American people cannot but condemn and dislike her methods.

It is not forgotten that when the Chinese Government was fighting against the opium evil and enacted laws against the sale and importation of the drug, it was England who insisted on selling opium in China, and when a disturbance arose made it a pretext for a declaration of war, in which she was, of course, successful, and at its conclusion demanded the session to her of Hongkong to reimburse her for her unjust and wicked attack. She thus gained territory, and is still selling opium in China.

Some of our people remember the solemn pledges England made when she occupied Egypt to the effect that the occupation was to be but temporary. Now her whole talk and all her actions indicate that these pledges are conveniently forgotten and that she means to stay there.

The recent expedition into Tibet, whose territory she has no more right to enter with a hostile force than we have to march into Canada, shows her continued disregard for the rights of any nation she ventures to bulldoze. SCOTUS.

PAYING FOR THE CANAL.

Pay as Little as Possible, Says an Old Republican.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It has been said on high authority that coal can be bought at our distant naval stations for less than the mere transportation charged from America. The Panama Commission can buy foreign ships for $700,000, for which Americans ask $1,400,000. The writer has been a lifelong protectionist and Republican, and holds the principle as firmly as ever. But all just protection must be carefully adjusted to the demands of the public good, or it becomes public robbery.

The showing of The Tribune that steel rails costing $12 a ton are sold in Europe at $22, and in America for $28, for which the people pay every time they ride in the cars, shows wrong somewhere. For a billion-dollar Steel Trust to pose as an infant industry tasks the credulity of the American people too far. True Republicans will sustain neither their party nor their country in doing wrong. It is a duty to build the Panama Canal as cheaply as possible, let the consequences to party be what they will. RATIO.

WOMAN'S LITTLE WAYS.

The Deceitful Heroine—Wants to Know Is She True to Life.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

My wife and I attended a play, "The Firm of Cunningham," last week, and our opinions are so different about it that we are constantly "argufying" the matter at every meal. The piece has a woman for heroine who is always deceiving everybody, and when she gets found out she turns the blame on somebody quite innocent and bobs up serenely out of every difficulty. She even uses her young sister to serve her silly purposes, and the young girl is a nice young woman, who would command everybody's sympathy.

I say that a woman like this isn't natural, and my wife laughs at me, because she says such women abound by thousands in all classes of society, and never do any real harm, but just get other people into trouble. I would like to know what is the general opinion about this woman. My wife says all women will agree with her and all men who have had any great experience. I wish you would go out of the way to tell us in your paper, just for the sake of restoring peace in our household. S. MORRIS.

Tipping in England.

From The London Telegraph, April 28.

"A Would-be Guest" has written the following letter on the "tipping" nuisance in England: "Apropos of 'tipping,' one of the banes of modern society, utterly preventing the would-be guest of moderate means partaking of hospitality, (which would be enjoyable and beneficial,) I can relate what a friend told me—that when staying with a certain noble lord some years ago for shooting he offered £1 to the keeper for two days' sport, which was at once refused by him, saying he 'only accepted "paper."' My friend told his host, who thanked him for letting him know, and said he had long suspected such to be the case, and he would put a stop to it, which he promptly did, and instituted the custom of handing a box around for contributions, a custom which, I believe, prevails in most country houses now. I have heard also of a box being placed in the hall for the other servants. If a whole army of hosts and hostesses and guests would rise in revolt against this system of blackmail (for blackmail it is) people of moderate means might have the great pleasure of accepting their friends' hospitality with a mind at ease."

CHURCH-GOING ON WANE, AGREES SENATOR DEPEW

Week-End Guests No Longer Attend Divine Service.

PLAY TENNIS, GOLF, CARDS

Minister to Draw Large Congregations, Says Mr. Depew, Must Eschew Doctrinal Sermons.

"It is quite true that the week-end parties in the houses of the rich do not go to church on Sundays," said Senator Depew. "Carriages are provided to take them if they wish to go, but the golf links and the tennis courts offer greater attractions. In New York the churchgoing population among the well-to-do are out of town by the first of May. The numerous country clubs are crowded every Sunday. Pastors in the city churches keep in their pulpits until June, some of them until July. But they preach to the strangers that come to the city in the Spring, not to their own congregations."

Senator Depew had just finished reading a report in THE NEW YORK TIMES of an address, last week, before the Episcopal Diocese by Bishop Frederick Burgess, in which he said:

"The handsome palaces of the rich, the spacious, comfortable villas of the well-to-do, are filled every Saturday night with their house parties, made up generally of young men and women who in the city pay some slight observance to Sunday, but who here seldom or never go to the church services and spend the day in yachting, golfing, tennis, and even racing and gambling."

"Society persons who are invited to week-end parties go for rest and recreation," said Senator Depew. "If they are churchgoing people they think, undoubtedly, that they have done their duty by attending church in the city during the Winter. In the mornings, sometimes, the elderly people go to church, but the young folks do not. They are no longer brought up to believe that it is their duty to do so. The fault lies largely with their parents.

SENATOR DEPEW ALWAYS GOES.

"I was brought up to go to church twice each Sunday, to Sunday school and to prayer meeting Friday evening. I was made to go. The habit has stayed with me. No matter where I am, I make it a point to go to church on Sunday morning. I feel uncomfortable all the week if I do not. A few weeks ago I was at a week-end party near by, where all the old folks went to the village church on Sunday morning. They were men and women who had been brought up the same as I was. But the church was not half filled.

"At week-end parties in England the young folks do not go to church. As soon as the dew is off the grass they are off motor riding or golfing. On some estates, like Blenheim, for instance, it is the custom, and has been for generations, to see representatives of the county families in the family pew each Sunday morning. It would cause a revolution in the parish almost if they failed to attend. The old families who give the week-end parties always go, but their guests don't go. It is never suggested that they should go. They devote the day to open-air sports and the evenings to playing cards.

"It is the same thing with country life in New York and elsewhere in America. Going to church is the last thing thought of. Golf, tennis, motoring, and cards—there you have it. If a minister wants to draw large congregations nowadays he must have an exceptionally attractive personality. He must be a favorite with the young folks, interested in golf, tennis, music, and everything that they are interested in. He must keep in close touch with other things besides his church. There are a number of things he should not see, much less preach about from the pulpit.

DOCTRINAL SERMONS NOT WANTED.

"The time has gone by, in my opinion, when churchgoers are interested in doctrinal sermons. When I was a young man young people were interested in these questions. They discussed them, and liked to hear them discussed. Such is no longer the case.

"When I was graduated fifty years ago about 50 per cent. of my class were intended for the ministry. I do not believe that, on an average, 10 per cent. of the college classes that graduate to-day intend to take up the ministry. There is no reason apparent to the minds of young men why they should, with the splendid opportunities that are now open to them in commercial life. Congregations are so small, and the ministry offers such poor rewards, so far as this world's goods are concerned, that the churches cannot pay young men enough to make it an inducement for them to enter the ministry.

"Theological seminaries no longer have their full quota of students. They are run at a loss. In my correspondence I am constantly getting letters from clergymen in the West and South, as well as nearer home, asking me why, in my opinion, young people cannot be persuaded to go to church; why ministers of unquestioned ability find it impossible to draw large congregations.

"And what is your reply to these letters?" the Senator was asked.

"I don't reply to them," he said. "It is one of the complex problems of modern life in which I do not feel called upon to interfere."

SOCIETY IN WASHINGTON.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 20.—The third anniversary of the establishment of the Republic of Cuba was celebrated to-day at the Cuban Legation by a dinner and dance, at which Chargé d'Affaires and Mme. Martin Rivero were the hosts in the absence of the Minister in Europe. The dinner company included the Minister from Peru, the Chargé d'Affaires of Mexico and Señora Gambo, Señor and Señora Torrer, all of the Mexican Embassy; Señorita Rivero, the sister of the host; Señors Negutira and Vega of the Cuban Legation, the Misses Veloz, the Misses Fisher, and Miss Macari.

The decorations were pink and white roses, with the national colors of Cuba and the United States. An orchestra played through the dinner and for the dance. In addition to the members of the Mexican and Nicaraguan Legations, a number of South American young men and women from Georgetown University and convent were invited. A buffet supper was served during the evening.

Mrs. Morton, wife of the Secretary of the Navy, who returned from a short cruise on the Dolphin Thursday, left yesterday for a week's visit to New York.

Miss Helen Patten is a recent addition to the Washington party leaving with the Secretary of War on July 1 for the trip to the Philippines. Miss Patten is the sister of Mrs. Corbin, wife of Gen. Henry C. Corbin, whose guest she will be in Manila.

Mrs. Elkins, Miss Elkins with Mr. and Mrs. John R. McLean and Edward Beale McLean will sail on May 30 for Europe. Mrs. Elkins and daughter will go direct to Bad Nauheim, where Senator Elkins will join them in July.

OSLER ?—POOH !

Long Island's Oldest Married Couple Sure He's All Wrong.

Mr. and Mrs. James Ivons of Port Jefferson have just celebrated the sixty-second anniversary of their marriage. They are the oldest married couple on Long Island.

"We expect to live to celebrate our diamond wedding," said the bridegroom, a frisky boy of eighty-six. "We are both well and able to take care of ourselves. We'll outlive many of those who have greeted us and congratulated us to-day. That silly rubbish of Osler is unworthy of attention. No Osler would dare say to my face that I'm of no account."

HOBSON TO WED QUIETLY.

No Invitations on Account of His Father's Death—Only Two Attendants.

The only attendants at the wedding of Capt. Richmond Pearson Hobson and Miss Grizelda Houston Hull on Thursday next at Tuxedo will be Miss Lucia Hull, who will be her sister's maid of honor, and James Hobson, who will be his brother's best man.

The ceremony will be performed at 4 o'clock at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. George H. Hull, by the Rev. Mr. Fitzsimond of Tuxedo. As Capt. Hobson's father died only a short time ago, no formal invitations have been issued for the wedding. The Misses Anne and Margaret Hobson are due here early in the week to attend their brother's wedding.

GOSSIP FROM LENOX DISTRICT.

Special to The New York Times.

LENOX, May 20.—Miss Ethel Folsom of New York opened this week the Berkshire Hills farm where she is to conduct again this year a retreat for convalescents from New York hospitals. Mr. and Mrs. George Winthrop Folsom are at Sunnyside for the early Summer. Mr. Folsom represented Trinity Episcopal Church parish at a meeting of the diocese in Springfield and urged the diocese to build a residence for Bishop Vinton in that city.

The Lenox golf clubhouse and grounds were opened this week. Charles Thorn of New Jersey has been engaged as professional for the club.

Lady Durand and Miss Josephine Durand occupied Deepdene cottage this week.

Baron Karl von Giskra, Chargé d'Affaires of the Austrian Embassy, and Baroness von Giskra will arrive next week and open the Tanner cottage. After a month in Lenox Baroness von Giskra will join her children. The Austrian Ambassador and Mme. Hengelmuller will return to America early in August and come to Lenox for the remainder of the Summer.

Those opening their estates this week include Mr. and Mrs. Byam K. Stevens, Mr. and Mrs. S. Parkman Shaw, Mr. and Mrs. Harley T. Proctor, and Mr. and Mrs. Robert W. Paterson.

Mr. and Mrs. John Sloane of New York have been in Lenox this week inspecting their large property. They expect to arrive the first of June for the entire season.

Arthur S. Dixey of Boston, who has been appointed Secretary to Minister Morgan in Korea, has been in Lenox bidding farewell to his friends.

The Rev. and Mrs. Richard Lewis Howells of Washington have leased the Rockwell property for the Summer.

Thoroughbred horses for James J. Hill, President of the Northern Pacific Railroad, arrived here this week. Mr. Hill will spend a part of the Summer with his daughter, Mrs. Samuel Hill, at the latter's new property on Lake Mahkeenac.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert W. Chapin of New York have decided not to open their Lenox cottage and will spend the season at Fernside in Tyringham.

The Laurel Hill Association at Stockbridge has contributed $1,400 for a memorial to the late Henry D. Sedgwick of New York, a former President of the association. It will be in the form of a stone seat designed by Daniel Chester French of New York and will be placed on the plateau on the hill.

This week's cottage arrivals in Stockbridge include Mrs. Frederick Crowninshield, Dr. and Mrs. Charles McBurney, Mrs. William A. Nettleton, A. C. Van Rensselaer, and Mr. and Mrs. William E. Doane of New York.

Ambassador Joseph H. Choate has notified the caretaker of his Stockbridge estate that he will arrive in Stockbridge the second week in June.

Mrs. Joseph H. Parsons of New York has arrived at her estate, Crossways, in Great Barrington.

Bishop and Mrs. George Worthington of Nebraska are at their country place in Pittsfield. Bishop Worthington will go to Nebraska on diocesan business in June for two weeks, returning to Pittsfield for the Summer.

Gen. J. A. Burbank and family of New York are at their country place in Pittsfield for the Summer.

WEEK-END AT TUXEDO.

Special to The New York Times.

TUXEDO PARK, May 20.—Although the weather being rather cool and rainy during the latter part of the week kept many of the cottagers from opening their cottages for the season, a good crowd came out to-day to pass Sunday. Many house parties were given by the residents, followed by dinners to-night. Among the largest were those given by Mr. and Mrs. W. M. V. Hoffman, Mr. and Mrs. Henry W. Munroe, Mr. and Mrs. Ambrose Monell, Mr. and Mrs. R. Fulton Cutting, Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Garrison, Mr. and Mrs. George H. Hull, Mr. and Mrs. William G. Davies, Mrs. Grenville Kane, W. MacNeill Rodewald, Mr. and Mrs. L. S. Chanler, and Mr. and Mrs. H. O. Havemeyer, Jr.

Among those who entertained parties at the clubhouse were Mr. and Mrs. John Greenough, who have leased their cottage to Mr. and Mrs. Forsyth Wickes; Mr. and Mrs. Willard S. Brown, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph E. Stevens, and Mr. and Mrs. L. J. Pooler.

Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Seton, Jr., who were in the Barbey cottage on Tower Hill, during the Spring, will go to Europe next week, but the cottage will have been leased for the Summer by Mr. and Mrs. Henry M. Tilford, who will arrive next week. Mr. and Mrs. Seton have taken apartments over Sunday at the Wheat Club. They will return next week, entertaining at a farewell dinner on Monday.

Mr. and Mrs. William G. Davies are entertaining the Hon. Walter Rayner of London and William B. Forsby, United States Minister to Bolivia, at their cottage over Sunday.

Among the cottage arrivals this week were Mr. and Mrs. Henry W. Poor, in their villa on Tower Hill; Mr. and Mrs. Fred R. Halsey, in their new villa; Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Spencer, Mr. and Mrs. Amory S. Carhart, Mr. and Mrs. George F. Baker, Miss Eloise S. Breese, Miss Henry and Ambrose D. Henry, in the Stokes cottage, and Mr. and Mrs. William B. Dinsmore, Jr.

Mr. and Mrs. Montgomery Hare, who have leased the Davis cottage, will arrive next week, and Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Rogers, Jr., will also arrive in the Walker Smith cottage on Tuxedo Lake for the Summer.

Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Alexander will open their Tuxedo cottage next week, and Mr. and Mrs. Pierre Lorillard will arrive from Washington at Keewaydin.

Mrs. W. Rhinelander Stewart and Miss Stewart arrived at the club to-day. Other week-end arrivals include Mme. Damicourt of Paris, Mrs. Russell Hoadley, E. N. Taller, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Earle

MERELY A PARROT TRAINED IN DIALECT

Nothing at All to Cause a Riot in a Trolley Car.

YET THE BIRD GAVE OFFENSE

And His Owner Is in Hospital and There's a Feathered Talker Free in the Bronx.

It was all the parrot's fault. If the bird had kept silent, the trip of the West Farms car which left One Hundred and Twenty-ninth Street at 11 o'clock yesterday morning would have been uneventful. But when the bird began to talk there was trouble, and before it finished complications had arisen involving its owner, Joseph Kelly, and George Monroe.

Mr. Monroe is colored. When Mr. Kelly boarded the West Farms car he had a pasteboard box under his arm. The car was crowded and he had difficulty in securing a seat. When he did get one he placed the box carefully between his feet. There it rested, a most innocent-looking box.

Just as One Hundred and Thirty-fourth Street was reached a mysterious voice was heard to remark with true Southern accent that "niggahs nevah died." Then the statement was amplified thus:

Niggah, niggah, nevah die.
Black face and shiny eye.
Way down yondah in de cawn fiel'.

The passengers sat up and took notice of this somewhat irrelevant if rhythmical statement. The voice seemed to come from beneath one of the seats.

This plaintive query marked the second outburst:

Who broke de lock?
Oh, I doan know!
Who broke de lock in de henhouse do'h?
But I'll fin' out,
Befo' I go—
Who broke de lock in de henhouse do'h?

The car stopped at One Hundred and Fortieth Street to take on a passenger in the person of Mr. Monroe. Mollroe's color is very dark.

He took the only vacant seat, which happened to be opposite Kelly and the pasteboard box. By this time the other occupants of the car had traced the voice to the box, and were smilingly awaiting developments. As it happened, there was not another negro aboard, and Monroe wondered at the grins which greeted his advent. While he wondered he heard this:

"Niggah! Niggah, nevah die."

Monroe straightened up.

"Doan' you talk dat a-way to me, white folks," he blustered.

"Black face an' shiny eye," continued the voice, on the heels of his warning. The passengers laughed outright. Their glances indicated the place from which the insult came. Mr. Monroe heard some one say "parrot."

"Who broke de lock on de henhouse doh?" came from the box. Monroe glared at Kelly for a moment and then exploded.

"What foh you teach dat bird to tawk such disrespeckful talk?" he indignantly asked. "You sho' awt to be 'shamed to have sech a fool parrot. I ain't got no shiny eye. You's a onery white—"

"G'wan," said Mr. Kelly. "Chase yerself. If de bir-r-d minds ter pass remar-r-ks on yer complexion, 'taint my fault."

Promptly Mr. Monroe loosed a vicious kick, which sent the box to the street. It rolled over twice. The top came off and the parrot stepped out. It was rakish if disheveled—self-possessed if shaken. The motorman applied the brakes. Kelly made a jump for Monroe and pulled him to the rear platform. The parrot spread a pair of frayed wings and flapped to a near-by tree, still promising to find out about that broken lock.

When Kelly and Monroe reached the pavement they were still clinched. Mr. Monroe's overalls found the strain too great. Several passengers tried to pull the men apart and were themselves embroiled.

"Niggah, niggah, nevah die!" shrieked the parrot from his reign of vantage.

Monroe freed himself from Kelly's clutch, seized a shovel from the rear platform of the car, and struck Kelly a resounding blow over the head. Kelly was down and out.

The conductor ran to the nearest telephone and called a policeman. The policeman called an ambulance from the Lebanon Hospital. The surgeon dressed Kelly's wounds. Then he and his opponent were carted off in the patrol wagon to the Morrisania Court. The parrot watched their departure.

"Who broke de lock?" he demanded for the last time, then unfurled his wings and sped away toward Morris Park. At last accounts Monroe was pleading for a new pair of overalls, Kelly was nursing his wounded head, and three policemen and a crowd of Bronx children were seeking the vanished bird.

NEWS OF NEWPORT.

THEATRICAL NOTES.

SHE'S NO CENTENARIAN.

Mrs. Murray Admits That She Is Old, but Not 108.

Over at 147 Wyckoff Street, Brooklyn, yesterday, Mrs. Ann Murray, with a gleam in her eye and a storm cloud on her brow, was preparing to camp on the train of the spalpeen who had the audacity to write her up in the public prints as being 108 years old. According to the story to which Mrs. Murray objects, she would yesterday have been 108 years old, and it was told what a remarkably bright and spry woman she was for one born in 1797. A flock of curious folk consequently visited Mrs. Murray, wishing to see a woman who had lived when "Ireland was free, in the good old days before the Parliamentary Union of 1801."

As the visitors kept coming Mrs. Murray's indignation and wrath grew. Finally she denied herself to callers, sending out word to them that she was no freak, but just a "lady who was getting along in years."

"Me 108 years old!" said she scornfully, when some one asked for her photograph to publish. "Away with you. I'm just eighty-eight years to-day, and not a day older, and I don't remember the time when the Parliamentary Union was formed, because it was some sixteen years before I was born. I'd just like to lay eyes on the rogue that made me out to be twenty years older than I am and got all these people here asking me if I owed my wonderful age to living the simple life."

Mrs. Murray says she was born in Ireland in 1817.

HAVA DA SMOKE? HE WOULD.

A Driver's Friend Threw Match on Wagon Load of Rags—Result —!

"Hava da smoke?" said Angelo Lago to his friend Pietro as they rode together on Angelo's big load of paper and rags yesterday afternoon. The wagon was bumping along West Seventy-sixth Street and had almost reached Broadway.

"Sura thing!" said Pietro, taking the proffered cigar. "Gooda biz to-day?"

Then he threw the match behind him and began to talk over the price of rags with Angelo. Suddenly Angelo sniffed, then he sniffed again.

"You like da cigar?" he inquired anxiously of Pietro. Then he looked behind him.

"Diablo!" he shrieked. Pietro looked, and then tumbled from his perch, for by this time the flames from burning paper were close upon them.

Upon the curbstone the two sat wringing their hands until some thoughtful citizen rang for the fire engines. The firemen pounced on the load of rags, and in their efforts to put out the fire made Seventy-sixth Street in that vicinity look as though a cyclone had been playing there.

ANGEL FROM SOBERVILLE.

Spends $185 for Food and Raiment for New-Found Friends at Coney.

A man went down to Coney Island yesterday afternoon, and registered at the Pabst Loop Hotel as William Uno, Soberville, N. Y. The sea air or something or other had a softening effect on the man from Soberville, and he started out at once with a single purpose of doing good. He had money and found some persons who were willing to help him spend it. After two hours or so of philanthrophy the list of his benefactions footed up as follows:

Automobile ride for four tramps	$7.50
Yachting caps and trousers for party	20.00
Refreshments for same party	20.80
Rent of loop-the-loop, twenty minutes	12.00
203 tickets for Dreamland	20.30
Rubber arm for lion tamer, who had his bitten off last season	50.00
To open bank account for tiniest baby at incubator show	50.00
	$185.60

Uno was forced to discontinue his good deeds by the hotel proprietor, who had him put to bed. He is said to be a bookmaker.

DAMROSCH'S SUMMER PLANS.

Opening of the Three Weeks' Season on New York Theatre Roof Garden.

The New York Symphony Orchestra, under Mr. Walter Damrosch's direction, began last evening an attempt to assuage the dearth of good music that comes so suddenly upon New York after the close of the strenuous regular season. Such attempts have been numerous ever since Theodore Thomas began them at the old Terrace Garden and the Central Park Garden, as he has recently told us in his autiobiography. They have followed one another in various forms and under various conductors, but rarely with anything like continued prosperity. Their usual lack of success has not always been easily explicable; for there are many people who have felt and expressed the need for such music, and it is not reasonable to suppose that the musical appetite which demands so much in the Winter is entirely lost in the Summer.

This particular attempt to locate and satisfy the Summer need is made upon the roof garden of the New York Theatre, and it is to continue for three weeks. The place is inclosed in glass and is better for music than any frankly out-of-door place would be. The orchestra is the New York Symphony Orchestra that made a good showing at its Sunday concerts last Winter. Mr. Damrosch has compiled some programmes that offer diversion and interest at the same time—good music and popular music. The surroundings and the sound of the orchestra are perhaps not wholly ideal, but they are such as may make possible a very real enjoyment of the music, and it is possible at the same time to enjoy also certain of the creature comforts. The audience was of fair size.

Mr. Damrosch's programme last evening included as its most substantial numbers Goldmark's "Spring" overture, Wagner's "Tannhäuser" overture, Bizet's suite from "L'Arlésienne," and the movement representing the Pilgrims from Berlioz's "Harold" symphony. One of the new acquisitions to the orchestral forces, M. Barrère, played flute solos by Wormser and Widor, and showed himself to be an admirable master of his instrument. He appeared with Messrs. Addimando, Finkelstein, and Damrosch in a new caprice by Saint-Saëns on Danish and Russian airs for flute, oboe, clarinet, and piano, in which the combination of the tone color and characteristic expression of the instruments were more notable than the value of the musical ideas. The orchestra is to be strengthened by the accession of other wood wind players from Paris and a new trumpeter; but these are to appear only as soloists until they have joined the union, as was the case with M. Barrère last evening.

This evening another popular programme will be given, and to-morrow will be a symphony evening. Dvorak's symphony, "From the New World," will be played; also the overture and Gluck's "Iphigenia in Aulis" movements from Saint-Saëns's opera, "Henry VIII.," a "pastorale mystique" from Massenet's opera, "Le Jongleur de Notre Dame," for the first time; Liszt's first Hungarian Rhapsody, and Strauss's "Emperor" waltz.

BROWNIES SIDETRACKED FABLES FOR 25 YEARS

Palmer Cox Sees in Print Stories Written Quarter Century Ago.

STORED IN MAGAZINE SAFE

Editors Accepted Them Before the Writer Became Famous Through His Illustrated Verse.

It is an old, old jest of the jokesmith, about the man who in the flush of youth sent a story to a magazine and waited till the snows of many Winters had whitened his hair before he saw it printed. But Palmer Cox, the Brownie man, can vouch for the assertion that there's something in it after all. Mr. Cox has waited almost a quarter of a century to see some of the things in print that he wrote when a young man, and some are still to come.

In the days before he had discovered the Brownies, about 1880, Mr. Cox made a favorable impression through some fables and little stories that he wrote in verse and illustrated. One was about a King who visited a stingy town disguised as a beggar and made the town a paradise for mendicants by a threat to return some time in the same disguise and put to death any one who might refuse to aid him. Another was about a donkey and a giraffe who traveled together, the donkey having the laugh on the giraffe in the country, where all the food was grass, but the giraffe getting the laugh back in the country where the food was to be found only high up on the trees.

Mr. Cox submitted a series of these to the St. Nicholas Magazine, and they were accepted by the editors. While they were waiting for a chance to appear, however, Mr. Cox dropped into the editorial sanctum one day with the first of his verses and illustrations on the adventures of the Brownie band. It attracted the notice of the editors more than the other matter and was shoved ahead into the magazine.

When next the author dropped into the sanctum nobody was interested in anything except the Brownies, and so he set himself to work on them alone, and the editors put his other stories and pictures away in one of the big safes that are kept for such things. The stories had their own envelopes and were entered in their own places in big ledgers, so that they could be found whenever wanted.

It was in one or the other of the safes in the magazine office that they slumbered for more than twenty years. Once in a while an editor would think about them and look them over and declare that the money invested in them should be made to pay dividends by their publication. At times some of them did get into proof and the illustrations were held on what were known as the available lists, but sometimes it was a new crop of Brownie stories and sometimes it was some other feature that crowded them out, and they went back into their envelopes and were forgotten for another term.

It was only two weeks ago that Mr. Cox saw his story of the King and the stingy town in print. It had been brought out from the safe last year and finally found its way into the magazine, and a copy had been forwarded to his New York address. He was away in Canada, and the copy was mislaid and was only recently found again and sent to him at East Quogue, L. I., where he had spent the Winter.

He learned that others of his old-time stories had also been printed. It was like meeting old friends, almost forgotten, for him to read them again. The fact that he had forgotten just what was in these efforts of his younger years was shown when last week the editors of St. Nicholas sent to him the illustrations of the story about the donkey and giraffe, and another picture, and asked him if he could supply the text, as in the years that had gone by the copy had been lost. Mr. Cox dimly remembered why he had written the stories, but that was all.

He came to New York and said it would be impossible for him to supply the stories unless they happened to come to him again. A new search of the records of the magazine was made, and in an old book were found the entries, and deep down in the safe where they had reposed so many years the stories were found.

COSMOPOLITAN'S NEW HOME.

John Brisben Walker to Retire as Editor—Other Changes.

The Cosmopolitan Magazine has moved. Congressman W. R. Hearst, the new owner, will have it printed in The American Building, at Columbus Circle, instead of at Irvington, as heretofore. For some time yet John Brisben Walker will continue as editor, to be succeeded by Bailey Millard.

Several of the heads of the magazine under the old régime have been retained by the new owner, who will run it as the International Magazine Company, but most of the corps of subordinate employes have been dismissed.

Mr. Walker will still conduct The Twentieth Century Home Magazine, which he has been publishing at Irvington, in conjunction with The Cosmopolitan. It is understood that in conjunction with the publication of this magazine Mr. Walker will also embark in the book publishing business in the large building he erected at Irvington for The Cosmopolitan. This plan, however, has not been fully decided upon by Mr. Walker. The building is equipped with presses and machinery valued at about $250,000.

THE WEATHER.

WASHINGTON, May 20.—Rain is probable Sunday in the lower Mississippi Valley, Texas, and scattered showers and thunderstorms are indicated for the Rocky Mountain region and thence eastward over the plains region to the western portion of the Mississippi Valley. Showers will continue over the same region Monday, possibly extending into the Mississippi Valley. It will be warmer Monday in northern districts and the lake region. Colder weather is indicated for the plateau region Monday and the Rocky Mountain region Monday.

The winds along the New England and Middle Atlantic Coasts will be fresh northwest to north; on the South Atlantic Coast light to fresh northeast; on east Gulf Coast light to fresh south; on west Gulf Coast fresh southwest; on the lower lakes light to fresh west; on the upper lakes light and variable, becoming southeast.

FORECAST FOR TO-DAY AND MONDAY.

Eastern New York and New England—Fair and continued cool Sunday; Monday fair, warmer in interior; diminishing northwest winds.

Eastern Pennsylvania and New Jersey—Fair and continued cool Sunday; Monday fair, warmer; light northwest winds.

The record of temperature for the twenty-four hours ended at midnight, taken from the thermometer of the Weather Bureau, is as follows:

MAJOR IN SHIRTSLEEVES SHOCKED THE MILITIA

HIS 250 POUNDS IRKSOME

That's Why He Doffed Blouse, Major Wilson's Friends Say — Officers' Tongues Wag, Nevertheless.

"What are the Colonels growlin' for?"
Said Jones on detail.
"Why, can't you see yourself, my boy,"
Said Sergeant Bill McPhail.
"And why are D. and T. so hot?"
Said Jones on detail.
"Just peel your eyes, my rooky boy,"
Said Sergeant Bill McPhail,
"For the Major's servin' toddy, and he's in his shirtsleeves, too,
And his comrades they are sayin' such a thing will never do,
For if he had an apron for a barkeep he would be—
Oh, the Major's servin' toddy in his shirtsleeves."
—"Danny Deever with a dash of Absinthe."

The recent military tournament has left a wide streak of ruffled official dignity. During the tournament there were murmurs because Brevet Major David Wilson, commanding the Second Battery, National Guard, did the honors of presiding genius in the buffet room in his shirtsleeves. This place came to be called the "toddy" room among some of the wags in the show.

Major Wilson is Corresponding Secretary of the Military Athletic League and is a member of the Executive Committee. He has been an officer of the league ever since its beginning, nine years ago. In one corner of the big committee room to the right of the lobby on entering Madison Square Garden a small room was partitioned off, and in that Major Wilson, as official major domo of the commissary end of the tournament, dispensed liquid refreshment to the visiting officers. He also saw to it that salads and sandwiches were provided for the hungry bluejackets and other participants in the programme. Half a dozen colored men worked under his orders.

The Major weighs in the neighborhood of 230 pounds, and the rapid movements made necessary by the influx of hungry men overheated him considerably, and it was noticed early in the week that he would remove his military blouse at strenuous moments and go about in his shirtsleeves, pouring out a bottle here with an accompanying "Here's howdy," and rushing out a table load of salads for a suddenly arrived detachment from the arena.

As the tournament advanced it was seen that the Major appeared more and more in his shirtsleeves. Among some of the sticklers for propriety this seemed almost a scandal.

"My, my," said one of the sticklers one night, when officers of the navy were as thick as blackberries. "Whatever will the navy think of the National Guard when they see one of its most prominent officers, and a commander at that, without his blouse? It is positively shocking."

"Indeed, it is, Captain," said another. "Why, just look. If he only had an apron —! It is awful, and he, too, one of the most impressive soldierly figures in uniform in the whole service."

However, that the success of the tournament might not be imperiled by a lack of harmony, all criticism was hushed into expressions between confidential friends, but now that the big show has passed many of the officers are saying things.

To all criticisms, friends of Major Wilson point to the fact that he was the hardest worked man on any of the committees during the tournament. He had to be everywhere at once, they say, and, being a large man, he found he could not do his work as it should be done with a stiff military coat buttoned close around him. One of his stanchest defenders said yesterday:

"The Major did the eminently proper thing. Some of his critics would probably have assigned the work to somebody else or have half done it. That isn't the way with Major Wilson. When he has work to do he does it, and does not try to shirk it. If official dignity stands in the way, so much the worse for the dignity."

One naval officer was pained when he learned that any fault had been found with the big Major.

"It seemed to me when I saw him," he said, "that he had to be everything, from a chef to a waiter, and in that capacity one must lay aside much of what passes for dignity. If the opinion of the bluejackets of the battleship Alabama is any criterion, and they ate many of the Major's salads, he is the most popular officer of all."

There is nothing in the military code that can be invoked to call the Major to account for his shirtsleeves, but several official heads have wagged ominously when next year's tournament has been mentioned.

DEATH LIST OF A DAY.

George E. Kennedy.

George E. Kennedy of 20 West Thirty-second Street, died yesterday from cerebro-spinal meningitis. Mr. Kennedy was attached to the staff of THE NEW YORK TIMES. His home was in Springfield, Mass., and he came to New York eight years ago. About two years ago he was stricken with almost total blindness and for a long time specialists had small hopes of being able to save his eyesight. Recently it was somewhat better that he resumed work. He leaves four sisters in this city.

POWER OF CONGRESS TO REGULATE COMMERCE

Results Reached at Hearings by Senate Committee.

REBATE EVIL CONSIDERED

The Dominating Influence of Commercial Forces in the Establishment of Freight Tariffs.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Important and most gratifying results have already been reached in the course of the present hearings by the Senate Committee on Inter-State Commerce, of which the Hon. Stephen B. Elkins of West Virginia is Chairman.

On the 5th inst., in answer to a request of the Chairman, the Attorney General of the United States transmitted to the committee a lucid report in regard to the powers of Congress, of the courts, and of the executive department of the Government relative to the regulation of commerce. This statement clearly indicates that the powers of the Government are ample, and that the only question of moment which confronts Congress at the present time relates to the manner in which and the extent to which the undoubted powers of the Government shall be exercised.

There is nothing new in this. The question as to the sufficiency of the powers granted to Congress and the dangers which always attend any new exercise of those powers was clearly stated on the floor of the Constitutional Convention Aug. 16, 1787. The question as to the powers to be granted to Congress being under consideration, Mr. Elbridge Gerry, a delegate from Massachusetts, said:

"The Legislature (Congress) cannot be trusted with such a power. It might ruin the country."

Mr. Gouverneur Morris of Pennsylvania, one of the most statesmanlike members of the convention, replied:

"However the legislative power may be formed, it will, if disposed, be able to ruin the country."

This political dogma was not then denied, and I think it has not since been seriously called in question.

RAILROAD LAWYERS' ATTITUDE.

The great railroad lawyers of the country do not pretend to question the power of Congress to regulate commerce, within constitutional limitations. Twenty-five years ago a bill for the regulation of the railroads was before Congress. The Hon. John H. Reagan, Chairman of the House Committee on Commerce, propounded to the late John K. Cowen, General Counsel of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, the following inquiry:

"Mr. Cowen, have you any doubt as to the power of the Government to enact this proposed legislation regulative of the railroads?"

With his characteristic intensity of expression, Mr. Cowen replied:

"No, Sir, not the slightest. Sir, you have power enough to take these corporations by the throat and shake them to death."

Thus did a great lawyer concede the power of Congress over commerce, while strenuously maintaining that such power should be exercised under the constitutional restraints of judicial procedure, in conformity with the lessons of experience, and in no intemperate manner. From the day when the Declaration of Independence was signed to the present hour the people of the United States have detested any unnecessary or profligate exercise of governmental power.

The information furnished by Attorney General Moody as to the adequacy of the powers granted to the National Government has therefore merely a professional or academic significance. The great question of right, of justice, and of expediency remains to vex Congress and the country.

Still the delusion possesses the advocates of commission rate-making that the existence of the power of Congress to regulate commerce implies an obligation resting upon Congress to exert that power in the manner which they advocate. This fallacy lurks in the statement made to Senator Elkins by Attorney General Moody under date of May 5, 1905.

THE QUESTION OF REBATES.

An admirable result of the work done and influence exerted by the Senate Committee on Commerce at its present hearings relates to complaints which for years have been made in regard to unjust discrimination caused by the practice of granting rebates to the larger shippers. This evil was an incident of the act of Congress of June 15, 1866, which authorized the railroads of the United States to connect their lines and to engage in joint traffic, thus creating a community of interests among all the roads of this country.

This propinquity of rival interests begat a fierceness of competition which was demoralizing to the commerce of the whole country. The granting of rebates to the larger shippers was one of the incidents of that protracted struggle. Gradually the railroads came to realize that, in the language of Chairman Knapp of the Inter-State Commerce Commission, the whole rebate business was simply a process whereby the large shippers were enabled "to sandbag the railroad companies," at the same time disturbing the commercial and industrial interests of the country. Accordingly, the railroad companies, with marked unanimity, now seek protection against the evils of rebates.

Such relief was afforded by the Elkins act of Feb. 19, 1903. Since the passage of that act not a single case of rebates granted has been reported by the Inter-State Commerce Commission to the courts. Nevertheless the advocates of commission rate making still continue the outcry against rebates as though they constituted an existent evil. But Samuel Spencer, President of the Southern Railway, has put a quietus to this pretense.

With the commanding influence which he wields by virtue of his eminence as a manager of railroad affairs, as President of about ten thousand miles of railroad, and speaking also as the representative of nearly all the railroads of the country, he has declared that the railroads are opposed to the policy of rebates, and that they will use all their power and influence to suppress all sorts of discriminations in rates arising from rebates. He also earnestly requests that Congress will enact such further legislation as will forever abolish unjust discrimination as between persons, places, and commodities through the granting of rebates.

This is a gratifying result of the brave work of Senator Elkins in arresting the Populistic attempt to divert the course of justice in the regulation of commerce from the judicial power of the United States to an adjunct of the Executive power of the Government.

THE PRIVATE CAR LINES

Another important result of the present hearings is that the railroad companies, through Mr. Spencer, practically unite in the efforts to abolish all unjust discriminations arising from the use of private car lines, except to the extent that cars so employed are demanded by producers especially perishable commodities, which require special facilities for transportation at particular seasons of the year, a service which usually cannot be economically performed by the railroad companies. All agree that such car lines shall be subject to the provisions of the Inter-State Commerce act.

The necessity for the employment of special cars for special service is strikingly illustrated in the Railway Postal Service carried on in cars which traverse the lines of many associated companies. These cars are fit for no other purpose.

Another exception to the objections urged to private car lines is seen in the Pullman car service. The President has just returned from a six weeks' tour over six thousand miles of railroad, in a car of this sort, affording all the comforts and convenience of a home. This journey, extending through twelve States and three Territories, over the lines of many different companies, was rendered possible through a combination formed by connecting lines for this purpose. The same privilege may be enjoyed by any citizen who is able to pay for it.

But a much more important service has been rendered by Senator Elkins and his painstaking associates in diffusing knowledge of the conditions which control railroad transportation in this country. I refer to the fact that the actual rates and also the relative rates—particularly those which prevail from the interior to seaports of the Atlantic and Gulf Coasts—are absolutely controlled by commercial forces to which the railroads must submit, and which they dare not resist.

This fact of National importance was clearly brought out by railroad Presidents of large experience and thorough knowledge of commercial conditions and the influence which such conditions exert upon transportation charges. Samuel Spencer, President of the Southern Railway Company and of the lines of other companies extending from the Potomac to the Mississippi and from the Ohio River to the Gulf of Mexico, has clearly explained this compulsion of commercial and industrial forces, showing that railroad rates are not only determined thereby, but must of necessity conform to the fluctuations to which such forces are constantly subject.

Mr. Victor Morawetz, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Board of Directors and General Counsel of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railway Company, fully confirmed the statements previously made as to the dominating influence of commercial forces in the establishment of freight tariffs. Mr. Morawetz spoke for a railway system embracing 9,268 miles of railroad, extending from Chicago to San Francisco, and traversing Illinois, Missouri, Kansas, Indian Territory, Texas, Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona, and California.

Mr. Robert Mather, President of the Rock Island Company, and General Counsel of the Rock Island system, embracing 13,650 miles of road, located in seventeen different States and Territories, confirmed the fact that commercial forces are dominant in rate-making, that such forces manifest themselves in all the circumstances and conditions affecting the welfare of the carrying companies and of producers, shippers, and consumers, as well as in the moral and social conditions involved, and showed that the railroad companies must and do conform to the compulsion of commercial forces so as not to destroy industrial communities engaged in any legitimate enterprise.

MR. TUTTLE'S TESTIMONY.

Next appeared Mr. Lucius Tuttle, President of the Boston and Maine Railroad system, which serves the northern portions of the New England States. Mr. Tuttle is a veteran railroad manager. He stands pre-eminent in his profession. It is said of his system and of the great railroad system of Southern New England—the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad Company—that they have given the railroad commissions of their respective States and of the United States less trouble than the roads of any other section of the country.

Mr. Tuttle declared that railroad rates over his lines and over the lines connecting the commercial and industrial interests of New England with the remotest corners of the country, even to the Gulf of Mexico and the Pacific Coast, are absolutely controlled by commercial forces to which he is compelled to yield obedience. He also showed conclusively that if his company and the companies operating connecting lines did not conform their rates to the compulsion of such forces the productive enterprises of the New England States would perish.

Last among the great railroad Presidents to bear testimony upon this point came that distinguished railroad builder, steamship builder, and commerce builder from the Northwest, James J. Hill, President of the Great Northern Railway, who has built and for years managed lines extending from St. Paul, Minn., into Manitoba, Canada, and from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, embracing in main line and branches 5,900 miles of road. In connection with the latter line he has established a line of steamers from Duluth to Buffalo on the Great Lakes and a line of steamers on the Pacific Ocean from Puget Sound to Yokohama and Hongkong.

Mr. Hill and his associates also control a great system of railroads in the States of Wisconsin, Missouri, Iowa, Nebraska, Wyoming, and Montana, embracing 8,547 miles of road. These lines extend from St. Paul to Chicago and to St. Louis, where connections are formed with lines extending into the cotton States west of the Mississippi.

Mr. Hill clearly explained that railroad rates over all these lines are not only absolutely controlled by commercial forces, but he clearly explained that railroad rates are in important instances absolutely dictated by the exigencies of development. The fact that his lines have been the chief agency in the development of the resources of a vast area extending from Lake Superior to the Pacific Coast, which a few years ago was absolutely barren, constitutes an important chapter in American history.

The late Collis P. Huntington and his coadjutors in the work of constructing the Central and Southern Pacific Railroads and their branch lines, now embracing 14,808 miles of road, in like manner have developed vast resources and created an enormous commerce in regions which previously were absolutely non-productive. Mr. Huntington never ceased to proclaim the fact that while seeking to make money for himself and his associates his traffic policy was absolutely controlled by commercial and economic conditions to which he was obliged to yield.

HIS POLICY CONTINUED.

This policy is being pursued to-day by his successor, Mr. E. H. Harriman. The administrative conduct of this policy is now confided to J. C. Stubbs, Traffic Director, who for more than thirty years has been employed by the Southern Pacific Company in the difficult work of interpreting the significance of commercial, geographical, and economic conditions in framing freight tariffs. The present wealth and commercial prosperity of California, Nevada, Utah, Colorado, Nebraska, Kansas, Arizona, New Mexico, and Texas constitute the irrefutable vindication of the policy thus adopted and steadfastly pursued from the beginning.

As the foregoing testimony, all [illegible] rate making must be added the unanimous conclusion of the International Railway Congress recently held at Washington:

"Tariffs should be based on commercial principles, taking into account the special conditions which bear upon the commercial value of the services rendered."

True it is that the influence exerted by the compulsion of commercial conditions affords only a rough guide to the framing of freight tariffs, for commercial liberty is always in the nature of struggle, with consequent uncertainty as to results in concrete cases. And yet, the general results and common good to all actually realized from the overruling force of commercial, geographic, and economic conditions have been wonderfully beneficent, guided and restrained as such conditions have ever been by that great unwritten code known as the common law, under the salutary guarantees and restraints of which, in the language of Senator Knox, "the English-speaking people have attained their wealth and power."

In the course of the evolution of commercial and industrial interests, the common law has been reinforced by the act to regulate commerce, the Cullom act of Feb. 4, 1887, and by the Elkins act of Feb. 19, 1903, both of which statutes are supplemental to and strictly conformed to the principles of the common law.

The results of the operation of commercial, geographic, and economic conditions as thus restrained are summarily stated as follows:

1. There has been a development of natural resources and of commerce in this country unparalleled in all the ages and in all countries.

2. Railroad transportation charges are to-day only about one-third what they were thirty-five years ago; the number of tons transported has doubled during the last ten years, and the facilities for commerce by rail have been greatly improved.

3. The Inter-State Commerce Commission during the eighteen years of its existence has been able to prove in the courts not a single case of exorbitant rates, only two cases a year of unjust discriminations among many millions of transactions yearly, while 92 per cent. of all the complaints made to the commission have been settled informally through the mediatorial offices of that body.

Thus has the abiding faith of the fathers in the conservatism which inheres in the untrammeled interaction of forces been fully vindicated.

And yet, in the face of the beneficent rule of commercial conditions, and of the time-honored principles of law incorporate into the very fibre of our civilization, the advocates of conferring upon a Governmental bureau the autocratic power of determining rates, declare in a statement submitted to Senator Elkins on April 11 last, that to say the carriers themselves, governed and guided by controlling commercial forces and by wholesome provisions of law, may do what a bureau of the executive branch of the Government, clothed with autocratic power, cannot do, is simply "begging the whole question." It is too clear for any serious attempt at refutation that these men are themselves "begging the whole question."

AS TO NEW REMEDIES.

Moreover, in their pretense of applying new remedies to new conditions, they are seeking to establish in this country an autocratic bureaucracy under the control of the executive power, a form of governmental imperialism which characterized the decadent Roman Empire, and which has long since been repudiated by Great Britain and by the nations of Continental Europe, except Russia, where the people are struggling to cast off this hated relic of the Dark Ages.

A return to this effete policy would, as indicated by Stuyvesant Fish, President of the Illinois Central Railroad Company, in his eloquent reply to Secretary Taft on the 8th instant, bring us back to mediaeval conditions when commercial conditions were ignored, and it was assumed to be a proper function of government to determine the wages of labor and the prices of the necessaries of life and other commodities. This form of governmental imperialism was repudiated by the men who founded our National Government.

VANDERBILT CHAUFFEUR HELD

Chef, Too, Arrested—Both Men Fined for Disorderly Conduct.

Julius Pashe, chauffeur, and Charles Elbessen, chef, for Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt, according to the story they told Policeman England, were arraigned in the West Side Court yesterday on charges of illegal automobile speeding and disorderly conduct. Pasha was held in $500 bail for trial. He was fined $5 on the other charge and Elbessen $10.

Bicycle Policemen England arrested the men at Fifty-fifth Street and Broadway after a chase of nine blocks from Times Square. The automobile, the policeman said, was going twenty miles an hour. He said that Elbessen made threats when he refused to release the chauffeur. Both men, England said, were in a hilarious mood.

In court Pasha denied that he was employed by Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt, but refused to say who his employer was.

BENSON MUST FACE TRIAL.

Warrant Is Granted for His Removal to Washington.

Judge Holt, in the United States District Court, yesterday, decided against John A. Benson, the California land owner, who was before him on an application for a warrant of removal. Judge Holt said he would grant the warrant, but on the application of Frank H. Platt, representing Benson, the signing of the warrant was delayed until Tuesday next. United States District Attorney Burnett asked that the bail be increased to $20,000, but Judge Holt thought the existing bail of $15,000 sufficient.

Benson, with others, was indicted in Washington, D. C., on a charge of having conspired to defraud the United States of Government lands. He was held for trial by Commissioner Shields. Benson must appear in Washington this week.

HEARING ON SCHOOL COURSE.

Board of Education Wants to Know Parents' Opinions of It.

The interest taken by the parents in the shorter school day hearings recently held in all the boroughs has influenced the Committee on Studies and Text Books of the Board of Education to arrange for a public hearing on the course of study now in use in all the city schools.

So many complaints have been received recently against the so-called "fads and frills" of the course that the committee has deemed this the best method of learning the opinions of the parents. The hearing will be held next Wednesday evening at the Hall of Education, Park Avenue and Fifty-ninth Street.

Suspends Injunction on Wireless.

Judge Townsend, in the United States Circuit Court, yesterday, granted the motion of Philip Farnsworth, counsel for the American De Forest Wireless Telegraph Company, suspending the injunction recently granted on the ground of infringement in favor of the Marconi Wireless Telegraph Company, pending a final hearing of the case. The Marconi Company presented six claims upon which it based its alleged infringement.

PATRONAGE FOR McCARREN.

May Get $35,000 Worth of Jobs in Return for Supporting McClellan.

Brooklyn Democratic politicians are anxiously awaiting the disposition by the courts of thirty-four applications of Corporation Counsel Delany for the appointment of street opening Commissioners in their borough.

The understanding is that if the applications of the Corporation Counsel are acted upon favorably Mayor McClellan will see to it that the patronage, amounting in all to about $35,000, will be given to the followers of Senator McCarren in return for McCarren's pledge to the Mayor to give him loyal support in the event of his renomination.

ENGINEERS TO BUILD ANNEX.

Society Which Refused Carnegie's Gift Flies Plans to Improve Home.

Plans have been filed with the Building Department for the enlargement of the Society House of the American Society of Civil Engineers, the organization that declined to affiliate with other societies in accepting Mr. Andrew Carnegie's recent gift of a $1,350,000 club house and technical building.

The house is a four-story edifice at 222 West Fifty-seventh Street, and it is proposed to add a four-story annex which will give the building a total frontage of 75 feet. The second story will contain the library and a large auditorium. The improvements will cost $60,000. The architects are Eidlitz & McKenzie.

FIRST WATER VICTOR IN STALLION STAKES

Unbeaten Colt Took Big Prize by a Neck from Clark Griffith.

FLINDERS WON THE LADIES'

Long Chance Outsider Beat Gold Ten a Head in a Close Finish for Filly Race at Belmont Park.

Unbeaten champion of the two-year-olds that have showed so far this season, First Water earned his fourth straight victory of the Spring at the Belmont Park race course yesterday afternon, when as odds-on favorite for the National Stallion race he was returned the winner a neck before Clark Griffith, with a fair field of colts behind him. The race was the most valuable of the Saturday programme, and the richest stake for two-year-olds run in 1905, and First Water's victory established his claim beyond question as the best of his age that New York racegoers have seen.

Nine horses ran in the race, three of the number being entries from J. E. Madden's stable, while Madden saddled a fourth entry in Vendor, owned by F. R. Hitchcock and trained by Madden. First Water had up scale weight, and from first to last in the betting First Water was the favorite at odde on, the post price against him being 5 to 8 on, while the Madden trio, Merry Boy, Timber, and Comedienne, held the place of second choice at 5 to 1, with Vendor, 6 to 1, and Clark Griffith, 7 to 1, the next best backed.

The start was made after a brief delay, and for the first quarter of a mile First Water seemed swallowed up in the crowd, Comedienne leading off, with Vendor second and Timber third, and the three holding about the same relative positions until the third furlong was entered. Then First Water went through the field like a flash, and in the furlong drew out a length and a half in the lead, with Vendor and Clark Griffith following in the order named. As First Water shook off Vendor, Clark Griffith fell back seemingly beaten, and O'Neill, on First Water, thinking he had the race already won, began to ease up the favorite. Beginning the last furlong, and when First Water was only galloping in front, Clark Griffith came again with a rush, and closing fast at the end, got up to First Water's shoulders, compelling O'Neill to hustle out the favorite in the last few strides, First Water, though it was too late for him to get fully in motion again, responding to the urging, and winning cleverly by a neck, while Clark Griffith was three lengths before Vendor, third. The gross value of the stakes was $13,735, of which the winner's share was $9,807.50, with $1,200 to the second and $600 to the third.

In the race for the Ladies' Stakes, seven fillies, three years old, ran over the mile course, the only one of the lot nomed to start which did not answer the call to the post being the crack two-year-old of last season, Tradition, her stable being represented by Zeala. Coy Maid started favorite, with Zeala and Gold Ten the two next best backed, while Flinders was the last chance outsider at odds of 20 to 1 at post time. The race produced the surprise of the day, as Flinders, always well up, trailed Coy Maid and Klamesha, who alternated in front to the turn into the stretch, and there went on, just as Gold Ten made her move to the front, Flinders by taking the short way to the winning post getting there a head in advance of Gold Ten, who went wide on the stretch turn and just failed to get up. Coy Maid, stopping at the end, lasted long enough to get third place, a length behind Gold Ten.

Flying Buttress was a hot favorite for the International Steeplechase Handicap. Arian being the only other horse of the eight that ran that was backed to beat him, Flying Buttress and Arian thus carrying all the money. The two had the race between them all the way, Arian drawing out at the end after Flying Buttress made the early running, Arian then winning cleverly by a length. Summary:

Grant Won Tennis Final.

Playing speedy drives for passing shots and smashing with telling force at the net, W. C. Grant won the final match yesterday in the championship singles of the New York Tennis Club's tournament. He defeated Robert B. Bryan in straight sets by the score of 6—3, 6—2, 6—2.

YALE TEAM WON AT TRAPS.

Beat Crescent A. C. Gunners by Three Targets for Carteret Cup.

By the narrow margin of three clay targets Yale's team of gunners yesterday won the inter-club team shoot. The competition was held at the traps of the Carteret Gun Club, Garden City, L. I., under conditions of strong and shifting winds that severely tested the marksmanship of the gunners. Yale's team scored a total of 204 out of a possible 250, with the team of the Crescent Athletic Club second with a total of 201. The Carteret Gun Club team was third with 191.

The shooting for the individual high score cup, offered by Albert R. Fish of the Crescent Athletic Club, was also lose. It was won by J. S. S. Remsen, Captain of the Crescent team, with a total of 49 targets out of a possible 50. Clarence H. King, Yale, 1907, was second to the veteran Remsen with 46 "kills."

The Country Club of Westchester, the Nassau Country Club, and the Carteret Gun Club also had teams in the field, but all fell below the 200 mark.

In every particular the shooting of Capt. Remsen for Crescent and of King for Yale provided the feature of the day. They were in the last squad to face the traps. Two misses for King and a perfect score of 25 for Capt. Remsen would have tied the score. Every member of the competing teams and a large gallery of spectators lined back on the shooting platform to witness the test of steady nerve, quick eye, and judgment.

Capt. Remsen had previously shot 25 clay targets that took the place of birds, while King had only "killed" 22 on the first of his score. It was regarded as a sure victory for Crescent, but King displayed a splendid degree of accuracy. He winged the clays up to the seventeenth, which he missed, but his shot found all the others to the end. Capt. Remsen missed the nineteenth, and on this even shooting Yale carried off the handsome cup. The scores:

LACROSSE AT HOBOKEN.

Stevens Defeated Cornell Easily—Columbia's Second Team Was Beaten.

Stevens Institute lacrosse team defeated the Cornell team at the St. George Cricket Grounds yesterday by a score of 5 to 0. The game started with a moderate pace, which was maintained throughout the game. During the first half two goals were shot for Stevens and in the second half they caged the ball three times. The attacking was done almost entirely by the Stevens men, but the score was held down by the admirable work of the Cornell goal keeper, who stopped repeated shots. In the second half McDonald of Cornell fell on his wrist and sprained it badly. He had to leave the game, and as Cornell had no substitutes McKinley of Stevens was also put out. The line-up was as follows:

Cornell.	Position.	Stevens.
Kline	Goal	Erlenkotter
Johnson	Point	Hamilton
Reitz	Cover point	Pinckney
Lockerby	First defense	Comstock
Gildner	Second defense	Demarest
McDonald	Third defense	Turner
Schneidenheim	Centre	Murray
Eveland	Third attack	Gayley
Darling	Second attack	Roberts
Hunter (Capt.)	First attack	McKinley
Main	Outside home	Helms
Ricketson	Inside home	Davis (Capt.)

Referee—Dr. Maddren, Hopkins. Goal umpires—Stevens, Norris; Cornell, Oberdendorf. Time of halves—Twenty and twenty-five minutes. Goals—Roberts, 1; Murray, 3; Helms, 1.

Before the Cornell game the Stevens sophomore scrub team played the second team of Columbia and defeated them by a score of 7 to 6.

MOTOR CAR CHAMPIONSHIP.

Will Be Based on Points Won in National Circuit Race Meets.

An important decision regarding the motor car championship for 1905 has just been determined by the Racing Committee of the American Automobile Association. The championship will be decided on the point system, and the race upon which the points will be based will be the free-for-all contest. It is stipulated that this event must not be less than five miles nor more than ten miles in length. The winning car will receive four points, the second two points, and the third one point.

These points for the championship will be awarded in the National circuit meet, as sanctioned by the American Automobile Association. Not all the meets sanctioned will necessarily be in the National circuit, as several of the local track contests are not in the circuit. The circuit automobile racing dates, as at present sanctioned, are:

June 10—Morris Park, New York City; June 16-17—Hartford, Conn.; June 21—Baltimore, Md.; June 24—Philadelphia, Penn.; June 28-29—Pittsburg; July 3-4—A. A. A. meet, Morris Park; July 22—Empire City Track; Aug. 1-2—Grand Rapids, Mich.; Aug. 4-5—Detroit; Aug. 11-12—Cleveland; Aug. 18-19—Buffalo; Aug. 26—To be granted; Sept. 4—Boston; Sept. 9—Providence; Sept. 25—Morris Park; Sept. 28-29—Poughkeepsie; Sept. 30—Empire City track.

Adele Ritchie Buys Show Horses.

Competition for Horse Show honors promises to be unusually keen this year, and several new aspirants for exhibition distinction are already in the field. The most notable recruit in the many Horse Show Associations is Miss Adele Ritchie, who has determined to enter the lists as a rival to Miss Elsie Cassatt, Mrs. W. E. Kotman, Mrs. Joseph Widener, Miss Marion Holloway, Mrs. John Gerken, and other prominent social exhibitors. For some time she has been getting together a stable of prospective blue ribbon winners, and her recent purchase of Masterpiece and Her Majesty from W. J. Peyton of 230 West Fifty-eighth Street for $3,500 has made her a dangerous candidate for stellar tanbark honors.

The latest acquisitions to her stable have already carried off many important prizes. They possess high, sensational action and speed, and can be driven single or in pairs. Miss Ritchie will exhibit at Brookline, Mass.; Long Branch, Bay Shore, and Atlantic City preparatory to sending her horses before the judges at Madison Square Garden next November. She will enter the classes for pairs and singles, high-stepping, and singles and pairs in the runabout classes. In each event she will drive herself, and judged by her success in park driving, she should carry off many events.

Columbia's Tennis Team Won.

Columbia defeated New York University yesterday on the Columbia courts by a score of 5 matches to 4. The match was played in the morning, and the afternoon was devoted to a tennis tournament between the Columbia players. The match was the first of the season for the Columbia team, and the victory was a surprise to the New York University players, who had been practising for the match for several weeks.

"MIDDIES'" CREW WINS FROM COLUMBIA EIGHT

Only One-fifth of a Length Separates Boats at Finish.

NAVY SPURT DECIDES RACE

Contest Is Prettiest Ever Seen on Severn—Columbia Led for Mile and a Half.

Special to The New York Times.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., May 20.—The Navy finished a completely victorious rowing season here this afternoon by winning a double event from Columbia in a splendidly fought contest, the best ever seen on the local course. The Navy boat crossed the line only a fifth of a length ahead of its rival, and the winner was not determined until the judges' decision was announced. The Columbia 'Varsity was a length and a half ahead of the Navy second crew, and the Columbia second a length to the rear. The winning time was 10 minutes 3 seconds; Columbia firsts, 10 minutes 3 3-5 seconds; Navy seconds, 10 minutes 8 1-15 seconds, and Columbia seconds, 10 minutes 11 2-5 seconds.

The race was originally scheduled to start at 2:30, but the stiff wind at that time made it impossible, and it was postponed until 7. It was further delayed by a false start of the Columbia second crew, and at the finish it was nearly dark.

The senior boats did not begin to pull away from the juniors until nearly half of the distance was rowed, and even then there was no wide margin. From the three-quarter-mile point to within a quarter of a mile of the finish the Columbia 'Varsity led from a quarter of a length to nearly a length, and at the mile and a half it looked as if they would win. The navy had been rowing about 33 strokes, but raised it to 35 a quarter of a mile from the finish. Although Columbia struggled gamely the navy closed the gap, and finally shot her nose ahead.

The navy closes its best rowing season with to-day's victory. It has defeated Georgetown, Pennsylvania, Yale, and Columbia. Credit is largely due to Coach Richard Glendon.

The crews to-day rowed as follows:

Navy First.—Reichmuth, stroke, 165; Taffinder, (Captain,) No. 7, 167; Cabiness, No. 6, 163; Brainard, No. 5, 160; Bradley, No. 4, 175; Dreutzer, No. 3, 175; Causey, No. 2, 170; Jensen, bow, 160; Willson, coxswain, 112.

Columbia 'Varsity.—Fraser, stroke, 180; O'Loughlin, (Captain,) No. 7, 168; Miller, No. 6, 172; Witewill, No. 5, 183; Post, No. 4, 168; Boyle, No. 3, 176; Cornell, No. 2, 167; Pierpont, bow, 158; Cuthel, coxswain, 122.

Navy Second.—Ingram, stroke, 160; Bartlett, (Captain,) No. 7, 165; Pence, No. 6, 169; Montgomery, No. 5, 169; Myers, No. 4, 160; McKee, No. 3, 167; Rockwell, No. 2, 163; Johnson, bow, 158; Hoover, coxswain, 112.

Columbia Second.—Von Bernuth, (Captain,) stroke, 185; Mackenzie, No. 7, 168; W. T. Miller, No. 6, 156; Ferris, No. 5, 200; Cheadle, No. 4, 175; Norris, No. 3, 155; Donovan, No. 2, 136; Updyke, bow, 152; Spence, coxswain, 119.

BUTLER DUNCAN, JR., WINS.

His Thirty-Footer Takes Manhasset Bay's Opening Yacht Race.

At the opening of the Manhassett Bay Yacht Club yesterday the new Herreshoff thirty-footers built for members of the New York Yacht Club met in their first race of the season. W. Butler Duncan, Jr.'s, Dahinda won from Harry L. Maxwell's Phryne, with Cord Meyer's Atair third and J. W. Alker's Alira fourth, over a ten-mile course.

A stiff northwest breeze blew and the bay was covered with whitecaps. The boats were forced to beat to windward and return off the wind with closely reefed mainsails. The last two boats were closer hauled and owe their defeat to this fact.

The start was made at 3:25 o'clock, with the four boats going over the line together, with the Dahinda in the windward position. They kept well together throughout the beat, and turned within a half minute of each other. In the run home Dahinda forged steadily ahead, while Phryne outfooted the other two steadily.

Dahinda crossed the line first in 1:03:36, with Phryne twelve seconds behind her. The Atair's time was 1:04:20 and Alira's 1:04:23.

Mrs. W. Butler Duncan, Jr., sailed on the winner with her husband.

There were two prizes offered by Commodore Clarkson Cowl. The race was limited to boats owned by members of the Manhassett Bay Yacht Club. The Hanan brothers' boat was, therefore, not allowed to start. Ex-Congressman Mitchell's boat was expected to enter, but failed to appear.

KRAMER WAS DISQUALIFIED.

American Cyclist Finished First in International Race.

LONDON, May 20.—In the international cycling races at the Crystal Palace to-day, F. L. Kramer (American) won the mile (scratch) event, defeating Schilling of Holland, Meyer of Germany, and Friol of France. Time—2 minutes 12 3-5 seconds. Later it was announced that Kramer had been disqualified for boring, and that the race had been awarded to Schilling.

In the quarter-mile race Mayer was first, Kramer was second, and Schilling third. Time—56 3-5 seconds.

Kramer won the half-mile. Schilling was second, and Mayer third. Time—1 minute 2 3-5 seconds.

H. L. DOHERTY COLLAPSES.

British Tennis Champion Seriously Ill from Too Strenuous Play.

Fate appears to be playing unkind tricks with the English lawn tennis experts. Hugh Lawrence Doherty, the doughty little British champion, winner and holder of many titles and generally rated as the foremost amateur with a racquet in the world, is in bad physical trim and the great All-England championships only a month away. The international challenge matches also close at hand. Reginald F. Doherty, the older of the two famous brothers, has not been equal to long and taxing play for the past year. It was because of his condition that Frank L. Riseley was selected to compete on the British defending team in the singles with H. L. Doherty. The woman champion of England has also severely hurt her right arm and may not be in trim to give a good account of her skill to Miss May Sutton, the American woman champion, when she arrives to contest the English title.

The most important feature of this news, the poor condition of H. L. Doherty, was received yesterday in this country through private correspondence.

It is said that both of the Doherty brothers suffer from weakness of the heart and that it was due to this weakness that they took up the playing of lawn tennis as a means of benefiting their physical condition. The injury to H. L. Doherty referred to is said to be a strain of the muscles of his heart, which brought about a complete collapse. This is due to his vigorous tournament work early in the season in the championships of southern France and both in doors and out of doors in England, as he was striving to adequately prepare himself for the hard matches of the International series in defense of the Davis Cup which the brothers won in 1903 on the courts of the Longwood Cricket Club, Boston.

BROOKLYN'S OCEAN RACE.

Eight Yachts Entered for Contest to Hampton Roads.

The projected ocean race of the Brooklyn Yacht Club for the Ocean Challenge Cup will be started from Bay Ridge on Wednesday, June 29, planning to finish in time to admit of the racing boats entering in the regatta of the Hampton Roads Yacht Club, to be held on Independence Day.

Four Brooklyn yachts will start: Frank Maier's 35-foot keel yawl Vanshawe, Blanchard Atkinson's 38-foot centreboard sloop Pocahontas, W. W. Titcomb's 36-foot centreboard sloop Outing, and J. E. and W. D. Haviland's 39-foot centreboard sloop Bonito.

C. L. Johnson of the Chesapeake Bay Club has entered his 35-foot centreboard sloop Anne, L. D. Hutchinson of the New Rochelle Yacht Club, his 38-foot keel sloop Gauntlet, D. R. Floyd of the Newark Bay Yacht Club his 35-foot centreboard sloop Lilia, and F. C. Sullivan of the Harlem Yacht Club his 38-foot keel cutter Mopsa.

New Rochelle's Big Regatta Plans.

As planned by the Regatta Committee of the New Rochelle Yacht Club, the special Spring events to be contested next Saturday should be the most interesting opening of the early yachting season. Besides the usual classes provided there are special class events for the Larchmont, the New York, the Manhasset Bay, the Indian Harbor, and the New Rochelle Yacht Clubs. These should add an unusual interest to an exceptionally high-class programme.

The races will start at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. The New York Yacht Club thirty-foot class will be first away. Sloops, thirty-three and twenty-seven footers, will follow; then raceabouts, then sloops, twenty-two and eighteen footers. The Larchmont twenty-one-footers and the Indian Harbor one-design classes will be next away, and finally the Manhasset and the New Rochelle one-design class. The boats will start in classes at intervals of five minutes after the starting hour over different courses.

Hoppe to Challenge Vignaux.

Willie Hoppe will give his last billiard exhibition before sailing for France to challenge Vignaux for the championship of the world on May 29, 30, and 31 at the Broadway Billiard Academy, Broadway and Sixty-fifth Street. A match is now being arranged and Hoppe's opponent will be selected this week. Hoppe will not play again in New York until after his return from abroad. Hoppe will be eighteen years of age in August and he will then be eligible to challenge Vignaux for the billiard championship.

Champions Defeat Pittsburgs Again in Exciting Game by 5 to 4.

A crowd estimated at 20,000, the largest attendance since the opening day of the season at the Polo Grounds, saw the National League champions administer another defeat to the Pittsburgs yesterday, the score being 5 to 4. It was an intensely interesting affair, and was fairly won by the local men because of strong and timely batting. Their fielding, however, was not up to championship form, the mistakes being responsible for two of the visitors' runs. Wagner's great work at short was the feature of the fielding.

With victory fairly sure when the Pittsburgs went to the bat for the last time, the "rooters" were thrown into the highest pitch of excitement when Wagner, after striking out in the sixth inning, got his base on balls, the only one charged against McGinnity, stole second and scored on Ritchey's safe hit to centre field. In the meantime Clancy's fly was taken by Gilbert. Then Leach batted a high fly to centre field, which bounded away from Donlin, and also from Browne, and Leach landed on third, scoring Ritchey. The run of Leach was needed to tie the game, but Peitz hit an easy ball to McGinnity, catching Leach at the plate. It was then up to Flaherty, who batted for Case, to help Peitz around, but the best the "Pirate" pitcher could do was to put up a high fly, which was caught after a splendid effort.

In addition to his effective pitching, McGinnity excelled his team mates at the bat, making two successive hits for two bases, besides scoring two runs. His best efforts in the box were unquestionably in the sixth inning, when he struck out Wagner and Clancy after pitching but six balls. Lynch was quite wild during his stay of five innings in the box, but Case, who succeeded him, was much more effective.

Considering the rivalry between the two teams, Umpire Johnstone did very well to check the angry feelings of some of the players that were likely to cause much disorder. In the first inning he ordered McGraw to the bench on the complaint of Manager Clarke of the Pittsburgs that he had called Pitcher Lynch a quitter. Then Mathewson was sent from the coaching line, and toward the latter part of the game "Bill" Clark was told to get off the field.

Pittsburg's first run was made by Beaumont on a dropped fly by Donlin, a steal, and a wild throw by Bresnahan, and Howard's two-base hit. Wagner scored in the fourth in a hard hit to Devlin, a steal of second and third, and Bresnahan's low throw to Devlin. Then came the two runs in the ninth inning, which threw quite a scare into the New York camp. McGann's foree hit, a steal, and Bresnahan's double scored New York's first run, and McGinnity's double, Devlin's force hit, and three successive bases on balls gave the champions two runs in the third, and the "Iron Man's" double and McGann's single batted another run in in the fourth. Clancy's error and McGann's double scored Donlin in the ninth.

BROOKLYN, 4; CHICAGO, 3.

The Brooklyns made a lively finish in the game with the Chicagos at Washington Park yesterday, and won by a score of 4 to 3. With the bases filled in the ninth inning and only one man out, Lumley, batting for Jones, hit to the right field fence, scoring two runs, which won the game. Sheckard and Scanlon were put out of the game for questioning the umpire's decisions. The score:

ST. LOUIS, 3; BOSTON, 2.

BOSTON, May 20.—Three consecutive singles in the fourteenth inning to-day gave St. Louis the game by 3 to 2. Both teams fielded finely, despite the error column, Cannell's work in centre field being especially brilliant. Kellum pitched a steady game, not giving a single base on balls, while Boston was unable to hit with effect after the first inning. Score:

Detroit Hit Orth Freely and Won—Conroy and Kleinow Hurt.

Special to The New York Times.

DETROIT, Mich., May 20.—Detroit fell on Pitcher Orth at various stages of today's game and batted out enough runs to win without any great effort. The Greater New Yorks were unable to do anything with Donovan at times when hits would mean runs. Eleven safe ones, for eighteen totals, was the Detroit's record, most of this batting being done by Crawford and Cooley, who got seven safe hits, five of which figured in the scoremaking.

Crawford's home run in the opening inning was good for a pair of tallies, and his two-base hit in the fifth, following a pair of singles and a pass, scored two more. Detroit made one run in the second on two errors by Yeager, the first a fumble of O'Leary's hit and the second a throw to right field on Donovan. Cooley's triple in the seventh, followed by a long fly, scored the sixth tally.

New York made seven clean hits, no less than four of which opened innings, but could do nothing after these safe ones. Twice the visitors got the second man on a base, only to butt into double plays. In the seventh Chase and Yeager hit when one man was out, Fultz and Kleinow and McGuire walked. Orth hit to Schaefer, ending the inning. Conroy and Kleinow were both injured during the sixth inning and were forced to retire, furnishing further hard luck for the visitors. Chase was the star of the game, doing all of the hitting and making a sensational one-handed catch that saved one, and possibly two runs. The score:

CHICAGO, 8; WASHINGTON, 1.

CHICAGO, May 20.—Owen's effective pitching to-day was the principal factor in the opening game of the series between Washington and Chicago, in which the former was defeated by the score of 8 to 1. Wolfe of Washington proved to be easy for the local men, who bunched their hits and clinched the game in the fifth inning. Score:

EASTERN LEAGUE.

Cassidy's Hit for Two Bases Scored Winning Run for Jersey City.

Special to The New York Times.

TORONTO, Ont., May 20.—In a ten-inning game this afternoon Jersey City beat the Toronto team by a score of 6 to 5. The first run was made by McAuley in the fifth inning on Clements's hit. The visitors, through McCann, held the local men down tight until the eighth inning, when they broke loose, and by Clements's error in left field scored three runs one right after the other. They tallied two more runs and the score was a tie. This was broken, however, in the tenth inning by Pete Cassidy's two-bagger, which let Merritt home and won the game. Walter Clarkson, the ex-New York American League club pitcher, will report to the Jersey City Club at Buffalo tomorrow for Monday's game. The score:

ROCHESTER, 9; NEWARK, 1.

Special to The New York Times.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., May 20.—Newark was unable to hit Schultz to-day and was beaten by a score of 9 to 1. The local team was in batting form and knocked Skopec out of the box in the fifth inning and played with McPherson, starting very well. Timely hitting and base running enabled the Rochesters to roll up the score they made and fast fielding shut off Newark's only chances. Score by innings:

YALE EASILY BEATS HARVARD ON TRACK

Wins Eight of Thirteen Events, Mostly Without a Contest.

SCHICK MAKES FAST TIME

Beats Even Figures in Both Sprints—Parsons and Hall Also Show Great Speed.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., May 20.—Yale's track team easily won the dual meet with Harvard to-day. Save in the sprints Yale took every first on the track. Her athletes won all the field events except the shot-put and broad jump. Her second string did not do so well, or the victory would have been a Waterloo.

Yale's easy victory to-day has greatly encouraged her supporters in the belief that she will win the intercollegiate meet next Saturday. A strong wind blew, aiding the sprinters greatly, but handicapping the distance men. In view of this, some of the times were excellent.

Capt. Schick of Harvard, supposed to be in poor health, won both short sprints in record time. His 9 4-5 seconds in the hundred was unhurried, and 21 2-5 seconds in the furlong was also done without being pushed. Dives, Harvard, won the quarter in fair time, after a hard race with Burnap.

The two-mile run, won by Hall of Yale, was remarkable in face of the conditions. The Harvard men, Howard, Stone, and Whitaker, ran strongly throughout till the last lap, when Hall and Howard drew away, the Yale man winning by 25 feet.

In the 880-yard dash Parsons did 1:50 3-5 easily, but Whitman surprised every one by beating Tilson out. Alcott also reversed expectation by beating Hill in the mile. Dick Grant was outclassed.

In all the field events Schoenfus's performance was the high class. Harris surprised every one by beating Shevlin with the hammer, while the broad jump went to Jordan of Harvard. The summary:

100-Yard Dash.—Won by Schick, Harvard; Twichell, Yale, second; Dodge, Harvard, third. Time—0:09 4-5.

220-Yard Dash.—Won by Schick, Harvard; Dodge, Harvard, second; Twichell, Yale, third. Time—0:21 2-5.

440-Yard Dash.—Won by Divea, Harvard; Burnap, Yale, second; Cohalan, Yale, third. Time—0:50 1-5.

880-Yard Dash.—Won by Parsons, Yale; Whitman, Harvard, second; Tilson, Yale, third. Time—1:59 3-5.

One-Mile Run.—Won by Alcott, Yale; Hill, Yale, second; Turner, Harvard, third. Time—4:32 1-5.

Two-Mile Run.—Won by Hall, Yale; Howard, Harvard, second; Stone, Harvard, third. Time—9:59 1-5.

120-Yard Hurdle.—Won by Eales, Yale; Stevenson, Yale, second; Soule, Harvard, third. Time—0:16 1-5.

220-Yard Hurdle.—Won by Porter, Yale; Eales, Yale, second; Rogers, Harvard, third. Time—0:24 3-5.

Running High Jump.—Won by Marshall, Yale, 5 feet 9⅝ inches; Crane, Harvard, and Hasbrouck, Yale, second, tied at 5 feet 8⅝ inches.

Pole Vault.—Won by Dray, Yale, and Hinton, Yale, tied at 11 feet 6 inches; Behr, Yale; Sawyer, Harvard, and O'Brien, Yale, tied at 11 feet.

Hammer Throw.—Won by Harris, Yale, 149 feet 1 inch; Shevlin, Yale, second, 147 feet 6½ inches; Tripp, Yale, third, 124 feet 8 inches.

Shot Put.—Won by Schoenfus, Harvard, 44 feet 7⅜ inches; Whiten, Yale, second, 42 feet 5½ inches; Kinney, Yale, third, 41 feet 11⅜ inches.

Broad Jump.—Won by Jordan, Harvard; Knox, Yale, second; Ford, Harvard, third.

"TIGERS" TAKE TRACK MEET.

Easily Defeat Columbia in the Dual Games at Columbia Oval.

Columbia's track team was swamped yesterday afternoon at Columbia Oval in the dual track meet with Princeton. The Tigers won by 65½ points to 38½. Only four firsts went to the Blue and White, Knakel taking two, Taylor and Muir one each.

The hundred-yard dash was the prettiest race of the day. Knakel and Rulon-Miller raced neck and neck to the finish. From the grand stand it looked like a dead heat, but Knakel got the decision. In the longer dash he romped in first, leading by about three yards. Bull was second, and Rulon-Miller was a bad third. Even time was made in each case.

The defeat of Armstrong, the Tiger crack hurdler, in the low hurdles was the sensation of the day. Muir of Columbia did the trick in 25 1-5 seconds, breasting the tape less than half a foot ahead. The time breaks the Columbia record.

Chapin of Princeton showed up well in the two-mile, winning in 10:02, in spite of the strong wind, and beating Macdonald by about ten yards. Symonds jumped 23 feet ⅝ inch in the broad jump.

Tanner of Princeton injured a tendon in his leg quite severely as he was falling after clearing the bar at 11 feet in the pole vault. He was carried from the field. Summary:

One-mile Run.—Won by Williams, Princeton; Fulton, Columbia, second; Lingle, Princeton, third. Time—4:37.

440-yard Run.—Won by Attice, Princeton; Macdonald, Columbia, second; Runyan, Princeton, third. Time—0:52.

220-yard Hurdles.—Won by Armstrong, Princeton; Muir, Columbia, second; Pfeiffer, Princeton, third. Time—0:26 3-5.

[illegible] Run.—Won by Knakel, Columbia; [illegible], Princeton, second; Bull, Columbia, third. Time—0:10 1-5.

[illegible] Run.—Won by Chapin, Princeton; Macdonald, Columbia, second; Wheeler, Columbia, third. Time—10:02.

880-yard Run.—Won by Taylor, Columbia; Williams, Princeton, second; Hetherington, Columbia, third. Time—2:02 2-5.

220-yard Hurdle.—Won by Muir, Columbia; Armstrong, Princeton, second; Mulle, Princeton, third. Time—0:25 1-5.

220-yard Dash.—Won by Knakel, Columbia; Bull, Columbia, second; Rulon-Miller, Princeton, third. Time—0:22.

Shot Put.—Won by McCormick, Princeton, 38 feet 11 inches; Tittman Princeton, 36 feet 7½ inches, second; Daub, Princeton, 34 feet 3 inches, third.

Pole Vault.—Won by Tenney and Lambert, Princeton, tied at 11 feet; Williams, Columbia, and Goodrich, Princeton, third, tied at 10 feet 6 inches.

High Jump.—Won by Tooker, Princeton, 5 feet 8 inches; Ware, Columbia, 5 feet 7 inches, second; Symonds, 5 feet 6 inches, third.

Hammer Throw.—Won by Scott, Princeton, 122 feet; McCormick, Princeton, 112 feet 11 inches, second; Naething, Columbia, 108 feet 4 inches, third.

Broad Jump.—Won by Symonds, Princeton, 23 feet ¾ inch; Kehrlein, Columbia, 21 feet 11 inches, second; Grimes, Princeton, 21 feet, third.

"Poly," 1906, Won Class Games.

YALE FAVORITE FOR TRACK CHAMPIONSHIP

Blue Should Win This Week Barring Unforeseen Upsets.

PENN HAS OUTSIDE CHANCE

If Quakers Can Win the Sprints They May Beat Old Eli—Cornell Is Strong.

Careful consideration of the showing of the various men entered in the intercollegiate championships to be held in Philadelphia next Friday and Saturday, together with a knowledge of their present condition, their possibilities, and their competitive ability, shows the outlook for the championship going again to Yale. Pennsylvania and Cornell have good teams, and will dispute the Blue's supremacy to the last event. The games are sure to be very close, with the standard of performances very high in a few events and below the average in most of the others. The absence of Harvard from public competition and the poor condition of the Princeton team makes the field more open than it usually is. Thirty-five points would easily win the event.

There are three strictly first-class sprinters entered in the hundred. There has been some question about Schick's (Harvard) condition, while it is known that Rulon-Miller (Princeton) has not been right this year. Dear of Pensylvania is in splendid form. Logically no winner can be considered but Schick, though there is a chance of Dear's beating him out.

So in the 220-yard dash Schick ought to win. Hyman of Pennsylvania is the only man able to worry him in form. Dear of Pennsylvania is strong enough for third among the known quantities. Between Twitchell, Yale; Dodge, Harvard; Miller, Princeton, and Castleman, Colgate, seems to lie fourth place.

In the quarter-mile Hyman, Pennsylvania; Atlee, Princeton, and Dives, Harvard, are by far the best of the lot. In that order would be the natural choice.

The half mile should be a jaunt for Parsons of Yale. There is a fair chance of Moore and Tilson taking second and third for Yale. Townsend, Cornell; Taylor, Columbia; Whitman, Harvard, and Williams, Princeton, are the men they must beat.

The mile ought to be easy for Munson of Cornell. He can do better than 4:20. Hill and Alcott of Yale are both better than 4:26, and ought to be second and third, though with Williams of Princeton in form, he might beat out either.

The two-mile is peculiarly open. The three Cornell men, Willgoose, Hemmingway, and Magoffin, are very fast. Hall of Yale and King of Harvard are the only men likely to class with them. In form Magoffin ought to win.

The hurdle looks surest of any event for Amsler, Pennsylvania. Ashburner, Cornell, second, with Vonnegut, Cornell, third.

Behind Amsler in the low hurdle Castleman of Colgate looks good. Porter, Yale; Turner, Cornell; Rogers, Harvard; Cates, Yale; Armstrong, Princeton, and Robinson, Syracuse, are fast in the second flight.

In the field events the men are easier of classification. Symonds, Princeton, looks an easy winner in the broad. Mosher, Cornell; Hubbard, Amherst, and Tippett, City College, would seem a good selection for the other places.

Moffett, Pennsylvania, looks sure of the high jump. He did 6 feet 1 inch in competition last week, and is improving. Marshall, Yale, is equal to about 6 feet; Porter, Cornell; MacDonald, Pennsylvania, and Hasbrouck, Yale, ought to divide third and fourth points at 55 feet 11 inches.

McLanahan, Yale, is the best of the pole vaulters, but may not do 11 feet under present conditions. He is quite badly hurt and handicapped. Jackson, Cornell, looks most likely to win. Dray, Yale; Phillips, Cornell, and Behr, Yale, ought to be placed in that order on past performances.

So, too, Shevlin looks best in the hammer throw, but Van Duyn, Syracuse, may beat him out, because the Yale man has not yet done his best. Harris, Yale, ought to get third.

The shot should go to Schoenfus, Harvard, on natural ability. How his baseball and lack of practice will affect him is to be determined. Porter, Cornell, with Schoenfus in poor form, would win, with Boyd, Pennsylvania, second, and Kinney, Yale, fourth, ahead of Rollins of Amherst.

So figured, Yale would have a small margin of five points to land her first, with Cornell and Pennsylvania very close for second. Should Schick be beaten by Dear, Penn has an outside chance to finish ahead of Yale. This could only happen with events breaking at their worst for the Blue and just to suit the Quakers.

It looks like Yale, Pennsylvania, Cornell, Harvard, Princeton, with a dozen scattered points.

Yale Downs Princeton at Tennis.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., May 20.—By winning the sets in doubles 2 to 1, Yale carried off the honors in the annual dual tennis match with Princeton on the courts of the New Haven Lawn Tennis Club to-day, the total score for singles and doubles being Yale 5, Princeton 4. The result in singles was a tie. The feature of the play in singles was the rally of Weil of Yale, who, after losing a love set to Richardson of Princeton, captured the next two sets and prevented a defeat in singles for his university. The summary:

Singles—K. H. Behr, Yale, beat H. T. Randall, Princeton, 6—2, 6—3. M. Thompson, Princeton, beat S. G. Bodman, Yale, 6—2, 6—3, 6—3. E. Sunstein, Princeton, beat W. K. Van Reypen, Yale, 5—7, 6—3, 6—1. S. Porter, Yale, beat P. Norton, Princeton, 6—1, 4—6, 6—4. H. S. Weil, Yale, beat L. K. Richardson, Princeton, 0—6, 8—7, 8—6. F. F. Appel, Princeton, beat S. Field, jr., Yale, 6—2, 6—4.

Doubles—Behr and Bodman, Yale, defeated Randall and Sunstein, Princeton, 3—6, 7—5, 6—4. Field and Weil, Yale, defeated Norton and Appel, Princeton, 6—4, 6—1. [illegible] and Richardson, Princeton, defeated [illegible] and Jones, 6—4, 6—4.

PENN CRICKETERS WON.

Collegians Beat Staten Island in Splendid Game—Prospect Park Play.

Credited with a victory over Harvard on Friday in the championship series of the Intercollegiate Cricket Association, the eleven of the University of Pennsylvania felt confident of victory in its game with Staten Island, which was played at Livingston yesterday. The collegians won, too, what was in many respects a remarkable game, by 51 runs. The bowling of A. N. Goodfellow for Pennsylvania was the feature of the match, for he captured eight wickets, seven of them clean bowled, for 32 runs. A. G. Laurie did fine work with the ball for Staten Island and had a record of five wickets for 30 runs, including the accomplishment of "the hat trick" by bowling in consecutive balls Goodfellow, Lee, and Graham of the opposing team. The score was 145 for Pennsylvania and 94 for Staten Island.

A number of excellent cricket contests were played at Prospect Park. The Brooklyn Nomads gained an easy victory over Kings County by 52 runs, but Kings County St. George turned the tables by defeating the Brooklyn Zingari by 15 runs. In the Nomad's game, J. H. Tattersall batted and bowled well. He took 6 wickets for 18 runs and scored 26. A. C. Tyrrill also did splendid work and obtained top score with an innnigs of 28, not out. The totals were: Kings County, 58; Brooklyn Nomads, 110.

A surprise resulted in the meeting of Manhattan and O. N. T. in the series of the New York Cricket Association at Prospect Park. After disposing of their opponents for a total of 35, O. N. T. won by an even hundred runs.

The Kings County St. George eleven played a close game with the Brooklyn Zingari and won by 15 runs. The totals were: Brooklyn Zingari, 59; Kings County St. George, 74. The West Indian Wanderers met defeat at the hands of the West Indians at Prospect Park by a score of 82 to 54.

CRESCENTS WIN AT LACROSSE

Seneca Indians Beaten at the Bay Ridge Grounds by 9 to 2.

The Seneca Indian lacrosse team was beaten at its own game at Bay Ridge yesterday, when the Crescent Athletic Club secured a hollow victory by the score of 9 to 2. The visitors from the New York State Reservation were completely outplayed in every department of the game. They were somewhat handicapped by their weight and they lacked the staying qualities of the Crescent athletes. The game drew a big crowd and the work of the Crescent players showed superior team work.

Soon after the game began O'Flynn, for the Crescents, threw the first goal. This lead was never overcome, although the visiting Indians played a good game during the first half, which ended with the score of 5 to 2 in favor of the Crescents. John and Jamison were the only Indians able to tally, while O'Flynn, Raymond, Liffiton, Sheriff, and O'Rourke scored for the home team.

The Indians did not have a chance in the second half. O'Flynn was again seen to advantage and quickly added two goals, to which Raymond and Wall contributed two more. In the second half the speed of the Crescents was especially noticeable and the players repeatedly overtook the Indians and secured the ball. The home team closed the game with several brilliant plays.

De Oro Defeats Keogh at Pool.

BUFFALO, N. Y., May 20.—Alfred De Oro defeated Jerome Keogh for the pool championship to-night, the total score of the three nights' play being 600 to 568.

Local Men Buy Well-Known Boats.

George J. Smith's steam yacht Laurita has been sold through Henry J. Gielow to George Rose, and is being prepared at Morris Heights to go into commission this week. She is a Herreshoff design and build, and was originally called Augusta. Later she was known as Tolnette. Her over-all dimension is 131 feet, her length of water line 110 feet, her beam 18 feet, and her draught 7 feet. She is equipped with a triple expansion engine and two water tube boilers, and has an excellent speed record.

F. H. Stillman's auxiliary sloop Sculpin has been purchased by J. W. Wilson of this city through Macconnell & Cook. She is a forty-footer, and fitted with a ten horse power engine.

Richard H. Stearns of the Larchmont Yacht Club has sold the gasoline yacht Queen Bess to D. A. Dodge and E. A. Corley of the Columbia Yacht Club. The boat has won numerous prizes and pennants under Mr. Stearns's handling, and will appear as frequently flying the Columbia burgee. She is a perfectly equipped little craft, embodying every modern feature. Her measurement on the water line is 62 feet, and her motive power is furnished by Standard motors.

H. S. A. Stewart of Pittsburg has chartered the auxiliary yawl Hussar II. to Commodore E. T. Affiock of the Toledo Yacht Club, to be used in extensive cruising through the great lakes. She is a seventy-footer, and fitted throughout with every modern appliance.

The hunting cabin type cruiser Edmee, building for R. J. Schaeffer by the Seabury Company at Morris Heights, is nearly ready for her trial trips. She is a handsome model, and splendidly equipped, and will admirably suit the purpose for which she was designed. Her keel and frame are of oak, with cedar planking, while her cabin is a turtle back, well built and commodious. The owner's quarters forward consist of a double stateroom, with main saloon aft, with convertible berths, accommodating five. The crew quarters and cockpit are roomy. Her dimensions are 60 feet over all, 53 feet on the water line, 10 feet 6 inches beam, and 3 feet 6 inches draught. She carries a single military mast forward.

Yachts and Yachtsmen.

The Spring Cup regatta of the New York Yacht Club is announced for Decoration Day. It will be open to all regular and special classes, and will be contested off Station 10 at Glen Cove.

The steam boat service to the Atlantic Yacht Club quarters at Sea Gate will start regular boats beginning May 30.

In the motor boat carnival on the Hudson on Sept. 4, 6, and 8 it is proposed to introduce classes for pleasure and business types as well as the strictly speed class. The races will be contested over a triangular course and entries will be received from any recognised yacht or motor boat club member.

Vice Commodore E. M. Gill has offered a special prize for the New York Yacht Club's 30-foot class, to be decided at the special race in conjunction with the New Rochelle Yacht Club regatta next Saturday.

Boats about to go into commission this week from the Morris Heights basin include Alfred G. Vanderbilt's Adroit, George J. Smith's Laurita, Alfred Costello's Jule, Clifford Brokaw's Nanita, E. F. Goithra's Illini, Christian M. Meyer's Masneth, Gen. J. A. Johnson's Winona, J. H. Hanan's Edithe, and Commodore Frederick G. Bourne's Arimeid.

The Canada Cup boat, designed by Crownin-shield and built at Boston, has been completed and shipped to Rochester, where she will be prepared for her tuning-up trials preparatory to the cup races.

H. C. Baxter's new 33-foot auto boat, to be carried on the davits of his steam yacht Kanawha I., has been completed and shipped to Portland, Me. The Kaiewha I. was formerly used as a dispatch boat by Gen. Leonard Wood during the Cuban war, and was originally built for the late John F. Duncan by the Seabury Company.

G. P. Hilton has chartered Barclay Ward's sloop India, and is expecting to put her into commission on Saturday next.

INFERNO WAS FIRST FOR THE KING'S PLATE

Seagram's Colt Romps Home in Canada's Classic Race.

SMALLEST FIELD FOR YEARS

Winner Equaled Stake's Record at the Opening Day of Ontario Jockey Club's Meeting.

Special to The New York Times.

TORONTO, Ontario, May 20.—The race for the King's Plate on the opening day of the Ontario Jockey Club's meeting must go down in history as the easiest victory and smallest field for many years. It was a veritable romp for Inferno of the J. B. Seagram Stable, and at that the marvelous colt just equaled Sapper's record, and it was only a breeze. Half Seas Over, which had made pace for his stable companion, finished behind Dyment's Will King, with Maid of Barrie next. The time was 2:12 for the mile and a quarter. The stakes were worth 50 guineas, given by the King, and $2,250, given by the Ontario Jockey Club.

Half Seas Over had first call and started off in the lead. He relinquished the advantage on the back stretch, and then Inferno, urged by Phillips, started to open a gap. Maid of Barrie was the closest attendant the first part of the journey. Will King closed up after rounding the top turn, where Burns shook him up. He showed more gameness than speed, and both rider and horse kept at it. But nothing could touch Inferno, and he won as he liked.

TO BATTERY BY JULY 1.

Three New Downtown Stations Will Then Be Opened.

Subway trains will be running to the Battery by July 1, when the lower Broadway section of the tunnel will be opened and three big new stations added to those already in use.

The new stations will be at Rector Street, Bowling Green, and South Ferry. Of these the South Ferry station will be the largest, though the Rector Street Station will be of ample dimensions and its platforms will nearly equal in length those of the terminal.

A couple of weeks after the opening of the lower Broadway section officials of the Interborough Rapid Transit Company expect that the station at One Hundred and Sixty-seventh Street and Broadway, as well as the tunnel under the Harlem River, will be completed, thus giving unbroken communication between the Battery and the Bronx on the Lenox Avenue branch of the Subway and with Washington Heights on the Broadway branch.

Schedules are now being prepared for through operation from the present northern terminals to the Battery. When the lower Broadway section is opened the express trains now running to Fulton Street will run through to South Ferry, while additional expresses will be put on for service to and from Brooklyn Bridge during rush hours. Local trains in day hours will run to the City Hall terminal, as at present. Between midnight and early morning the locals will run alternately to City Hall and South Ferry.

FIGHT ON MAYOR FAGAN.

Dickinson Trying to Prevent His Renomination in Jersey City.

Jersey City politicians have been startled by the announcement of Col. Samuel D. Dickinson, the Republican leader in Hudson County and Secretary of State, that he will actively oppose the movement for the nomination of Mayor Fagan for a third term. It had been assumed that the Mayor's way to a new term in the office was open. Col. Dickinson and he differed, however, on the Mayor's policy in attacking the trolley and railroad companies, and the difference has been embittered by the refusal of the Mayor to bend to the Colonel's wishes in the filling of local offices. The Secretary of State believes that the Mayor is building up an opposing officialism in the city that will wrest his local leadership from him.

Col. Dickinson is the chief factor in the County and City Committees. Many of the committeemen think, however, that Mayor Fagan's renomination is necessary if the Republicans are to remain in control of the city and its departments, and the Colonel may have some difficulty in arraying them in opposition to the Mayor.

The first break in his ranks occurred yesterday, however, when Edward W. Fry, the Chairman of both committees, and Col. Dickinson's life-long friend, came to the parting of the ways. Mr. Fry holds the City Collectorship, worth $8,000 per year, by the Mayor's appointment, and he has publicly declared his determination to support the Mayor for renomination.

The Colonel's candidate for the Mayoralty is said to be George M. McCarthy, who ran for State Senator on the Republican ticket last Fall.

THE BELGIAN PIPE

Belgium borrows nothing in Automobile Construction.
The Belgian Pipe gives points to other cars.

BELGIAN PIPE Automobiles, named from a style of carburettor, are actually the cars of least expense, both in the purchase price and in the maintenance, of any imported car made.

Built like the other best foreign cars, the Pipe, made in Belgium, is not as expensive to buy or to retain.

It is famous for possessing a powerful, simple engine with few parts. The intake and exhaust valves are on one side. All valves are interchangeable because of the same size.

The Pipe cars are famous throughout Europe for simplicity and strength.

More styles and designs, more exclusiveness and charm in appearance are offered in the types of these Belgian cars than in other imported cars.

The range of prices and horse power are especially interesting, as they offer every possible choice at a saving.

Eight new Pipe cars will arrive next week, including 12—28—40 horse power.

HAD THE SUBWAY VOICE.

Prisoner Who Startled Magistrate with Loud Tone Is Discharged.

James Reilly, who declined to inform the police where he lived, was arraigned before Magistrate Moss, in the Jefferson Market Court yesterday, having been arrested in Fourteenth Street, near Fourth Avenue. The policeman said he was intoxicated. When arraigned, Reilly started to explain:

"Judge!"

This one word was spoken so loudly that the Magistrate sat up straight and asked:

"Why do you talk so loudly? I can hear you if you speak softly."

"He's troubled with the Subway voice," said Policeman Foley.

"In that case I shall discharge him," Magistrate Moss replied.

GIRL BLINDED, FOUGHT THIEF.

Held Up Coming from Bank, but Saved the Money Satchel.

Johanna Preuss, the fifteen-year-old daughter of a wealthy manufacturing tailor at 380 South Fifth Street, Williamsburg, was held up yesterday afternoon. After throwing sand into her eyes the thief who attacked her tried to rob her of a small handbag containing $750. The thief told the police he was David Borowisky of 357 Bushwick Avenue, Williamsburg. He is only seventeen.

Miss Preuss's father sends her to the North Side Bank, at Kent Avenue and Grand Street, every Saturday morning to draw the money with which to pay off his employes. She reached the bank just before noon yesterday, and after receiving $750, put the money into a small satchel, which she hung from her right arm. Then she set out for her father's factory.

On reaching the Central Baptist Church, at South Fifth Street and Marcy Avenue, she heard footsteps behind her. As she turned around a young man threw two handfuls of fine red sand into her eyes. Then he snatched the money satchel. The girl clung to it and screamed for help. The fellow seized her by the throat and began to choke her with one hand, while with the other he pulled at the bag. He succeeded in breaking the chain by which she held it, and made off. The girl, though still blinded by the sand, tried to follow.

It happened that a car of the Canarsie line came along South Fifth Street just then. Some of the passengers started in pursuit of the thief. He ran along Marcy Avenue in the direction of Grand Street. Police Captain Gallagher of the Bedford Avenue Station was a block away and saw the crowd running. He joined the chase.

Up came Policeman Cummings from the opposite direction. As he tried to head off the fugitive the latter turned into South Second Street, and there he was caught. He had thrown away the bag and money, but they were recovered. Miss Preuss was carried into a doctor's office, where she received medical treatment. After identifying her assailant she was taken home. The prisoner was taken to the Bedford Avenue Police Station, where he told who he was, but refused to answer questions. He was held on charges of assault and robbery.

SHAM POLICE INSPECTOR WANTED TO FIX THINGS

Would Restore Retired Captains for $200, Sergeants $100.

GOT HEADQUARTER'S 'PHONE.

And Posed as Donald Grant—Good Joke, He Said, as Police Caught Him Talking in Hotel.

A man who said he was Joe Smith of 290 Degraw Street, Brooklyn, was locked up at the Old Slip Station last night on a charge of disorderly conduct. The police say that the man went into Peter Hartmann's hotel, at 88 Whitehall Street, last night and called Police Headquarters on the telephone. There are two telephones in the hotel, one in the bar room, and one in the dining room, where Mrs. Hartmann acted as cashier. The conversation over the telephone, the police say, was something like this:

"Hello—is this Police Headquarters?"

"Yes."

"This is Grant. Who's this?"

"Operator at headquarters."

"This is Grant, I say. I want to square that matter of the Captains and Sergeants who were dropped. I want to know who I'm talking to."

"This is G. P."

"Who?"

"Peterson."

"Oh, yes. Well, you know I want to square a matter with you fellows. Tell the Captains it will cost them $200 and the Sergeants $100. Tell them to see me and lay low for another few hours. What's that? Why in h— do you keep butting in while I'm talking? I've told you three times this is Inspector Grant on the wire. You—"

Mr. Hartmann heard what was said, as did others in the place. The police said that from the back the man looked like Inspector Grant, and as Hartmann could not see the man's face he supposed it was, in fact, the Inspector.

Things were getting pretty busy at Police Headquarters all this time. The operator switched several assistants in on the wire, so they could overhear what was being said. Then one of the operators called the Hartmann Hotel on the telephone in the dining room, and when Headquarters talked with Mr. Hartmann it was discovered that the man on the other telephone was not Inspector Grant. Police Headquarters called the Old Slip Station quickly, and by the time the man had talked half an hour with Police Headquarters Policeman O'Leary walked into the hotel. When the stranger saw the uniformed man he assumed a haughty air and asked:

"Officer, what are you doing in here?"

"I'm looking for you."

"Why, I'm Inspector Grant. What can you want with me?"

"I am going to place you under arrest. I don't care who you say you are."

"It's a joke—all a joke, Sergeant," said the man when taken before Sergt. Savage. "Good joke—fine joke, you know."

The man was well dressed, carried a costly gold watch, wore several diamond rings, a diamond shirt stud, and had $80 in his pockets. While the policemen were taking the prisoner to the station house Inspector Grant was called on the telephone at his station on Staten Island. He said he would appear in court against the man.

BADGES FREE TO CHILDREN.

A. D. Matthews' Sons Honor Memory of Aziel D. Matthews.

As a souvenir of Anniversary Day, and in memory of Aziel D. Matthews, who was one of the organizers of the Brooklyn Sunday School Union, the firm of A. D. Matthews's Sons of that borough will present to every child desiring to take part in the children's parade and exercises on June 8 an Anniversary Day badge free.

The badge, which is made in the form of a pin from a special design, represents an open Bible, bearing across its face the inscription, "God is love," from the first book of St. John, fourth chapter, eighth verse. The firm has ordered 100,000 of the badges from the manufacturer, and already thousands of requests for them have been made. To avoid confusion, the badges will be distributed to the children only through the Sunday school teachers. Speaking of the idea yesterday, Gardiner D. Matthews of the firm said:

"Every child accepting one of these badges shows plainly a disposition to march under one banner on that day and that banner is, "God is love." It is gratifying to know that the requests for the badges are coming from all denominations. Anniversary Day will be a great day for the children, and for Brooklyn, and I would suggest to the Mayor that he be in Prospect Park on that day to give the little ones a chance to see and cheer him."

POLITE YOUTH BROKE ARM.

Fell While Pursuing a Young Woman's Lace Handkerchief.

While attempting an act of gallantry yesterday afternoon in East New York John Smithers, aged nineteen years, of Schenck and Sutter Avenues, fell and broke his right arm. It was a windy day and a sudden gust whisked a handkerchief from the hand of a young woman in Hendrix Street, near Belmont Avenue. Smithers dashed after the bit of lace. He stumbled and his right arm snapped under him. Somebody else recovered the handkerchief for the girl.

While awaiting the arrival of an ambulance from the Bradford Street Hospital the young woman and passersby did what they could for Smithers. After being treated by Dr. Linder he was taken home. The name of the young woman was not learned.

Machen Up for Second Trial.

WASHINGTON, May 20.—August W. Machen, formerly Superintendent of Free Delivery in the Post Office Department, has arrived in Washington in the custody of officers from the penitentiary at Moundsville, West Va., to be present at his second trial, to begin next Monday. The indictment charges Machen with conspiracy to defraud the Government in connection with George E. Lorenz and William G. Crawford in the purchase of carriers' satchels. Judge Wright to-day granted Crawford's motion for severance of his case from that of Lorenz, but refused to grant severance from Machen.

To Inspect Erie's New Postal Car.

A party of railroad officials has been invited to inspect the steel postal car recently constructed for the Erie Railway Company, under plans approved by the Government. The party will visit the car in the yards of the Erie Railroad Company, in Jersey City, to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock. Superintendent Bradley of the Railway Mail Service, in connection with other Post Office officials, has taken great interest in the car, which is an experiment. It is [illegible]

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION

Last week's business carried the market to the lowest point reached since the recovery from the decline, which was thought severe when it occurred, in the middle of last December. Prices fell then six points in nine days, but they recovered twenty points in four months without a single reaction worth mentioning. In the latter half of April there was a fall worse than last December's, from which there was a trifling rally, and now we are at the bottom again. Meanwhile nothing has occurred to mar a picture of present prosperity almost defying improvement, even if license were given to fill in the details at will, limited only by the possibilities imposed by reason and experience. This week we have had the foreign trade report for April. It is a new high record at a total of $225,000,000 for the aggregate of exports and imports, $197,000,000 being the previous maximum. The exports are the April maximum at $120,358,229, but the imports were below April, 1897. Domestic conditions are best indicated by the bank clearings, with an increase of 33 per cent. for the week, and the railway traffic reports. For March the net increased 16 per cent., against an increase for nine months of 7 per cent. In dollars not increased in March $5,223,825, against an increase for 1905 to date of $4,154,299. The later business is the better, as appears perhaps more clearly from the following figures:

It is useless to pile up statistics. They have long lost savor and interest through the monotony of their excellence, and the market is thinking of something else. Traders are not thinking of how good present conditions are, but of how bad they may become. The outlook is unsatisfactory at home and abroad. The Oriental war is hardly worse than the war at home between our own statesmen engaged in strife as to who, and in what way, shall do more damage to the country's fair prospects. The crops are sure to fail, and the iron trade will shrink from the maximum production and consumption to the mere pittance of 1903.

It is pleasant to be able to believe that the facts regarding the present ought to control the fancies about the future. It is all but universally assumed that the Oriental struggle must have some awful crisis for others than the combatants. It is impossible to either magnify or minimize the present horrors or future burdens of what may prove to be the last great war, so severe is its shock to the world's sensibilities, but its end may have as agreeable surprises for other nations as its beginning. Nobody would have credited a prediction that the world at large would have been disturbed by such hostilities so little thus far in any way except sympathetically. It is no wilder to hazard a guess or even hope that peace may be made in a manner to minimize the after effects of the war, and not impossibly through the good offices of the United States. The Czar's Ambassador is to sail for the United States shortly. It is not improbable that he may bring as an addition to his credentials the Autocrat's autograph answer to our President's autograph letter, through the hand of Ambassador Meyer, expressing strong hopes for peace. It would be in every way in keeping with Baron Rosen's known personal views—which no doubt inspired those selecting him for his mission—and would be a fit consummation of the remarkable diplomatic journeyings which, according to every official suggestion, have no significance whatever.

It is doubtful whether anything useful can be said regarding the crops. They must be allowed to grow. They can be harvested but once, but they can be ruined every week. Wheat is said to need warm weather. It is violating no confidence and assuming no great risk to predict that it will have it. The years when June and July are not warm enough to ripen wheat are as rare as two small crops together. Meanwhile the crop is having the exact weather prescribed for it when it went into Winter quarters with short roots through a dry Fall. Had the Spring season been other than moist, the crop would not have reached a condition permitting considerable deterioration without a short yield. Corn must be allowed to sprout before it is murdered in its earthy bed. Late and wet Springs are not helpful to drought canards, but they give a fine chance to discoverers of early frosts. They are a subject which will keep for a while. The cotton prospect is discussed elsewhere. Those who have ruined the crops at the same blow destroyed the iron trade, and that is a subject worth fuller discussion.

When the iron and steel stocks were owned by men like Mr. Carnegie the trade went through its seasonal and cyclic swings without any more anxiety to them than to a wise mother who knows that a teething infant's wails do not signify dissolution. Now that the securities are distributed among miscellaneous holders the tape is watched instead of the iron market. The result is that some good judges of both the iron and stock markets are misled through looking at one when they should look at the other. Instead of looking at conditions to discover what the iron market is, and instead of looking at the iron market as reflecting conditions, they look at the price of possible regarding the iron trade. It is not meant that the price of iron cannot be manipulated—it can be, and is, and that is one of the strong points in the situation. What is meant is that there can be no deception regarding the production and consumption of iron at an unprecedented rate. Twenty-four million tons of iron cannot be made without an enormous disbursement of money for wages, materials, and transportation. But this is insignificant compared with the disbursements involved in the consumption of the same amount. These things cannot be manipulated. They are watched so closely that an accumulation of even 17,392 tons in a month is detected promptly, and discussed with a seriousness worthy of the subject, but with an alarm as disproportionate as the relation of 17,592 tons to 2,000,000. It signifies simply nothing unless it is a symptom of disease, and whether or not it is so must be learned by looking at conditions, not at the price of Steel shares. Between two days they may pass from an overbought to an oversold condition. Every inference from to-day's price may be wiped out by to-morrow's, and both may be wrong. The iron trade itself is proverbially subject to quick reverses, but it does not change like that from reasons within itself. Prosperity within the iron trade is the product and expression of prosperity outside the iron trade, and not the cause of that prosperity. When railways are prosperous they order bridges, rails, cars—they are not prosperous because they are double-tracking, or realigning, or leveling. Men build personal and commercial palaces because they have done and are doing well, and expect to do better. The expenditure is a proof of prosperity and optimism, and not the cause of it, except in a secondary and reflex manner. Similarly, the refusal to consume iron is only secondarily a cause of contraction. When iron is not wanted it is a proof that already incomes have shrunk, and outgo must be checked. There are no proofs that this is the significance to be placed upon the trifling accumulation of raw iron, and there are many proofs to the contrary. A fact unpublished but true is that the leading interest's daily receipts of new orders to be entered, additional to its reported accumulation of orders, are entirely satisfactory, and in ludicrous contrast with the course of its stock.

If it is a fair claim that the iron trade should be managed without regard to the ticker, it will be admitted that the Government of the United States should be administered without regard to Wall Street quotations. Nothing was more contemptible than the criticism of President Cleveland, reproaching him for the spasm at the time of his Venezuela message. When President Roosevelt sent his message regarding railway rates there were those who esteemed it worse than the Venezuela message, and without its excuse in necessity. Now comes this Panama purchase issue, raising the tariff bogy in its most contentious and irritating form. That it chills Wall Street is no reason why it should not be done, but is a fair reason why it should have been done without unnecessary bungling. "If 'twere done at all, 'twere well done quickly," is thrice true of tariff reform. To raise the issue when Congress is not in session, prolonging the agony to that extent, and raising a banner once before deserted and now again lowered after raising it anew—this gives Wall Street a grievance as well as a chill. Cowboy etiquette is not to draw a gun unless it is used. This topic resembles the bombs which the Russian revolutionaries put into a safe deposit vault in St. Petersburg. This bomb was taken out of safe deposit gleefully, and was not handled with sufficient caution. Still, a bomb is incongruous in a safe deposit vault, and those who realized that this one lay slumbering under the political rubbish heap would not regret its disinterment if good results followed. But to have the tariff dragged across the railway rate scent, and then to have the process reversed, with no result in either case, is to give offense. There are those who expect scandals and recriminations, and no legislation to recompense the pains taken. However this may be, the subject ranks among the leading causes of the unsettlement of confidence.

EDWARD A. BRADFORD.

LARGE CHANGES ON SMALL TRANSACTIONS.

Last week's transactions in the stock market included a number of issues which showed changes of a good many points on a single sale. This happened most frequently with issues which had not been traded in for a considerable time, and in the cases of which, therefore, comparisons were made with prices recorded some time back. Among the number was Kingston and Pembroke, which sold at 6, a decline of 6 points from the previous sale, made several years ago. Among the other stocks that showed large net changes, not all of them declines, on transactions in only 100 shares each were: Ann Arbor down 5¼, Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Omaha down 5½, Fort Worth and Denver City up 5½, Michigan Central up 12, Panhandle common down 4, and St. Joseph and Grand Island first preferred down 7.

JAPANESE BOND PRICES.

The Japanese 4½ per cent. certificates, which came on the Street around 87¾, are selling about 1¼ points below the issue price, including the interest since the flotation. The heaviness in this issue has been a great disappointment to the junior underwriters. The two issues of 6s behaved so splendidly that high hopes centred on this issue also. By way of comfort, it may be pointed out that the great advances in the 6s were based upon the glorious campaigns of Togo, Oyama, and Kuroki by sea and land. Since the cessation of the 6½ there have been no

Extravagant Predictions as to Effect on Business May Not Be Realized —Text of the New Law.

Extravagant predictions in regard to the effect upon the business of the New York Stock Exchange of the passage of the law imposing a tax upon the transfer of stocks made at the time the bill was under discussion seem likely to fail of realization unless steps to avoid the payment of the tax are taken by others than those who have already begun a movement in this direction. The most noticeable fact in connection with the recent announcements of intended removals to New Jersey is that such announcements for the most part have concerned establishments either little known or too well known. Certainly the Stock Exchange will not move, nor will it languish under the imposition of a tax of $2 on the transfer of every hundred shares. Not that the tax is regarded with equanimity, for probably no recent legislative proposal affecting the interests of Wall Street met with such general condemnation as the transfer tax, but for all that the chance to do business at a substantial profit will not be foregone merely because the chance to do business at a slightly larger profit is taken away. The investor, it has been said all along, can well afford to pay the extra $2 a hundred shares, but it is the trader that will find his occupation gone. He certainly did not find it gone during the period of the Spanish war tax, and, despite the differences between that and the present case, he will doubtless continue to flourish and make the market for the actual buyers and sellers with incidental profit to himself.

If none but the bucket shops cross the river New York might yet find the transfer tax a cheap way of disposing of a troublesome element in the financial community, but bucket shops, too, may be expected to remain in the city, if in the past they have found profit here, and so not even this result will be attained by the tax. There can be little else said in its favor, and if it fails to accomplish this unsought object the quicker the law is repealed the better for the esteem in which Wall Street and the city at large hold the lawmakers of the State. The course that practically all stock brokerage interests may be expected to follow in the matter of the transfer tax will not be its avoidance, but rather its overthrow, either through the courts or by repeal. Already many doubts have been expressed as to the effectiveness of the law, and in due course the matter is likely to come before the courts for their decision. If class legislation can be overthrown in the courts, many confidently expect this law to be declared unconstitutional, for it is, in the opinion of many, class legislation of the most pronounced type in effect if not in name.

Thus far the Stock Exchange has taken no official action in regard to the policy to be pursued in the matter of the transfer tax. Its general position as expressed by one of its officers is to obey the law strictly so long as it is a law, with the hope that it will not be a law very long. Reports have been current that steps are already being taken by a number of Stock Exchange houses individually to test the law as soon as it shall have become effective, and there is some hope of discovering flaws in the act which will make it ineffective, but there is no general expectation that relief can be had except through repeal. Controversies between dealers and the State authorities over the application of the law are most probable. In the case of the former Federal tax there were many disputed questions, and there are likely to be many under this new State law. Among the questions that have already been raised are whether a mere exchange of securities such as that now going on in the Northern Securities Company is subject to tax, and whether or not the State tax can be imposed upon stocks issued under Federal charters, such, for example, as the stock of National banks. It is a safe assumption, if the precedents established in the administration of the Federal tax law are to be followed, that all cases will be decided in favor of the State Government, whatever may appear to be the logical view of the case. So it was when the Collector of Internal Revenue in New York decided that in addition to the transfer tax of $2 per hundred shares every stock certificate should bear a 25-cent stamp for what he chose to designate as the "power of attorney" indorsed on the certificate. It was brought to his attention that this indorsement was really not a power of attorney at all, and he reversed his decision. Then the authorities in Washington reconsidered the case and reversed the Collector's reversion of his first decision, and the double tax was again demanded. Wall Street was disgusted times enough during the life of the Federal tax, and its disgust is likely to be aroused afresh with all the more vehemence because of the fact that in the present instance it is being discriminated against.

The law imposing the tax goes into effect ten days hence, on June 1. The clause in the act describing the tax and specifying its application is as follows:

"There is hereby imposed, and there shall immediately accrue and be collected a tax as herein provided, on all sales, or agreements to sell, or memoranda of sales or deliveries or transfers of shares or certificates of stock in any domestic or foreign association, company or corporation, made after the first day of June, 1905, whether made upon or shown by the books of the association, company, or corporation, or by any assignment in blank, or by any delivery, or by any paper or agreement or memorandum or other evidence of transfer or sale, whether entitling the holder in any manner to the benefit of such stock, or to secure the future payment of money or the future transfer of any stock, on each $100 of face value or fraction thereof, 2 cents. It is not intended by this act to impose a tax upon an agreement evidencing the deposit of stock certificates as collateral security for money loaned thereon, which stock certificates are not actually sold, nor upon such stock certificates so deposited. The payment of such tax shall be denoted by an adhesive stamp or stamps affixed as follows: In case of sale where the evidence of transfer is shown only by the books of the company the stamp shall be placed upon such books, and where the change of ownership is by transfer certificate the stamp shall be and delivered by the seller to the buyer a bill or memorandum of such sale to which the stamp provided for by this article shall be affixed, and every bill or memorandum of sale or agreement to sell before mentioned shall show the date thereof, the name of the seller, the amount of the sale, and the matter or thing to which it refers, and no further tax is hereby imposed upon the delivery of the certificate of stock, or upon the actual issue of a new certificate when the original certificate of stock is accompanied by the duly stamped memorandum of sale."

JAPANESE WAR CREDITS.

Remittances to London at Rate of $2,000,000 a Week Thought to be for Account of Japanese Government.

Much interest attaches to the disposition that Japan will make of the large credits which she created in this market through the flotation of the recent seventy-five-million-dollar bond issue. For the past three weeks extensive purchases of foreign exchange have been made in the New York market by the local agency of a prominent Japanese bank, and the inference, seemingly a fair one under the circumstances, is that a part of the proceeds of the Japanese bonds sold in this country was being remitted to London. In exchange circles it was said that these purchases of exchange have amounted to about £400,000, or $2,000,000, a week. While at this rate it would take a very long time to remit to London the entire amount of money to the credit of Japan in this city, the steady purchase of that amount of exchange weekly would be an important factor in shaping the course of exchange rates. It has always been assumed, however, that as matters now stand there can be no necessitous transfer of Japanese credits from this city to other points, and it is more than likely that any such transfer made simply as a matter of convenience would be carried on with due regard to the condition of the local money market and with the view of avoiding any disturbance of money rates. Undoubtedly the sudden withdrawal of the $75,000,000, or possibly $100,000,000, which Japan has on deposit in this country, or will have after next Thursday, when the final payment on the recent bond issue becomes due, would have a decided effect upon the money market and upon exchange, and would lead to large gold exports, but the gradual transfer of these funds could be made without proving in any sense a disquieting influence.

Recently it has been claimed that, contrary to general experience in the matter of foreign loans floated in the American market, the Japanese bonds were likely to remain in the hands of American investors. It was stated in fact that not only had the full American allotment of the first two Japanese war loans been retained in this country, but that the American holdings had been increased during the course of last year. In support of this claim it was pointed out that the coupons for interest on the two bond issues of last year which were cashed at the New York agency of the Japanese Government represented more than the American allotment of those two loans. In other words, that Americans had purchased a portion of the London allotment. It is claimed by some that this suggestion was incorrect. It is known that some of the first two issues were disposed of in the London market, and it is said that the payment of such a large number of the coupons in New York was due entirely to the fact that a large amount of the coupons had been used as a medium of exchange. The coupons on the Japanese bonds are redeemable at the fixed rate of exchange of $4.87 to the pound sterling. This is much above the rate which until recently prevailed for sterling exchange in New York, nearly a full cent a point above the price of exchange some weeks ago. It is pointed out that this margin made it profitable to purchase these coupons in London and bring them to New York, where they could be cashed at a higher rate of exchange than that which would have to be paid for remittances to cover the cost of the coupons in London. It was recalled that similar transactions were carried on some years ago in Russian coupons which were bought in Europe in large quantities and brought to New York, provision having been made by the Russian Government for their payment in New York as well as in Europe. Such transactions make it impossible to determine the holdings of certain securities in any given market by the number of the coupons paid at that particular point.

MR. HARRIMAN'S WITHDRAWAL

State Statutes That Prohibit Codirection of Competing Lines.

The withdrawal this past week of the Union Pacific representatives from the Northern Pacific board for the reason that their presence on the latter board was in violation of State statutes that have been given new force by the recent decision of the United States Supreme Court adds interest to the sections of law which specifically cover the point involved. The laws of Minnesota contain the following sections:

Section 2,716.—No railroad corporation shall consolidate with, lease, or purchase, or in any way become owner of, or control, any other railroad corporation, or any stock, franchises, rights, or property thereof, which owns or controls a parallel or competing line.

Section 2,717.—No railroad corporation, or the lessees, purchasers, or managers of any railroad corporation, shall consolidate the stock, property, or franchises of such corporation with, or lease or purchase the works or franchises of, or in any way control any other railroad corporation owning or having under its control a parallel or competing line; nor shall any officer of such railroad corporation act as an officer of any other railroad corporation owning or having the control of a parallel or competing line.

The States of Wisconsin, Montana, and Washington have similar prohibitions in their laws.

That the Union Pacific and the Northern Pacific systems come under the prohibition contained in these passages of the law of Minnesota seems clear from the following extract from the opinion of the Supreme Court in the Northern Securities case:

"The Northern Pacific system, taken in connection with the Burlington system, is competitive with the Union Pacific system, and it seems obvious to us, the entire record considered, that the decree sought by complainants would tend to smother that competition."

NEW LAW IS APPROVED

Savings Banks Welcome Classification of Railroad Investments.

GENERAL, NOT SPECIAL, ACT

Contest Over Rock Island Collateral 4s Showed Fallacy of Former Procedure.

Savings bank interests are uniformly pleased that the bill making general classifications of the railroad bonds in which savings banks may legally invest has finally become a law by the signature of Gov. Higgins, and the belief is expressed that no single step of equal importance has been taken for many years in legislation of this character.

The new law, to be sure, is not one of innovations. The movement on the part of the State Savings Bank Association which resulted in its passage was not intended to create new standards for the admission of railroad bonds to the savings bank list, so much as to provide for the codification of existing standards and a general scheme under which the savings banks, on the one hand, might make their own selection of railroad bonds investments, and railroads, on the other, have their issues attain, if it were so desired, automatically to the dignity of a savings bank investment.

It is, of course, common knowledge of a score of Legislatures that the admission of railroad bonds to the list in which savings banks are allowed to invest has been a matter of special legislation, sought either with the aid of, or despite, the State Savings Bank Association. There have been two ways of procedure—first, that the railroad in question should present its case upon the particular class of books for which admission was desired to the committee of the Savings Bank Association, and then take the proposition, with the visé, of that committee to Albany; or, second, that the railroad, having failed to obtain the visé, should seek legislation direct, with whatever aid from the lobby it was thought necessary to purchase.

So from time to time the spectacle has been presented of the savings banks engaged in a contest with some portion of the railroad lobby for the protection of the depositors of the State against the possibility of an injudicious investment of their funds. It may be said in fairness to the legislators that the savings banks have been uniformly upheld in such efforts, but the rôle is one that the savings bank men are loath to adopt, for the double reason that their chosen calling makes for the peaceful, rather than for the militant, disposition, and that the very careful restrictions under which they operate leave no way open for the "contingent" expenditure of the funds of their institutions for legislative purposes.

An example in point is the case of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific collateral 4s, over which a determined battle was fought in the Legislature of 1904. The difficulty was obviously the old one of trying to draw from certain acts of special legislation principles that could be applied satisfactorily to other acts of special legislation, and that the Rock Island Railroad and the State Savings Bank Association should be unable to agree upon the application was not strange.

The law regarding bond investments of savings banks, as it now stands, does not differ materially from that which has been in force until the general classifications of railroad bonds are reached. The new law recites, of course, the list of railroad bonds in which savings banks are allowed to invest under past legislation.

The additional sections, containing the general classifications, provide that savings banks may invest, first, in the mortgage bonds of any railroad corporation incorporated under the laws of any of the United States which actually owns in fee not less than 500 miles of standard-gauge railway, exclusive of sidings, within the United States, if within five years preceding the date of investment the road has made no default of matured principal and interest of all its mortgage indebtedness; has paid dividends during the five years of at least 4 per cent. on all its stock, and has had gross earnings, including those of railroads or coal companies, leased or controlled, equal to at least five times the amount of all its interest requirements and rentals on all leased lines.

The bonds, however, must be a first mortgage on not less than 75 per cent. of the railroad owned in fee by the company at the date of issue, exclusive of sidings, or a refunding mortgage issued to retire all prior lien mortgage debts of the company at the time of the investment, and covering at least 75 per cent. of the railroad as before. Further, it is provided that no bond so secured shall be a legal investment in case the entire amount of the mortgage, together with all outstanding prior debts of the company, deducting, in the case of a refunding mortgage, the bonds reserved to retire prior debts at maturity, shall exceed three times the outstanding capital stock of the company at the time of making the investment. And no mortgage is to be regarded as a refunding mortgage under the terms of the act unless the bonds it secures mature at a later date than any bond which it is given to refund, or unless it covers a mileage at least 25 per cent. greater than is covered by any one of the mortgages to be refunded.

The bill also provides that in the case of a road operating less than 500 miles any bond which would be an otherwise legal investment as described above may be admitted if for ten years prior to the date of the investment its gross earnings have not been less than $10,000; that bonds of a railroad corporation within the provisions above, which are to be refunded either direct or by an owning road through the general mortgage, may be admitted if the refunding bonds come within the provisions of the act; that bonds not otherwise discriminated against of a road owning less than 500 miles may be admitted if they are guaranteed as to principal and interest by a corporation whose first or refunding mortgage bonds are a legal investment for savings banks, provided the total issue of bonds and all outstanding prior debts of the railroad making the guarantee shall not exceed three times the capital stock of the latter at the time of the investment.

The last classification of the act admits the first mortgage bonds of a railroad the entire capital stock of which, except qualifying shares, is owned by an operating railroad whose last issue of refunding bonds is a legal investment under the provisions of the act, and which guarantees the principal and interest of the bonds in question, provided that the total issue of bonds and all outstanding prior debts of the railroad making the guarantee shall not exceed three times the capital stock of the latter at the time of the investment.

The bill also provides that in the case of railroads which have been in existence more than ten years, and which have paid dividends during the five years of at least 4 per cent. on all their stock, and have had gross earnings, including those of railroads or coal companies, leased or controlled, equal to at least five times the amount of all its interest requirements and rentals on all leased lines, bonds may be admitted to the list to the amount of 75 per cent. of the cost of the railroad and its equipment

American Smelters Securities Company

Five Per Cent. Cumulative Preferred Stock, Series B.

UNCONDITIONALLY GUARANTEED BY THE AMERICAN SMELTING & REFINING COMPANY (AS SET FORTH BELOW).

DIVIDENDS PAYABLE QUARTERLY ON THE FIRST DAYS OF MARCH, JUNE, SEPTEMBER AND DECEMBER.

Shares of the par value of $100 each.

The issue is subject to redemption or purchase (in whole or in part), at par and accrued dividends, on June 1, 1930, or on any quarterly dividend date thereafter upon two months' notice.

E. W. Nash, Esq., President, and Daniel Guggenheim, Esq., Chairman of the Executive Committee of the American Smelting & Refining Company, write us, under date of May 11, 1905, in part, as follows:

"The American Smelters Securities Company (formerly the American Smelters Exploration Company) is already the owner of important ore producing properties, or the securities thereof, and is about to acquire a number of well-established productive smelting properties, or the securities thereof, and to construct additional smelting plans for the extension of its business, especially on the Pacific Coast.

The American Smelting & Refining Company is the owner of a controlling interest in the Common Stock of the American Smelters Securities Company, in which the voting power is lodged exclusively for the first two years and thereafter unless dividends on the Preferred Stock for one year shall be in default. The amended certificate of incorporation of the American Smelters Securities Company provides that neither class of preferred stock shall be increased without the affirmative vote of the holders of at least two-thirds in amount of every class of stock. The stock of the American Smelters Securities Company consists of:

Common Stock	$30,000,000
and Preferred Stock	47,000,000
Divided into:
Six Per Cent. Cumulative Preferred Stock, Series A, unguaranteed	$17,000,000
Five Per Cent. Cumulative Preferred Stock, Series B, guaranteed	30,000,000
Total	$77,000,000

So far as the Securities Company is concerned, the Series A Stock has a preference as to dividends; the Series B Stock ranks equally with the Series A Stock as to assets, both classes of Preferred Stock having equal priority over the Common Stock in this regard.

All or any part of the stock (Series B) outstanding may be redeemed at par and accrued dividends by the American Smelters Securities Company, or may be purchased at par and accrued dividends by the American Smelting & Refining Company, on June 1, 1930, or upon any quarterly dividend date thereafter upon two months' previous notice.

EVERY CERTIFICATE OF STOCK WILL BEAR THE FOLLOWING ENDORSEMENT OF GUARANTY BY THE AMERICAN SMELTING & REFINING COMPANY:

"FOR VALUE RECEIVED, the American Smelting & Refining Company hereby agrees with the present and every future holder of the shares of Preferred Stock, Series B, of the American Smelters Securities Company represented by the within certificate, and his personal representatives and assigns, that quarterly dividends at the rate of five per cent. per annum upon the stock represented by said certificate will be promptly paid irrespective of whether such dividends shall be earned and declared by the American Smelters Securities Company, and that in case of the liquidation, dissolution or winding up of the American Smelters Securities Company, whether voluntary or involuntary, the holder of this certificate will realize upon the shares represented thereby the par value thereof, together with interest at the rate of five per cent. per annum for any period for which dividends at said rate shall not have been paid either by said Securities Company or under this guaranty, (which interest shall be in lieu of omitted dividends.)

"The American Smelting & Refining Company further agrees that it will in all respects perform the agreement, dated May 11, 1905, entered into between it and the American Smelters Securities Company for the benefit of the holders of said Preferred Stock, Series B."

THE AMERICAN SMELTING & REFINING COMPANY HAS ALSO ENTERED INTO AN AGREEMENT WHICH PROVIDES AMONG OTHER THINGS, THAT, SO LONG AS ANY OF THE PREFERRED STOCK, SERIES B, OF THE SECURITIES COMPANY SHALL BE OUTSTANDING, THE AMERICAN SMELTING & REFINING COMPANY SHALL NOT ISSUE ANY BONDS OR MAKE ANY FURTHER GUARANTY IN RESPECT OF ANY CAPITAL STOCK OR OBLIGATIONS, WHICH, INCLUDING THE GUARANTY, OF SAID PREFERRED STOCK, SHALL CREATE A LIABILITY, ACTUAL OR CONTINGENT, FOR INTEREST OR DIVIDENDS OR OTHER LIKE CHARGES, WHICH SHALL IN ANY YEAR EXCEED IN THE AGGREGATE TWENTY-FIVE PER CENT. OF ITS NET EARNINGS FOR THE TWELVE MONTHS NEXT PRECEDING THE CREATION OF SUCH BONDS OR GUARANTY.

Except the interest on $361,000 bonds of an old issue, which will soon be retired, the American Smelting & Refining Company has no charge ahead of its Capital Stock other than that arising on the guaranty of the said $30,000,000 of Preferred Stock, Series B, of the American Smelters Securities Company. Thus this guaranty is practically the only fixed charge of the American Smelting & Refining Company, whose capital stock consists of $50,000,000 Common and $30,000,000 7 per cent. Cumulative Preferred Stock, (together having a present market value of about $117,000,000.)

AGAINST THE ANNUAL $1,500,000 GUARANTEED DIVIDEND UPON THE $30,000,000 PREFERRED B STOCK, THE NET EARNINGS OF THE AMERICAN SMELTING & REFINING COMPANY FOR THE PRESENT FISCAL YEAR ENDING MAY 31, 1905, WILL AMOUNT TO ABOUT $8,500,000.

IN ADDITION THE NET EARNINGS OF THE AMERICAN SMELTERS SECURITIES COMPANY WILL, IT IS ESTIMATED, ON THE COMPLETION OF THE VARIOUS WORKS IN PROCESS OF CONSTRUCTION AND IN CONTEMPLATION, AMOUNT TO ABOUT $5,500,000.

For further information as to this issue of stock reference is made to the letter, above mentioned, of the President and the Chairman of the Executive Committee of the American Smelting and Refining Company.

THE UNDERSIGNED WILL RECEIVE SUBSCRIPTIONS FOR THE ABOVE STOCK AT 98 PER CENT.

The subscription will be opened at the office of the undersigned at 10 o'clock A. M. on Thursday, May 25, 1905, and will be closed at 3 o'clock P. M., or earlier, on the same day, the right being reserved to reject any applications and to award a smaller amount than applied for. Allotments made upon subscriptions are to be paid for on June 1, 1905, against delivery of temporary certificates or receipts, exchangeable for engraver stock certificates when issued.

The proceedings for the creation of this issue of Preferred Stock were taken under the supervision of Messrs. Guggenheimer, Untermyer and Marshall. The legality of the issue of the stock and of the guaranty by the American Smelting & Refining Company has also been approved by Messrs. Guthrie, Cravath and Henderson, WHO FURTHER ADVISE US THAT THE STOCK IS NOT SUBJECT TO TAXATION UNDER THE LAWS OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK.

Application will be made to list this stock on the New York Stock Exchange.

ISSUE OF $10,000,000

THE WASHINGTON TERMINAL COMPANY

FIRST MORTGAGE 3½% GOLD BONDS

Guaranteed jointly and severally as to principal and interest by

THE BALTIMORE AND OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY

PHILADELPHIA, BALTIMORE & WASHINGTON RAILROAD COMPANY (PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD SYSTEM)

by endorsement upon each bond.

Dated February 1st, 1905. Principal due February 1st, 1945.

Interest payable February 1st and August 1st, in the Cities of New York and Washington.

UNITED STATES TRUST CO., OF NEW YORK, TRUSTEE.

Total Authorized Issue $12,000,000.

Principal and interest payable in gold coin of the present standard of weight and fineness without deduction for any tax or taxes which The Washington Terminal Company may be required to pay thereon or retain therefrom under any present or future law of the United States of America or of the District of Columbia.

The bonds are of either coupon or registered form. The coupon bonds are of the denomination of $1,000 and the registered bonds are of the denomination of $1,000 or such multiple thereof as the Board of Directors of The Washington Terminal Company may authorize.

It is stipulated that the $2,000,000 bonds reserved in the treasury of the Company are to be used only for the enlargement, betterment, extension of and additions to the property covered by the mortgage.

The bonds are secured by a First Mortgage not only upon the Terminal Station but upon the tracks and approaches thereto as is more particularly described in a letter from A. J. Cassatt, Esq., President of The Washington Terminal Company, who writes us under date of April 26th, 1905, as follows:

"In respect to the $10,000,000 The Washington Terminal Company First Mortgage Forty Year 3½ Per Cent. Gold Bonds sold to you, I beg to state that The Washington Terminal Company, a corporation incorporated under Acts of Congress, approved February 12th, 1901, and February 28th, 1903, respectively, is engaged pursuant to these Acts in constructing a Union Terminal Station near the United States Capitol, at Massachusetts Avenue and Delaware Avenue, together with a double-track railroad from a connection with the Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington Railroad, near D Street and New Jersey Avenue, to a connection, at the north side of Florida Avenue near Third Street, with The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad and with the new branch of the Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington Railroad Company, now being built across to Magruder Station on the Main Line of the Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington Railroad. This terminal railroad and station furnish a through passenger connection between the lines north and south of Washington, and take the place of the present stations of The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company and the Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington Railroad Company in that city, and will, thereafter be used by all the railroads reaching Washington from the north and south which formerly used the old stations, as follows:

The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company.
Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington Railroad Company.
Southern Railway Company.
Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company.
Richmond-Washington Line.
The Chesapeake and Ohio Railway Company.
Seaboard Air Line Railway Company.

These Companies are to use the new station under contracts permanent in their character, and covering the payment of an amount which will fully provide for the interest on the bonds to be issued by The Washington Terminal Company, and also a fair return to The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company and the Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington Railroad Company on the additional capital invested therein. The payment of the principal and interest of the bonds is also guaranteed jointly and severally by The Baltimore and Ohio and the Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington Railroad Companies.

The terminal Station and Railroad are being built in accordance with the recommendations of the authorities of the District of Columbia, and with the approval of the Congress of the United States, and will cost about thirteen millions of dollars. The work of construction is being pushed forward actively, and will be completed before the end of 1906. The legislation authorizing its construction also provides for such a revision of the grades of the steam railways passing through Washington as will eliminate the grade crossings of the highways, and thus aid materially in the effective and economical movement of the traffic.

This legislation also requires that the station building shall be monumental in character, in order that it may harmonize with the Capitol and other public buildings in its vicinity. It will be one of the largest passenger stations in this country and will be the only passenger terminal in Washington, as the Acts of Congress under which the Company was incorporated require the abandonment at due time of the existing stations and of the tracks approaching thereto. It will be used for passenger, mail, and express service only.

The Washington Terminal Company has an authorized capital stock of $5,000,000, of which $2,500,000 has been issued and fully paid in cash, and is owned equally by The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company and the Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington Railroad Company. Further necessary issues of stock will be subscribed for in equal amounts by these Companies.

The bonds are part of an authorized issue of $12,000,000, are dated February 1st, 1905, run for forty years, bear 3½ per cent. interest, and are payable in gold free from any deduction for taxes which The Washington Terminal Company may be required to pay thereon or retain therefrom under any law of the United States of America or of the District of Columbia.

They are in either coupon or registered form. The coupon bonds are of the denomination of $1,000, and the registered bonds are of the denomination of $1,000 or such multiples thereof as the Board of Directors of the Terminal Company may authorize.

The principal and interest of the bonds are payable in either of the Cities of Washington or New York.

Application will be made to list these bonds on the New York Stock Exchange."

Copies of the Acts of Congress above referred to as well as of the Mortgage itself, and of the opinion of our Counsel, John G. Johnson, Esq., may be obtained at the offices of the undersigned.

Having sold a large amount of the issue, we offer the remaining bonds for subscription at 97½ and interest. The subscription lists will be opened at the offices of the undersigned at 10 o'clock A. M. on Tuesday, the 23d day of May, 1905, and closed at 3 o'clock P. M. or earlier on the same day, the right being reserved to reject any application or to award smaller amounts than applied for.

Allotments made upon subscriptions are to be paid for on Friday, May 26th, 1905, against the delivery of the engraved bond.

Application will be made to list these bonds on the New York Stock Exchange.

THE FINANCIAL MARKETS

Stocks Weak; Call Money Nominal, 2@2½ Per Cent.

Active Business and Lower Prices—Bad Bank Statement Among the Causes.

Saturday's stock market was of the anticipated sort, and a little more so. That there was no cue from London was a help rather than otherwise, for London has been a seller lately. Without this reinforcement the volume was at the rate of 1,500,000 shares for a full day, and the tone was worse than soft. There was hardly a representative advance exceeding a fraction, but the general declines ranged up to four points for Northern Pacific. Falls of one to two points were too numerous to specify, and distributed impartially through railways and industrials. Pressure of operations for the Fall was the chief apparent cause, but better excuse than usual was afforded by the bank statement. It showed a loss of half the surplus, resulting from an unexpected increase of loans. The decrease of cash was a third, or about $2,000,000, less than expected, but the increased requirement of reserve was in excess of anticipation in proportion to a growth of loans, which had not been indicated by the week's liquidating market. The grow

ON THE LONDON 'CHANGE

Uneasiness in Regard to Outlook in Stock Market.

Public Apparently Withdrawing from It—No Permanent Improvement Is Expected Until the End of the Russo-Japanese War.

Special Cables to THE NEW YORK TIMES.
[Copyright, 1905.]

LONDON, May 20.—Stock market conditions have not improved this week, but, on the contrary, are such that a good many financiers are quite uneasy concerning the outlook. One hears more or less talk of the possibility of a recurrence of the state of affairs prevalent last year, the feature of which was the abstention of the public from participation in Stock Exchange business.

Some financial writers assert that there are signs of the withdrawal of private speculators from the market, and say that the market is already practically in the hands of pools and professionals. Probably there is a certain amount of reason for this view, but if the public is fighting shy of the Stock Exchange just now the cause of the shyness is not the same as that which was in operation last year.

It was the tightness of the money market that depressed the stock market last year. It is the fear of a great slump in prices that disturbs the minds of would-be investors and speculators now.

There is considerable anxiety regarding the situation in the Far East, and it is said that there will be no permanent improvement in the market until the end of the war. It has happened this week, however, that the depressing tendency of the war has been reinforced by nervousness growing out of the situation in New York and also by certain Continental operations in the nature of liquidation.

Possibly this accumulation of unfavorable influences has brought about a degree of pessimism that will pass away in the course of a few days, but nobody seems inclined to make a definite forecast. About all that is said with confidence is that when the war is over there will be better days on the Stock Exchange.

We reserve the right to close books at any time. In case of over-subscription preference will be given to first subscribers.

$250,000 OF THIS STOCK IS ALREADY UNDERWRITTEN AND $100,000 HAS BEEN SUBSCRIBED BY THE DIRECTORS AND THEIR FRIENDS, SO THE CONSTRUCTION OF THE PLANT, TO COST $360,000, IS ASSURED.

The plant will be in operation early next fall, with a daily capacity of 1,500 barrels, and so constructed that the expenditure of $100,000 more will increase the output to 2,500 barrels daily.

PROPERTY OF COMPANY,

consisting of 230 acres, is located at Pattenburg, N. J., 62 miles from New York city, on the line of the Lehigh Valley Railroad, in the Lehigh Valley section, where 70 per cent. of all the Portland Cement in the United States is made.

Experts, Engineers and Assayists who have examined this property say there is enough cement rock to make 60,000,000 barrels of Portland Cement. At 40 cents per barrel profit (which is considerably below the average) this would mean a property worth $24,000,000. SEND FOR FULL REPORT.

ENORMOUS INCREASE IN CONSUMPTION.

In 1895 the mills in the U. S. produced 900,324 barrels of Portland Cement, in 1904 it had grown to 22,000,000 barrels, and is increasing annually at the rate of over 4,000,000 barrels.

In 1904 nearly 3,000,000 barrels were imported to meet the demand.

Although $100,000,000 is invested in this most profitable industry, it is the first time within our knowledge that cement stock in the Lehigh Valley district has been offered the public. It is owned principally by men of wealth who have made millions from the industry. Their stock is not for sale. 8% dividends guaranteed when stock is fully paid.

How 12% Dividends Can Be Paid

The earning capacity of a modern Portland Cement plant of 1,500 barrels capacity daily would be at a low estimate $180,000 per annum. Allowing $48,000 for preferred dividends on $600,000 of preferred stock, there would be $132,000 for surplus fund and a dividend of 8% on the common. The preferred pays 8%. Therefore 100 shares preferred and 50 shares common as a bonus would pay $1,200, or 12% on a $10,000 investment.

How 18% Dividends May Be Paid

With a capacity of 2,500 barrels daily the plant would earn over $300,000, or enough to pay 8% on the preferred at par and 20% on the common. Therefore,

2 shares preferred cost,	$200
1 share common, bonus,	000
Total investment, three shares	$200
Dividend on 2 shares preferred,	$16
Dividend on 1 share common,	20
Total dividend	$36 or 18%

It is obvious that any stock paying these dividends would be selling at $150 and $200 per share. $400,000 of preferred stock will remain in the treasury. The common stock, which costs you nothing, will make your investment valuable.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

Yesterday Marked the Fifth Consecutive Day of Weak Market.

Yesterday was the fifth consecutive day of pronounced weakness and liquidation in the stock market. This is a longer period of consecutive declines than occurred even at the time of the panic in December, and consequently a large number of traders expected a rally. Although prices opened better and showed advances for some time after the opening, renewed selling set in, and there was no stemming the tide. Market observers thought the opening had been purposely made strong, so as to facilitate further selling. There were such advances at the opening as nearly a point in Steel common, but they created suspicion because a weak opening had been anticipated, and the suspicion proved correct. Prices at the close of the day were generally below the low point reached on May 4.

No Explanation of the Selling.

The feature of the market which seems most ominous to traders is that there is absolutely no explanation of the selling. There are no stories of trouble, money is easy, rumors of differences of opinion among men of the first or even second importance in the financial world are lacking, and, in short, there is a pronounced absence of such rumors as generally accompany a declining market. This is puzzling to those who are always looking for an explanation, and they stand in awe of this silent, orderly but insistent outpouring of stocks, which resembles that of 1903.

Market Was Active.

The market was decidedly active, especially in view of the fact that the London market was closed yesterday. Over 600,000 shares were traded in, which is at the rate of 1,500,000 for a whole day's session. As the weakness of the last few days had been largely ascribed to selling for foreign account, especially London, the amount of stock which came out was decidedly disappointing to those who were working for a rally. Rallies, however, seem to be at a discount just now. As one trader put it, they sell them by point and rally them by quarters.

Lively Day in Bond Market.

In the confusion of the break traders overlooked the action of the bond market, which was really quite noteworthy. In the two hours of business nearly $2,000,000 of bonds were sold. Although most of these transactions were on declining prices, especially in the more speculative issues, yet the absorption was good, and there was one notable exception to the weakness in the rest of the list. The Japanese issues showed decided strength. Observers of the bond market thought this significant.

Bad Time for Specialties.

It is not pleasant to be long of specialties in a declining market like the one prevailing just now. One never knows what they will do when they do begin to break. Westinghouse Manufacturing, for instance, declined 8 points yesterday on only 1,400 shares. Some of this selling appears to have been rather urgent, as the stock sold down from 156 to the low price of 152, or 4 points, on only 700 shares. It broke 2 points between sales.

Bank Statement Bad.

It had been expected that the bank statement would make a bad showing, but no one had thought it would show such a heavy increase in loans. The fact is the showing made by the bank statement was about as bad as possible. It was indeed so bad that it quite upset the old formula which provides that one should sell on a good bank statement and buy on a bad one. Those who thought that the break just before the bank statement discounted its showing were sadly disappointed, and the weakness became more pronounced during the last half hour after it had been issued.

CHICAGO QUOTATIONS.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, May 20.—New York exchange to-day was 5c premium. Time and call loans, 3½@4½ per cent.

Eastern depression was an influence in securities on the local Exchange. Selling in Can issues was the heaviest, and brought a decline in the common stock to 10¾ and in the preferred to 67¼. Biscuit common sold off to 59¾. Subway shares, the other leader, were around high figures, closing at 61¾. Tool bonds improved 2 points, to 73.

On the local curb there is a small revival in the demand for bank stocks that was killed by the recent Milwaukee default. Bankers' National went at the high price of 205 and Central Trust at 177½. The stock list follows:

Sales.		High.	Low.	Close.
1,980	American Can	11¾	10¾	11

TRADING IN BALTIMORE.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, May 20.—The tone of the local market was better to-day, and although the general list was not very active quotations were surprisingly firm in the face of the further decline in New York. The issues were few and not very important, while the general list ruled about steady. Cotton Duck incomes were much stronger and advanced 1 per cent., to 31. The first mortgage 5s were steady at 77½, and were readily taken at that figure. United Railways free income certificates sold at 59, were ½ off, and Consol Line 4 per cent. certificates, at 92¾, were ½ off. Western Maryland 4s at 89 were steady, and the demand for these securities was good. The sales were: Shares, 170; bonds, $62,500, as follows:

SU

IN THE REAL ESTATE FIELD

That the market will develop any new characteristics in the few remaining weeks devoted to active trading is hardly to be expected. Various "booms" of minor importance seem to be losing force, but in spite of these facts, and without special influences to stimulate buying in one section or another, the amount of general business continues to be surprisingly large. There is a tendency to call it routine business, because it does not bristle with individual items of the first importance, but that the market holds on as well as it does, after six or eight months of violent speculation, is a most satisfactory sign.

Among the larger transactions of the week perhaps the most interesting was the sale of the property of the Manhattan Eye and Ear Hospital, at the southeast corner of Park Avenue and Forty-first Street, occasioning some discussion as to the probable future of the now residential blocks on Park Avenue between Thirty-fourth and Fortieth Streets. That there will be ultimately some transformation of those blocks may be taken for granted, but to say how soon it will come or what lines it will follow would require a high order of prophetic ability. The corresponding blocks on Madison Avenue are as strongly residential as those on Park Avenue itself, and will ward off for many years any spread of the Fifth Avenue business district eastward. Forty-second Street, so far as its activity as a cross-town thoroughfare is concerned, practically ends at Park Avenue, and even though a New Haven station and subway to Queens accomplish all that has been predicted for the southerly portions of Fourth Avenue, the conversion of the Murray Hill stretch of Park Avenue to other than its present uses seems to be a long way off.

Broadway, north of Times Square, again figured prominently in the news last week, through the purchase by a recently organized realty company of a large plot between Fifty-fourth and Fifty-fifth Streets, owned by the Downey estate. This deal and others of recent date only emphasize the fact that there are few spots in the entire city which present more attractive opportunities for speculation—not, of course, the overnight variety—than that part of Broadway between Forty-seventh Street and Columbus Circle. The rapidly growing automobile trade, which has usurped these blocks, has caused properties to yield a fair return on present prices, while aside from this is the almost absolute certainty of a very substantial increase in values within a few years, when the district is needed for more permanent and costly improvements.

The sale of a group of twenty-six Bronx apartment houses from the plans before a shovelful of earth had been turned on their prospective site was the largest transaction of its kind yet reported, and the steady demand for finished houses in the borough beyond the Harlem is the best indication that this $1,250,060 deal in bricks-and-mortar futures is well advised.

LATEST DEALINGS BY BROKERS.

The City Investing Company is reported to have sold the northeast corner of Broadway and Seventy-second Street, facing Sherman Square, a plot, 100 by 100, upon which a six-story building is to be erected. The ground floor and basement of the building have already been leased to the Acker, Merrall & Condit Company.

New Building on Fourth Avenue.

The Hamilton Fish Corporation has filed plans, through Architects Robertson & Potter, for an eight-story store and loft building to be erected at the northeast corner of Fourth Avenue and Twelfth Street. The structure will stand on a plot 128.6 by 103.3, and, according to the estimate accompanying the plans, will cost $250,000.

Another House Sold on 55th Street.

Frederick T. Barry has sold for ex-Bridge Commissioner Abraham Schwab 119 East Fifty-fifth Street, a three-story brownstone dwelling on plot 18.9 by 60 by 100.5.

Henry D. Winans & May negotiated the sale of 12 East Fifty-third Street for Walter G. Oakman.

Company Buys on 40th Street.

J. Arthur Fischer has sold to the New York Cab Company the three-story dwelling 260 West Fortieth Street, 20 by 98.9, which, with four adjoining houses, bought recently through the same broker, gives the company a plot 100 by 98.9. It is understood that a seven-story stable will be erected on the site.

J. Arthur Fischer has leased, from the plans, for the Ludin Realty Company to the New York Cab Transfer Company, a garage to be erected at 536 to 542 West Thirty-sixth Street, having a frontage of 125 feet. The building will be ready for occupancy in the Fall.

Buyer of Park & Tilford Corner.

Archibald D. Russell is the buyer of the Park & Tilford property at the southwest corner of Columbus Avenue and Seventy-second Street. The sale of this property and of that at Fifth Avenue and Fifty-ninth Street by Park & Tilford has occasioned more or less comment, in view of the long occupancy of these buildings by that firm. The fact, however, that leases have been taken back by the firm for a period of ten years in each case indicates that they will continue to transact business in these stores. From an authentic source it is learned that these negotiations are preliminary to a financial readjustment of the concern, due largely to the holdings of estates in the business. It is understood a new corporation will be formed, with Hobart J. Park as President, to take over and carry on the business. It is said, also, that Frank Tilford and Henry R. Wilson, the latter the President of the Lincoln Trust Company, are interested with Mr. Park in effecting this readjustment.

Corner Sold on West End Avenue.

Edward C. H. Vogler has sold for Abraham Nelson the southwest corner of West End Avenue and Sixty-ninth Street, a five-story flat, with stores, 25 by 100, to George A. Tiemeyer; also, for V. B. Wiley, 213 West One Hundred and Fourth Street, a five-story brownstone flat, 25 by 100, to the same buyer.

The Cohen Realty Company has sold for Henry C. Martin to Harry Schwitzer 903 Amsterdam Avenue, a five-story triple flat, with stores, on lot 25 by 100; also, resold for a client to William Ebling, 901 and 903 Amsterdam Avenue, two five-story triple flats, with stores, each 25 by 100.

Pocher & Co. and the Thirty-third Street Realty Company have sold 435 West Thirty-ninth Street, a five-story tenement, with stores, on lot 25 by 98.9, for Mary E. Dowling to E. E. Alskin.

J. Arthur Fischer has sold to a client for George Fuchs the four-story English basement dwelling 244 West Twenty-ninth Street, 15 by 79.

West 112th Street Purchases.

The Garden Realty Company has sold 257 West One Hundred and Twelfth Street, a five-story double apartment house, on plot 31 by 100.

Shaw & Co. have sold for a client the five-story flat 248 West One Hundred and Twelfth Street, on plot 33.4 by 100.11.

A. V. Amy & Co. have sold for Philip Wegner 47 West One Hundred and Thirteenth Street, a three-story brownstone dwelling, on lot 18 by 100.11. The buyer will occupy the house.

Andrew Kane is the buyer of the southwest corner of Eighth Avenue and One Hundred and Twenty-first Street, a five-story triple flat, 26 by 100. Goodwin & Goodwin, who were associated with A. B. Mosher as brokers in the deal, report that the price was $75,000.

Dyckman Lots Bought and Sold.

Paul Haigis has sold to Martin H. Goodby 200, on the south side of Dyckman Street, opposite Vermilyea Avenue; also, to Andrew F. Kennedy, the southeast corner of Sherman Avenue and Ellwood Street, a plot 100 by 245. Mr. Haigis has bought, through the Equitable Realty Company, from the Wadsworth Avenue Realty Company, the northeast corner of Sherman Avenue and Emerson Street, a plot 100 by 100.

Deal in 136th Street Flats.

Ravitch Brothers have sold to Wolfson & Wolfson four six-story flats, on plot 155 by 99.11, in course of construction on the south side of One Hundred and Thirty-sixth Street, between Fifth and Lenox Avenues.

Joachim & Goldschmidt have sold for the Godspeed Realty Improvement Company to H. L. Phillips the five-story double flat 246 West One Hundred and Forty-third Street, 25 by 100.

The Beekman Realty Company has been organized, for the purpose of operating in Manhattan real estate, with offices at 243 West One Hundred and Sixteenth Street. Louis Kemmer is President of the new corporation and I. Oppenheimer is its Secretary and Treasurer.

Builder Buys on 116th Street.

Siegel Brothers have sold 416 and 418 East One Hundred and Sixteenth Street, a plot 37.3 by 100, to a builder, who will erect thereon a six-story elevator apartment house.

Max C. Baum has sold 346 Pleasant Avenue, 75 feet north of One Hundred and Eighteenth Street, a five-story double flat, on lot 25 by 76.

Hyman Manheim and A. I. Weinstein have sold to Isidor Wechsler and Herman Posner 328 East One Hundred and Seventh Street, a six-story new-law tenement, 37.6 by 100, bought recently through E. V. Pescia & Co.

B. Lipshitz, as broker, has sold to Milgrim Brothers the five-story double flat 72 East One Hundred and Twenty-first Street, 25 by 100.

Williams, Grodginsky & Haft have bought 440 East Eighty-fifth Street, old buildings, 25 by 100.

Buyer of Cedar Street Corner.

William H. Halsted is the buyer of the five-story building at the northeast corner of Cedar and Greenwich Streets, sold by the Cotrell estate. Theodore Allen was the broker.

Avenue B Tenements Find Buyers.

Jacob Klingenstein has bought 24 and 26 Avenue B, two five-story double tenements.

John Peters & Co. have sold for Otto Kinzel to a client of A. Sellcovitz 251 Avenue B, a five-story tenement, with stores, 26.6 by 58.

S. Ganz has bought the seven-story tenement 118 Sheriff Street, 25 by 100. Goldstein & Mintz were the brokers.

Site Bought for Big Building.

Boehm & Boehm have sold to William Steiner, Sons & Co. the southeast corner of Park Avenue and One Hundred and Sixty-sixth Street, a plot of 35,000 square feet, on which the buyers will erect what, it is said, will be the largest lithographing establishment in the country.

Duff & Brown have sold for the Charles Parker Company of Meriden, Conn., a plot of four lots fronting on One Hundred and Forty-third Street and Canal Place.

Albert Zimmermann has sold to a builder, for improvement, the northeast corner of Freeman Street and Stebbins Avenue, 125 by 106 by 112 by 116. Arnold & Byrne were the brokers.

Henry M. Ribeth & Son have sold for Klar & Tucek 189 Beach Avenue, a four-story brick double flat, on lot 25 by 110.

A. Stastkin & Sons have sold to John Zanonni a plot of four lots at the northwest corner of Two Hundred and Eleventh Street and Maple Avenue, 100 by 100; also, to James Tonello, a plot 50 by 100 on the south side of Two Hundred and Fourteenth Street, east of Fourth Avenue.

Country Place for James Stillman.

H. W. Nichols has sold for Walter W. Law a tract of 136 acres, between Briar Cliff Manor and Pocantico Hills, to James A. Stillman, who will build there a country residence for his use. The property is bounded on the east by the Bedford Road, north and west by Sleepy Hollow Road, and on the south by the lands of John D. Rockefeller. Mr. Nichols has also sold for Amos Clark, a cottage at Tarrytown to William Paskert.

The same broker has rented, for the J. J. McComb estate, the property at Dobbs Ferry, known as Estherwood, to Isidor Wormser, Jr., for the season, furnished. The house contains forty rooms, fifteen bathrooms, and a swimming pool 50 feet long. It is one of the finest houses on the Hudson.

THE AUCTION ROOMS.

This promises to be the banner week in the auction market for the Spring season of 1905. Besides the Bathgate-Beck offering of Bronx lots valued at considerably over $1,000,000, the subjoined schedule of the week's sales covers a wide range of properties, with many individual parcels of high value, in neighborhoods attractive for speculation and investment.

Auctioneer Kennelly's announcements for the next few days involve properties to the value of about $2,000,000, including the Snyder estate holdings, to be put up on Wednesday, and ten parcels in various parts of the city, to be sold on Thursday by order of the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund.

To-morrow Mr. Kennelly will conduct the sale of fifty-eight lots in the Bronx, in one of the neighborhoods of recent speculation, on the Southern Boulevard, Whitlock Avenue, Tiffany Street, and Avenue St. John.

The Snyder estate properties make up an unusually attractive list, headed by the northeast corner of Seventh Avenue and Thirty-sixth Street, a plot 99.6 by 75, with five three-story buildings. Other parcels which will give to the sale a character above the average are 18 East Thirty-second Street, 146 and 148 West Thirty-first Street, and 110 and 112 West Thirtieth Street.

The sale for the city, by order of the Sinking Fund Commissioners, presents great variety in the character of the properties to be sold—from the corner at Peck Slip and Front Street, to a large plot, with buildings, at Twelfth Avenue and One Hundred and Thirty-first Street. Park Row, William Street, and Elm Street are all represented in the list, while further uptown the offering will include the southwest corner of Third Avenue and One Hundred and Twenty-first Street, 126 by 100, and large plots at the foot of East Ninety-fourth, Ninety-fifth, and Ninety-sixth Streets.

Among other offerings scheduled by Auctioneer Kennelly are 18 West Twenty-first Street, near Fifth Avenue; four dwellings on Ninety-first Street, between Central Park West and Columbus Avenue, and the dwelling 62 West Seventieth Street. He will also sell on Thursday, under partition decree, the northwest corner of Eighth Avenue and Thirty-fourth Street, and, by owners' orders, the northeast corner of Tenth Avenue and Twenty-eighth Street.

A lively day at the Bronx Salesroom is promised to-morrow, when McQuay & Co. will conduct the sale of forty parcels in the northerly borough. The greater part of these are vacant plots in regions of good demand on Union, Eagle, Washington, and Trinity Avenues, Boston Road, and One Hundred and Forty-ninth Street.

MORTGAGE FILINGS FOR WEEK.

There were recorded last week 764 mortgages, for $14,879,180, of which 395, for $6,517,058, were at 6 per cent.; 6, for $25,750, were at 5½ per cent.; 257, for $4,074,612, were at 5 per cent.; 79, for $3,020,240, were at 4½ per cent., and 27, for $1,241,500, were at 4 per cent. In the corresponding week last year there were recorded 500 mortgages, for $6,171,135, of which 187, for $2,170,083, were at 5 per cent.; 252, for $2,600,506, were at more, and 61, for $1,400,546, were at less.

Richmond Hill

Borough of Queens, L. I., 15 minutes from 34th St. Ferry, L. I. R. R. Frequent trains night and day; 40 minutes via trolley car to City Hall, Manhattan. IT IS ON THE DIRECT LINE OF IMPROVEMENTS. The two East River Tunnels in course of construction will bring RICHMOND HILL within a few minutes' ride of any section of Manhattan.

Richmond Hill as a residential suburb has had a steady and healthy growth, due to its many advantages, beautiful surroundings and reasonable terms for purchasing homes. There are the best school facilities, including High School, churches of all denominations, club houses, bank, fine golf course, etc. All the streets are macadamized, have flagged sidewalks, full grown shade trees, gas and water mains.

I have beautiful dwellings for sale in all sections of Richmond Hill; also plots for building purposes.

Now is the time to invest. For full particulars regarding the same, write or call on

FRED. PHILLIPS Agent for Man estate and other principal owners.

PALISADE

¶ Looking for a Summer home? Thinking of the mountains—the seashore?

¶ Not necessary. In PALISADE you find as pure, dry air, as cool breezes, and as beautiful scenery as in mountain or ocean resorts.

¶ Here you may have your own yacht, catboat or naphtha launch, with every modern facility of landings and boat houses.

¶ Palisade is ideal in location — on the Hudson River Cliffs directly opposite the 130th Street ferry, and within 40 minutes of Wall Street—a suburb where investments are bound to double and quadruple within the next few years.

¶ And if you move to Palisade, you can do so with the positive assurance that you will be fully protected by our building restrictions—a condition almost impossible to find elsewhere over such a vast area as one thousand acres.

¶ Let us send you our Palisade book, and any day you can spare an hour or two let us show you over the territory which we are converting into The Model Suburb of New York.

¶ Houses range in price from $10,000 to $30,000—some a trifle less.

FREE EXCURSION TO ATLANTIC CITY

Railroad fare will be paid within the radius of 1000 miles to all who purchase lots at

VENTNOR By the Sea

ON THE SAME ISLAND AND SAME BEACH, and immediately adjoining Atlantic City. Ventnor is not a barren tract, but already built up, flourishing under prosperous city government, with well conducted hotels and many summer residences.

When one considers that lots 1,000 feet from the ocean and Boardwalk can be purchased for

$150.00 each and upwards

$10.00 Down and $1.50 Per Week and then compare it with lots on the same beach, not half a mile away, which are worth $25,000.00, the tremendous opportunity for profit is most plausible. Full information, references, testimonials, etc., on application to the

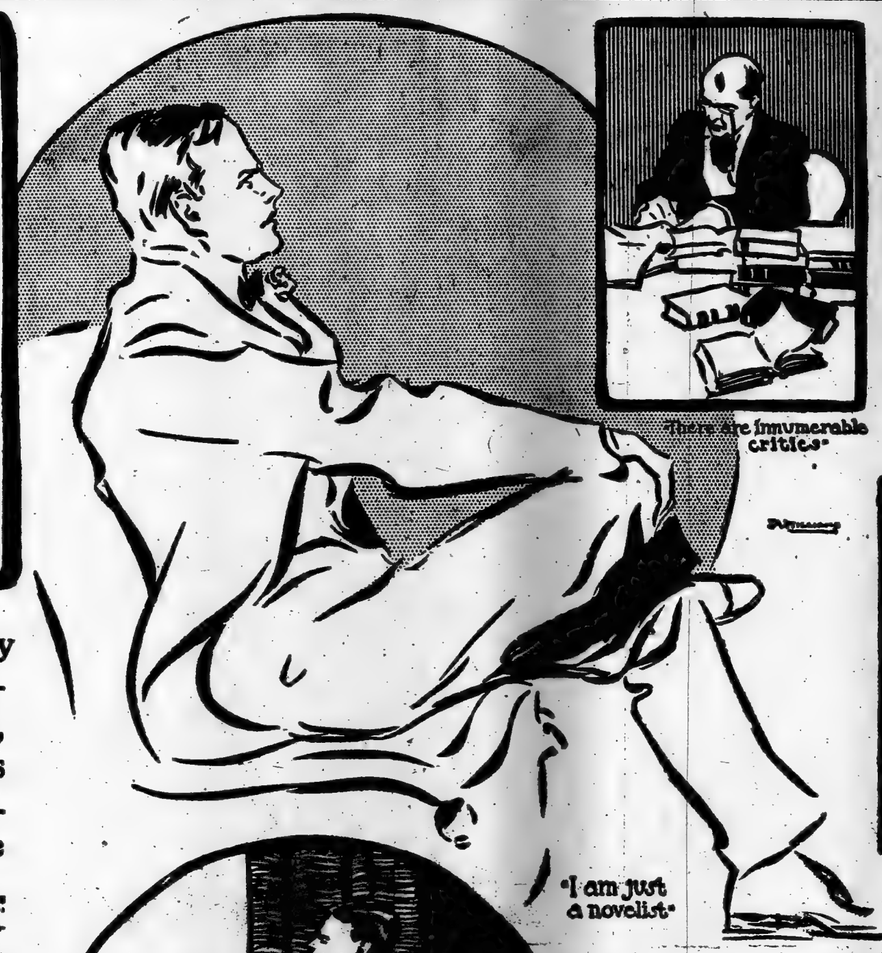
A Man in Earnest Is "The Plum Tree's" Author

David Graham Phillips, His Personality, Progress in Literature, and Point of View.



"There are innumerable critics."

"Believes himself superior in knowledge." ~ ~

"Grew sickly and pale in the yellow glitter of his gold."

"The artistic temperament."

"I am just a novelist."

Believes Hard Work Worth Infinitely More than "Artistic Temperament"---A College Man Himself, He Says Some Sharp Things About Latter-Day American College Graduates.

A T a club (anonymous while it lived) where congenial spirits used to meet and make the one room they rented reek with the atmosphere of smoke and all the 'ologies unknown to fact, there was one sane man who printed these lines in large letters on the wall:

You may talk and you may dribble,
You may laugh and you may quibble,
You may drink or even scribble,
But:
For God's sake, use your brains!

The verses came back to me after I had spent an hour or so with David Graham Phillips, the young American novelist who exhibits in his latest book, "The Plum Tree," his faith in the literal meaning of that proverb "The pen is mightier than the sword."

Phillips is the sort of man who makes a tacit appeal not merely to his readers but to every one and everything within point of contact to him, "For God's sake, use your brains!"

He is the sort of man who makes a Gothamite feel uncomfortable because the things that he believes really count in the world are not being done in New York. Of course, there is a great deal "doing" here, but New York, according to men like Phillips, is very much like the drunkard who, though being observed by a Bishop, was unabashed, while the Bishop, (whom for illustration we will call Bishop S.,) said to a friend as he watched the drunkard, "There goes Bishop S. but for the grace of God."

It is a pleasure to meet a man who has enthusiasm and does not become a white vapor in the process. There are several strong points about this young novelist that are especially interesting and enlightening to men and women who are trying to make their literary voices worth while in the scheme of American life. It is not often so young a man gains so mature and easy a balance of the world he rides his own way and drives his own way without being pitched off neck and crop into the crowded ditch of conventional darkness. Any man who tries to cut loose the barriers that bind and oppress these delicate fairy things of our primitive intention called ideals must train himself to be an expert judge of the wicked modern "system" that enslaves while it can and crushes when it must.

Phillips would make an ideal representative of the Government in some virgin soil where he could draw out of the raw material upon an annexed land in the far Orient, say, a living, breathing republic of justice, honor, and self-reliance.

How many American Consuls abroad would appreciate the moral of my friend's lines: "For God's sake, use your brains!" without applying the words to their political training?

Men in all professions get brain fag, which is enlightening in its reaction, but the political brain never fags; it has no reaction, it passes from under the eye of the boss, and is no more.

These are reminiscent observations of Phillips; he leaves you full of glaring, meaty truths; he is not merely making literature as a classical occupation; he is a man who is afire with the smoldering embers of facts that other writers pass by; he digs industriously in the neglected ash heap of men's rotten motives.

He plays with nothing; he works and he achieves. He is a particularly patient example to the young American writer who staggers into the market with wavering indecisions as to motives, style, editors, and revenue. His first book was called "The Great God Success."

"I worked on the manuscript while I was writing editorials for a New York daily," he said. "Political editorials, and I had a chance to see the truth, even if the editorials didn't permit me to tell it. I was impressed with the awful failures among men who were avowed great worldly successes. How unhappy they were, how puerile in their motives, how unattainable happiness or contentment was to them, and then how small a percentage of brains had brought all this about. Could the brain of a multi-millionaire be compared in quality and literal superiority to the brain of a professional man, for instance, who lived in the calm, sure light of intellectual exercise, while the other grew sickly and pale in the yellow glitter of his gold? Did his success give him any reward that was commensurate with his efforts? Why shouldn't the triumph of a man who thinks steadily, industriously, clearly, about the more unselfish problems of life be as great as the triumph of money that another man has selfishly accumulated and establish for him a supremacy of success? That a few men should hold in their power eighty millions of people is not success, nor is it possible that their brains are in a mathematical ratio of equation so much mightier than those eighty millions of people they control. No, they are merely victims of circumstances, the figureheads of conditions over which they had no control. Things were lying around loose; it is a vast country; there were not so many people as there are now, and they just grabbed as much as they could hold at an opportune time."

"And they are still holding on."

"Of course; but you can't tell me that they will hold on much longer. They are making themselves more un-American every day; they are expatriating themselves. They are trying to introduce a class distinction, but that will never be. The ballot box will straighten them out; it will all be assimilated peacefully, by laws that the people will make for them. In the meantime, their success is an empty sham, and their superiority of brains a superstition."

He was not bitter, or vindictive, or facetious in tone or manner; the vision was too broad for any narrow, scurrying impulses, and you will never find the young novelist playing with any ideas he writes about.

"I believe that a man must dignify his work with sincerity and stiffen it with some degree of conscience to make it worth while," he said, warmly.

His first book found a publisher without any difficulty, and he went on in the line of American feeling of American life, which his temperament inspired for him. "I couldn't write about Dukes and Counts and that sort of people, who live largely upon American snobs, whom they curtsey to for money, but whom they secretly despise as vulgarians. I don't know much about them, to begin with, and that ought to be enough. How can you write about something you don't know?"

He talked rapidly, fluently, with the impulses of a mind trained to trace carefully, persistently, the distance between detail and incident, and their accumulation of proof as to actual character.

"This matter of giving life to the pages of a novel," he said, "is the result of industrious study of people. There is in every human being a main current, a big temperamental artery, which is character. Now, it is possible, if you are neglectful of this main purpose in your story, to get lost in psychologic eddies, in little counter-currents and undercurrents, in the backdraughts of your imagination. I never fancied or could see the valuable intention of that delicate scrollwork some writers attempt and call psychologic analysis. Man is first and foremost an influence by reason of his character. He may have fits, but they do not belong nor are they a part of his character."

"You do not encourage any theory as to the form of a story?" I asked.

"I prefer ideas every time. Ideas in any form are first rate. The style will come to a writer, but sometimes the ideas are lacking. That theory of Flaubert's was the ruin of Robert Louis Stevenson, whose endeavor to imitate other writers was falsely applauded by the critics, and he lost his identity, his originality, thereby. A writer who is worrying about form and style is like the speaker who devotes his last spare moments before the speech in waxing his mustache and curling his hair and otherwise studying his gestures before the mirror when he should be busy thinking about his ideas and trusting to nature to give him the graces of delivery. Writing is the result of thinking about things to write about and studying the most trivial details of action in contemporaneous life, so that you may set them down, not imaginatively, but accurately. A novelist has to hang to his ideas night and day as jealously as an east side Hebrew sticks to a bargain problem. There isn't any time to waste on poses; you're too busy making notes."

Nothing could shake Phillips's self-confidence in methods nor his Americanism of vision, two instances of the value of his example to the young contemporaries of American fiction.

"Why is it so many talented men and women never get over the frontier line of promise?" I had asked this question of older, more experienced writers, but without such satisfaction as Phillips gave in his instinct for truth.

"Because they are afflicted with what they call the artistic temperament. Now, the artistic temperament is nothing but idleness or dyspepsia. If any symptoms of artistic temperament appear, fight to the death. Work, work whether you want to or not. You must exercise your brain as scientifically as you do your muscles. I throw away a whole day's writing sometimes, but I am satisfied at least I've done a day's work, and it has kept my steam up, and prevented me from rusting, lagging behind. I've learned something, too. You can't work an hour at anything without learning something."

"Is criticism valuable to the young writer?" I asked, for Phillips was one of them, although among those in the lead. And here he showed why he had gained the front so rapidly, because of a fixed, positive confidence in the vitality of his profession, in the dignity and possibility of the American novelist.

"There's a thing a man should be very careful about. Criticism! It sounds very formidable, though it really is extremely useful, but it is one of the reconstructions in intellectual progress that we need in this country.

"There are innumerable critics, but very little criticism, and the best-sounding kind is the most misleading. The trouble all comes from England, where Oxford and Cambridge turn out men all of one cut, one brain, one frilled and starched mental vision. The college man is a dangerous dummy stuffed with the principle that it is better to be a precieuse, a mechanical figure with fixed wires to pull fixed literary principles, than to live shoulder to shoulder with each other in the simplicity of mutual human weakness.

"The American colleges, particularly those in the East, are turning out row upon row of men all cut in the same way, all drilled to believe themselves superior in intellectual knowledge, all encouraging that most un-American thing called class and culture."

Phillips was a college man himself, he admitted, and the strength of these convictions he was expressing so enthusiastically became interesting as an example of his literary method, that is fearless, that is thinking truth for truth's sake, and that is tireless in its grip on ideas as a bulldog is on a strange pair of trousers.

"What we need is constructive criticism in this country, that not only tears down, but instructs the writer how to build up—a criticism that is not superolious, that is not airing its literary vanity at the expense of the young writer who has, perhaps, erred only in enthusiasm of honesty toward his subject, and is scolded by the precieuses for pessimism. In France they have overcome this masquerade of education which a college diploma assumes to be knowledge. In France a young artist has only to show his work to be instantly recognized by his own. A young man who had been trying for sixteen years to get his pictures exhibited in New York and could never get anywhere near the daylight went to Paris a few weeks ago. His pictures were at once acknowledged there, the newspapers have devoted columns to him, and now he can come back to America, and the critics will say, 'He has improved marvelously.' That's what I mean. We need an emancipation from the old standards of criticism, the standards established by the college curriculum, that stuffs more dead language into a young man than would be inflicted on a corpse. Let's have a constructive criticism; let's hear what the untrained mind is doing, no matter how crudely, with the busy problems that this great modern struggle for life enforces. There should be no such thing as a superior mind in a mighty country where the destiny of conquest has been planted in every heart, in every brain.

"In Germany their intellectual emancipation is comparatively new; people have little idea how new it is, because it has become so big and strong and virile in so short a time. They have discovered that a humble carpenter thinks, that he has a brain that works incessantly, faster than his hands, and that instead of scholarly and dusty forms of a university stamp, the good man has ideas, real, live, available ideas, and they put him on a platform and get the crowd around him not because they think he is superior, but because he has ideas, God bless him!"

Education was a false god, a tiresome wooden idol that Phillips understood as thoroughly as he had estimated the political system to be a misguided element of graft.

But to the young writer who is about to yield to the influences of [illegible] Phillips, let me say, at no time does confuse a merely personal feeling of [illegible] tice with the strict intentions of his editing as a novelist.

"I have no mission, no purpose, no cult. I am just a novelist, telling as accurately as I can what I see, and trying to hold my job with my readers," he said quietly in this relation.

"What a man feels deeply, I suppose he handles reverently, and any clever man can choose his way along the brilliant paths of epigram and culture like the very great mind that wrote 'The Importance of Being Earnest,' or along the highway of life in its hours of labor, and work, and legitimized larceny that makes up what is known as the social scheme in the midst of which we are pushed about more or less seriously, as 'The Plum Tree' tells us."

The author of this novel is going to keep on writing them; nothing can kill his instinct of unvarnished truth, and no psychologic quicksands can lure his ambitious talents to their doom.

I told him about a trust magnate, who was reported to be ill, an account of the adverse criticism he had aroused against a sincerely charitable motive.

"No doubt it's quite true. I shouldn't be surprised if he died," said Phillips, with an ominous quiet; "but, then, it's an unjust world. One man acquires $80,000,000 without doing the world any good, and another man writes a story that entertains and perhaps enlightens, and he does not get as much. I consider the man who has written the story deserves $80,000,000 if he could only get it. Of course, it's an unjust world. It's a great pity to think of a lot of fellows locked up for murder in Sing Sing, for instance. I can quite see that, given conditions and circumstances, almost any man might be in the same position. I might have been one myself. And there you are; the poor people who couldn't get that $80,000,000, instead of being thankful for what they have escaped, are jealous and cruel to the man who has got it. And they don't really know how he got it; they are only guessing, and he won't tell them his private business, and there is no reason why he should," and the refrain of those lines came back forcefully to me:

You may talk and you may dribble,
You may laugh and you may quibble,
You may drink or even scribble,
But:
For God's sake, use your brains!

PEINDEINNIS.

Mr. Punkin Has Something to Say About the War in Manchuria

MR. PUNKIN limped slowly into Ab. Risley's store, and sat down in his accustomed chair nearest the stove. After lighting his pipe he crossed one leg very laboriously over the other. The pipe was a bit contrary at first, but when a few hardy puffs had enabled it to strike its gait, Mr. Punkin leaned back and sighed as if in pain.

Euky Mears, the shoemaker, sat only a few feet from Mr. Punkin, and upon hearing the sigh turned toward him and said:

"Rheumatis, Uncle Tobe?"

"Yes, Euky, what is known as th' dupliket bran ov rheumatis; two complete outfits—right an' lef'. When one breaks down th' yuther one starts up. One is workin' all ov th' time, an' both mugh ov th' time. It's gettin' no better fast, but I'm usin' lavendar an' lard. Don't yuh ever want th' rheumatis, Euky."

"I had a tech ov it wunst in my lef' shoulder but—" amachure; a man under fifty-eight never has th' perfesshunal."

"Air yuh readin' much about th' war now, Uncle Tobe?" asked young Ab. Risley.

"Well, yes, Abby, all I kin understan'. Yuh see, I wunst know'd Rooshan, but fergot it. I never could talk Japaneeze. A man's tongue has t' be split, like a raven's, befo' he kin talk that. Th' Rooshan langwidge is composed ov eighty-two letters, eighty consynents an' two vowels, an' when a Rooshan wants a word he jes' saws off about a foot ov th' alphybet, an' he may git a vowel an' he may not. I have heard that th' ol' trouble betwixt th' Rooshans an' the Poles was becuz th' Poles wanted t' interduce two mo' consynents intuh th' langwidge, an' th' Rooshans wouldn't stan' fer 'em. Ef Roosha conkered Japan th' Japs would have tuh use th'r langwidge, an' I don't blame th' Japs fuh puttin' up a strong fight."

"What air they fightin' about?" asked game of checkers.

"Manchuria, a small island in th' Red Sea, which, by th' way, b'longs t' Chiny. Esch one is fightin' t' keep th' other from gettin' it. Chiny loses no matter which way th' win' blows. Th' Chinyman allus gits th' short end ov th' string, no matter whether he's in Chiny or Chinytown. When this war fus' started lots ov people was sorry fuh Japan. Now them same people is prayin' fuh Roosha. Roosha is a great country. Its principal producks is whiskers an' bums an' consynents. Th' ruler ov th' Rooshans is called th' Csar, but fuh short they dubs him th' 'Little Father.' This is th' Rooshan fuh step-father.

"Befo' this present war was declar'd nobody had ever know'd a Jap t' do anything but turn tan'springs in a circus or make pies on a United States man-ov-war. It's true, they had licked Chiny, but that didn't count. Any man that would fight a Chinyman [illegible] dogs on a clock ot two mo[illegible]

t' Gin'ral Chou-chousky, sez he—'Take a half-dosen men an' make them fellers behave; they air gittin impudent.' An' th' Gin'ral called t'gether sev'ral ov his men—Hopsky an' Jumpsky an' Runsky an' Fiysky, who arfter bein' patted on th' head by th' Csar, marched bravely on t' th' fray."

+ + +

"What is a fray?" Bumble Bee Gilligan wanted to know.

"Fus' cousin t' a fracas," grunted Mr. Punkin impatiently.

"In three days they was in a rat trap an' Roosha had t' pay one per cent. more fuh loans. Then Admiral Neverbendsky arrived on th' scene with a reputashun an' a breast full ov medals. His fleet was composed of 'The Tchwikitswchsky,' 'The Xswqsivwsky,' 'The Nxomrusky,' an' 'The Mrs. Tompkins,' all stout crafts. This fleet was distroyed in three days. In two weeks it was agin distroyed. A [illegible]ward this magnificent body [illegible] agin reported distroyed.

sunk, an' I'm tempted to b'lieve it is a cork fleet. Another fleet is on th' way t' take the'r place. It is th' Baltic fleet. It has a gloryous ricord. Las' Summer they run across three fishin' boats an' reduced them t' ruins in four hours, without any loss ov life on the'r part, an' didn't even lose a prisoner. Th' Baltic fleet is now near Madygaskar, a small islan' in Lake Superior, an' is makin' fuh th' North Pole with all poss'ble speed. Th' mos' remarkable thing about this war is th' enthusiasm ov' the Rooshans that didn't go t' th' front. Every mornin' eight men stan's in front ov th' Csar's front po'ch an' yells fuh Roosha an' th' success ov Rooshan arms, an' while these fellers is shoutin' ten thousan' long-whiskared rascals is down in th' cellars splittin' the'r brains tryin' t' make dynamite do three times th' work 'twas made t' do. One ov th' most powerful organizashuns in Roosha is the 'Bum Throwers' Associashun. The'r[illegible] [illegible] by blastin' the'r [illegible] war is th' way th' garrison held on at Po't Arthur. Sixteen thousan' men lived eight months on a couple ov pretsels an' a little salt fish. 'Twas a great temptashun among 'em t' eat each other, but they couldn't stan' that. Th' Japs kep' hammerin' at 'em 'til they give up th' ghost."

"Who is th' Gin'ral ov 'em, Mr. Punkin?" inquired Dunk Picket.

"Kuropatkin, Dunk, an Irishman who has adopted Roosha as his home. He is a fine man, but he never seems t' know his own min'. Never knows whar he wants t' fight. He thinks he wants t' give battle in one place, an' he goes thar an' heaves up intrenchments; but about th' time th' fight ought t' begin, an' th' Japs onlimbers the'r guns, he decides that it ain't jest th' right locashun, an' he moves up a few miles. He's great on th' move, but th' Japs is greatur on th' feller. I remember th' enthusiasm that sis when Kuropatkin marched t' th' front, proposin' [illegible] th' President ov th' War Collidge. The Japs is commanded by a little duck-legged, full-chisted feller named O'Hammer, also an Irishman, but not from the same part ov Ireland that Kuropatkin is. Kuropatkin is from Londonderry, O'Hammer is from Galway. O'Hammer is a sort ov combinashun between a bull terrier an' a red wasp. Fuh many years he was a slack-wire walker with a circus. All th' Japs has early trainin' in slack-wire walkin'. It makes 'em scoople. One ov th' Jap Gin'rals, Kurotl by name—I think he was th' feller, died an' come t' life ag'in."

"Well, will th' Rooshians finally win?" asked Heck.

"They might have won long ago, Heck, but they've sent th' wrong men t' the front."

"How's that?"

"Them fellers that throws th' bums is th' ones that should have went to Manchuria; they'd have killed mosty Japs that's in Japan."

The District Attorney's Office and "The Gallery"

An Impersonal and Impartial Review of Some Spectacular Cases in the Criminal Courts of This City Which May Point a Timely Moral ---Prisoner or Criminal: Which Should Be Convicted?

"WAKE me up when Kirby dies!"

The "Kirby" of this once familiar New York saying, still heard occasionally among old-timers, was leading man at the Chatham Theatre more than sixty years ago. In the part of Marteau, in the play of "The Carpenter of Rouen," he commended himself greatly to the gallery gods. Especially was his death scene terrific beyond words. Night after night the house was crowded, and when Kirby died all over the stage he did so to an audience silent and spell-bound, hanging on his slightest motion and lowest-whispered word.

But occasionally some gallery god was sleepy, and could not keep awake. Then, with the injunction that he was to be called when Kirby died, he would lay his head on the shoulder of his steady company, or on that of some friend, and slumber until the great moment came.

For many years past, under all its administrators—Tammany, Anti-Tammany or Reform—the District Attorney's office of this county has imitated Hudson Kirby's example, and gallery play has followed gallery play continuously. The office staff is practically made up on the lines of a theatrical company. The District Attorney himself is the manager and as such may choose his own parts. As a rule he plays heavy parts that require little study, but provide a dignified setting for him. He comes into court to ask for a heavy sentence, or when some motion is to be made, and lends the light of his countenance to his assistants who are doing the work, speaks a few well chosen words to court and counsel, and solemnly nods his satisfaction when the learned Judge agrees with his assistant or frowns only less terribly than Jove if the motion is not granted by the court.

The leading man of the company is the Chief Assistant District Attorney. He is "featured" and gets all the "fat parts," as an actor might say—has the right to try all the cases that attract public attention, to do all the good heavy work that the manager does not want for himself, to take the stage whenever the District Attorney is not posing in the limelight himself.

All the other members of the company are feeders for him. The second assistant understudies him to some extent, and these two well-graced actors monopolize the best parts in every play put on.

Then there are utility men and walking gentlemen. These latter are young lawyers who are practically but not officially studying criminal law in the city's service. Many of them work their way up from thinking to speaking parts, and after their apprenticeship in the District Attorney's office is ended make more or less fat names for themselves in defending persons accused of crime. These are the youngsters told off to look after the ragtag and bob-tail cases, to try cases where convictions are not desired.

And how the gallery rings with applause! Look back a few years at the leading men of recent District Attorneys' companies. Randolph B. Martine had John R. Fellows; Fellows himself, when he took the company, retained the leading parts; De Lancey Nicoll had Francis Wellman; Fellows, when he had a second term, retained Wellman, and then took John F. McIntyre; Olcott had Jacob Schurman; Gardiner relied on McIntyre, Philbin on James W. Osborne, while Mr. Jerome, the present District Attorney, stars William M. Rand, Jr.

All this has several results. First, it tends to exaggerate the importance of any case in which the featured performer appears. Secondly, it tends to bring about the "nursing" of particular cases, to cause them to be worked up at the expense of other cases; to be exploited beyond their intrinsic merits, until it seems almost as if crimes were committed to provide "fat parts" for chosen District Attorneys, instead of District Attorneys existing to aid in punishing crime.

Another result is that too often the District Attorney, having featured a case and its prosecutor, has found himself defeated, and then has dropped the matter for good, regardless of the fact that the original crime has gone unpunished. Of course, he and his assistants may have fastened upon the person finally acquitted as the only possible criminal, so that his acquittal leaves them absolutely unable to seek another criminal; such accidents have happened in our system of trial by jury. But the result of the habit of playing to the gallery is that the public gets the idea that the District Attorney is apt to take the first possible criminal who appears, to pursue him to the last, and then, when he is found innocent, is without the means or inclination to trace any other likely criminal.

Between 1892 and 1901, a writer noted in the latter year, there had been four criminal cases in this county which had cost the people at least $1,000,000. Two of these, exploited for the delectation of the gallery, had ended in conviction—the cases of Carlyle Harris and Dr. Buchanan; the others ended in failures to convict—the cases of Dr. Kennedy and Roland B. Molineux. And since 1901 the District Attorney's office has handled other cases which must have added considerably to the million dollars on the debit side of its accounts four years ago.

The case of Dr. Kennedy and "Dolly" Reynolds began in the Summer of 1898. About 9:30 on the morning of Aug. 16 the body of Emeline or "Dolly" Reynolds was found in a room of the Grand Hotel. When the Coroners' physician made an autopsy he found pinned to the woman's corset a check for $13,000 drawn by "David Gideon," and indorsed "Samuel J. Kennedy." Within a few hours of the discovery of the body the police had arrested Dr. Kennedy at his home on Staten Island, and held him for the murder.

The prosecutor and the detectives promptly decided that Kennedy and "Dolly" Reynolds had been partners in betting at the race tracks; that they had won, but that Kennedy had refused to give the woman her share of the winnings; that she had pursued him, demanding an accounting; that he had given her a bad check for the amount of her share; that he had determined to get it back from her, had made an appointment with her at the Grand Hotel, and in getting the check from her had murdered her.

Now, it is conceivable that a man, having given a bad check to a woman and wishing to recover it, might kill her and depart with the check, but that after running into danger he should go away without the check, without trying to find it—the Coroners' physician found it easily—is beyond any but police imagination.

But police imagination, like the daughter of Heth in the story, who was 300 cubits long and 50 broad, and pitched within and without with pitch, is fearfully and wonderfully made, and it had no difficulty in deciding that Dr. Kennedy had committed the crime.

The District Attorney was Major Asa Bird Gardiner, a retired Judge Advocate of the army. His leading actor was Mr. John F. McIntyre, who had the star part in prosecuting Dr. Kennedy.

On March 31, 1898, Kennedy was convicted, and thereafter he was taken to Sing Sing to await execution.

During the trial the detectives produced a curiously shaped bludgeon, composed of a piece of lead pipe with an iron rod thrust into one end, and held in place by a wrapping of bicycle tire tape. Dr. Kennedy was a bicycle rider, and the detectives swore that they had found this bludgeon in the cellar of his house. They produced further a pair of underdrawers on one leg of which was a dull black mark such as a piece of lead would make if carried next to it, and these they swore they had found in the dentist's house.

Kennedy's counsel took an appeal from the conviction, which failed, and his chances seemed very slight. His wife and his friends, however, were unwearied in his behalf, and applied to the Court of Appeals for a rehearing on the ground of newly discovered evidence. A special Commissioner investigated this, reported that it was germane to the case, and the Court of Appeals ordered a new trial.

The new evidence was largely to prove an alibi. Two Staten Island hackmen swore that they saw Kennedy reach the island by the last boat, as he had said in his confession that he had reached it.

Then a local plumber testified that the detectives, who had previously sworn that they had searched the dentist's house on Aug. 16, again on Aug. 21, and a third time on Aug. 28, when they found the leaden bludgeon, had visited his shop on the last date; that he had showed them the difference in looks between a lead pipe cut with a saw and a piece cut with a knife, and further, that after they had gone he had missed a piece of pipe of the same size as that produced as Kennedy's club. He swore, too, that there was no lead pipe used in the plumbing in Kennedy's house, so that he could have had no reason for keeping such pipe there, or for working it with a metal vise, which the detectives also produced.

This trial ended in a disagreement of the jury. A third trial began on May 6. The case was prosecuted by Mr. James W. Osborne, the leading man, for the new District Attorney. He dropped Mr. McIntyre's theory, obtained from the police, and accepted wholly, that Kennedy had gone to the hotel on purpose to murder "Dolly" Reynolds; but he reached the same end by assuming that he had killed her while trying by force to get the check from her.

Yet he had gone away without the check!

Handwriting experts played an important part in this trial; in fact, so many were retained by the prosecution in this and in other cases that there was a suggestion that the District Attorney had cornered the expert market. It was owing to the number of such witnesses and to the length of their examination that this trial lasted until June 16, when the jury was discharged without agreeing.

On June 20 Kennedy was released on $10,000 bail, and on Feb. 19, 1903, he was discharged unconditionally.

The three trials had cost the County of New York nearly if not quite $100,000. They had attracted attention from the gallery, but when the last trial was ended the whole matter was dropped. With all the efforts of the police, the crime had not been fastened on Dr. Kennedy, but the police made no effort to place it on any one else. "Dolly" Reynolds's murder has not yet been avenged.

Quite as good an instance of playing to the gallery as the Kennedy case is that of Molineux.

On Dec. 24, 1898, Harry Cornish, manager of the since dead Knickerbocker Athletic Club, received by mail, according to his own story, a silver bottle stand containing a small bottle of bromo seltzer. He did not know who sent it, but took it home the next day, and forgot about it. On Dec. 28 the aunt with whom he lived, Mrs. Kate Adams, complained of a headache, and Cornish, remembering the bromo seltzer, prepared a dose for her. She complained of the taste, and to show her that it was harmless Cornish himself tasted the mixture in her glass.

Within a few moments Mrs. Adams was dead, and Cornish himself—by his own testimony—felt very unwell. Nevertheless he ran for a doctor, who pronounced Mrs. Adams dead. The doctor also tasted the mixture; then he and Cornish went home and drank whisky and ate apples to counteract the effect of the poison. They used no other antidotes.

Meantime, Mrs. Rodgers, Mrs. Adams's daughter, telephoned to Mr. McIntyre of the District Attorney's office, who was an intimate friend. He dropped his work and came up, and tried to keep the matter secret. In fact, the newspapers had heard of the matter and had characterized it as a murder before the police and the Coroners' office had been notified.

When Cornish was asked if he suspected anybody, he said that the writing on the package resembled that of Roland B. Molineux, who had left the club because Cornish as manager had had more influence than he as a member of the Directorate.

Molineux was a chemist by profession, manager of a color factory, where he had a private laboratory where he could compound poisons if he wished to do so. A long inquest was held, at the end of which Molineux was arrested and held for murder.

The indictment against Molineux was found on July 20, 1899. On Oct. 30 Col. Gardiner had the case removed to the Criminal Term of the Supreme Court, and seven days later had it moved back to the Court of General Sessions. This naturally was a fillip to public interest.

On Nov. 14, 1899, the trial began.

Mr. Osborne was Col. Gardiner's leading man, and he played his part with enthusiasm. Days were spent in getting a jury; the examination of witnesses, especially of handwriting experts, occupied many weeks. Finally, Molineux's counsel introducing no defense, the case went to the jury, which on Feb. 16, 1900, three months after the trial began, brought in a verdict of guilty at 11:30 at night. Most remarkable of trials in New York County, its verdict had hardly been rendered before the crowds in the streets around the Court House began to cheer the convicted murderer, and he went to his cell amid the shouts of thousands of people.

Sixteen months were spent in preparing the case on appeal. When completed that made a volume of 3,207 pages, containing 12,976 folios, besides 155 exhibits. This document was filed in June, 1901, the case was argued at a special session of the Court of Appeals, and a new trial was ordered on Oct. 15, 1901.

Nearly a year later this second trial began, and on Nov. 11, 1902, almost exactly three years since the first trial began, the second one ended with a verdict of "Not guilty."

It would be interesting to know how much of the second trial was a gallery play. For it is said that politicians high in the counsel of their party in this State were interested in having Roland Molineux acquitted; that distinguished officers of the civil war worked in his favor; that an up-country Judge who had never sat in New York before, and has not sat here since, and was then running for re-election, was brought down especially to decide questions in Molineux's favor. It is a fact that to this learned Judge the prisoner was "Mr. Molineux"; the chief witness for the prosecution "This man Cornish."

That is the story. If so, did the District Attorney know it? His chief deputy, enthusiastically, though with less ferocity than at the first trial. Was the whole trial a farce under pretense of being a tragedy?

That is an interesting question. Meantime the murder of Mrs. Adams has dropped out of sight; it is still unavenged.

Early in the morning of Saturday, Feb. 15, 1902, Walter Brooks was found unconscious in a room in the Glen Island Hotel, at West and Cortlandt Streets, this city. A physician was called, prescribed, and went away. Called again some hours later, he found the man still unconscious, and advised his removal to a hospital. There Brooks died, without regaining his senses. Examination showed that he had been shot in the back of his head.

Brooks had come to the hotel with a young woman, who had been seen by the bellboy as she entered, but had departed unseen by any person connected with the hotel. The police, carrying out the well-understood plan of arresting some one, made a prisoner of Florence Burns, a young Brooklyn woman who had been seen with Brooks on many occasions.

It seemed like an easy case. On the mantelpiece of the room where Brooks was found was a comb similar to one worn by Florence Burns; the bellboy identified the girl as the woman who had come to the hotel with Brooks, and there were other alleged facts that seemed to point to her guilt, such as a threat to kill Brooks if he did not marry her.

But a simple obstacle interfered with the proposed gallery play of the District Attorney's office. Florence Burns stood on her rights!

The District Attorney proposed to indict her at once, and subpoenaed his witnesses for the Grand Jury for Monday, Feb. 17, only two days after Brooks's death. But Florence Burns, through her counsel, demanded an examination before a committing Magistrate. The District Attorney and his staff were much distressed at this contretemps; but they had to yield—Florence Burns's counsel was a former District Attorney of Kings County, who knew the methods of the trade.

It was difficult to find a committing Magistrate willing to sit; at last Judge Mayer of the Court of Special Sessions, recently appointed, consented to hear the case.

The proceedings were simple: Florence Burns's counsel refused to help the District Attorney convict his client.

"If you want to hold her for the Grand Jury," he said in effect, "get your own evidence."

The District Attorney and the police could not get their evidence. The bell boy was put on the stand, and his identification fell to pieces under the cross-examination of the woman's counsel.

George Washington, the bell boy, was questioned at the police station, and described the woman who came with Brooks as having dark hair and dark complexion, and "not what you would call a clear white woman." Then he was brought into the room where the Burns girl and other women were standing. The other women were two in number; one a newsdealer, wrapped in shawls and coats—it was a bitter February day—the other [illegible] into the station house from next door to see if a missing child had been found. When Washington was asked if among the three he could see the woman who had entered the hotel with a well-dressed young man, he naturally did not pick out either the newsdealer or the woman from the neighborhood.

Then, it is said, the police in their enthusiasm overlooked certain evidence; possibly that of a watchman, who saw a woman on the steps of the hotel with Brooks, who was not Florence Burns.

The examination lasted for more than a month, and on March 22 Judge Mayer discharged the girl in an opinion that made a sensation. This is a part of what he said:

"Three facts exist here: First, the failure of the State to prove that Florence Burns was the woman who occupied Room 12 of the Glen Island Hotel on the night of Feb. 14.

"Secondly, the failure of the State to prove that the comb found in Room 12 of the Glen Island Hotel was the property of the prisoner.

"Thirdly, the threats Florence Burns was declared to have made against Brooks, though indicating animus on her part, were without significance unless it were proved that the woman at the hotel had been the prisoner.

"George Washington described the woman as having dark hair and a dark complexion, 'not what you would call a clear white woman.' Florence Burns is unusually fair. In the light of this contradictory evidence the most vital part of the case may be considered as being against the prosecution.

"I therefore decide that on Feb. 14, 1902, at the Glen Island Hotel, in the Borough of Manhattan, in the City of New York, a crime was committed in that Walter Brooks was shot to death and murdered; and I further decide that there is no evidence to hold Florence Burns, the defendant, and I therefore discharge her."

Ten days after this opinion was rendered the inquest into the death of Brooks began. It lasted for nearly two months, from April 2 to May 20. The same policy on the part of the defense, of making the detectives detect, again tied the hands of police and prosecutor.

For seven weeks the case dragged on. The authorities spun the inquest out, hoping not so much to find the slayer of Brooks as to get hold of the girl who would not help them.

At last the gallery got tired—it didn't care whether Kirby died or not; so the case was brought to an end, the jury rendering a verdict that Brooks had been killed by some one unknown.

Is not this, has been asked, one of the most striking cases of playing to the gallery by the District Attorney? A Magistrate hears evidence for a month—evidence for and against a girl arrested on suspicion of committing a murder, and at the end of the examination, on the people's testimony, discharges her. Yet so insistent are the District Attorney and his office that she is the murderess that they absolutely refuse to stir a step to find any one else who might have killed the man. It is not, [illegible]

There they may believe that the failure to convict was a miscarriage of justice, and that to prosecute another person would be wrong. But this is not such a case. It more resembles a case of sulks. The District Attorney's office picked out a likely person as the murderess, but he could produce no evidence whatever against her. So like a child who declares loudly that he "won't play," the Public Prosecutor refuses to try further to discover the real murderer.

Do not these three cases outlined indicate a lack of appreciation of his duties on the part of successive District Attorneys of New York County? Here are three murders; the police make three arrests. The arrests were made properly; that is, there was prima facie evidence against the three persons arrested.

But with the taking into custody of the three persons, the propriety of the action ended. There seems to have been no further investigation into the matter, no attempt to prove beyond a doubt that no other person could have committed the crimes, but merely an insistence that the person arrested was guilty—an insistence that in one case may have led to the manufacture of evidence; in another to the suppression of evidence.

The duty of the District Attorney's office is to do justice, to convict the criminal. Does it not seem at times in practice as if its duty were to convict some one, any one, as the criminal?

J. G. B.

FOR TENDER CONSCIENCES.

"IF you're on the water wagon and want to keep your conscience clear," remarked a man to his companion as they walked along a street on the edge of the Tenderloin, "go to that drug store across the street."

"A riddle!" returned the companion. "Explain!"

"Well, they sell a drink or two there, which, if they aren't plain bond, are so near to it there's not much difference. All the same, it's a soft drink, technically speaking. If you're careful not to make inquiries as to the composition of it you can drink, smack your lips, and go away with a deep glow of satisfaction and a very diminutive feeling of guilt. So there you are."

Which hints broadly at a dark secret. There are two or three drinks being sold now which serve almost entirely to keep those sworn to the water wagon in an artificial state of grace. Maybe some time there will be a sort of Anthony Comstock upheaval, and certain signs will be taken down from certain soda fountains—but that hasn't happened yet. Meanwhile the establishment which dispenses these liquid solaces captures a trade that makes the fancy red and yellow bottles in the rival place across the street turn green with envy.

And they do say that the drug stored with the nippy beverage has a large proportion of feminine patronage. The most careful and conventional dowager lady with scruples can take the "delicious and harmless" drink without offense either to her own or to anybody else's sense of propriety.

IMMUTABILITY.

WITHIN your arms you hold the wealth of years,
Old Time—yes, all the gold of yesterday,
All of love's sunshine and the bitter grey
Of tears—oh, the great multitude of tears—
For everything is yours within the spheres
To give or take, or break, or keep for aye—
Nor heed you e'en one mad cry of dismay,
But gather on until all disappears.
Yet love is sweet and we are not so old,
Nor did the gods mean us to separate.
O Time, you cannot take my love from me,
Life has so much, so very much to hold
For each—I cannot dream it is too late
And that we'll dwell no more in Arcady.

MR CHASE AT HIS EASEL

HEAD OF AN ENGLISH BAR MAID

Only Member of the Academy and Society to be Elected to "The Ten" Favors Consolidation of Art Organizations, but Questions the Wisdom of Combining the Academy with the University.

IN THE crowded studio of William Merriwether Chase there is just enough room for a model, a sitter, or a guest—and the artist's large easel. Thereon just at present stands a big canvas with a double portrait—two beautiful young married women of fashion who live in Philadelphia, painted with the arch look and somewhat birdlike grace one sees in Watteau. Mr. Chase stands erect and quick-eyed, little changed save for the incipient snowscape of his hair from the man who, after beginning his art studies on this side of the Atlantic, passed his prentice years abroad and then returned from Munich via Paris to take the town with his "Lady Buttoning Her Glove." Since then he has been faithful to New York save for occasional flights to Holland, London, or Madrid.

Mr. Chase has been a part, and an important part, in the art life of New York, not merely as a painter in oils and pastels of landscapes, ideal figures, portraits, and still life, but as a teacher of painting. For in all probability there is no artist in America who has taught so many of the painters now making their way in the world as he. One of the pictures which made a sensation in former years is his "The Yellow Shawl," a standing figure of a young woman which belongs to the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts. He was also one of the first to appreciate the beauty of Central Park, Manhattan, and Prospect Park, Brooklyn, teaching New Yorkers to see what is worth admiring in their own city.

Mr. Chase is one of those painters who likes to surround himself with pictures by the masters of old, and eke of later date, finding great pleasure and a constant solace to the eye in the soft depth of a bit of Dutch still life and the dull glow of an old figure by some Italian minor painter unknown to fame. A little canvas by Fromentin, a bit of a panel on which Monticelli has worked, an unfinished head by Sir Thomas Lawrence act as comrades and stimulating friends. Often he may lay aside his work on some large portrait, and, for the pure pleasure of it, exercise his skillful hand on a piece of still life.

Many of these still lifes, painted as the mood happened to set that way, are eagerly sought of late by amateurs. One on a little more elaborate scale than usual as to size, which was shown at the exhibition of the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts, so pleased the buyer for the Corcoran Gallery in Washington that he paid $2,000 for it.

Mr. Chase was recently elected to the Ten American Painters to take the place of Twachtman; but without any pledge on his part to abstain from the exhibitions of other organizations to which he belongs, the Academy and Society of American Artists. "What do you think of these rumors of consolidation going about these days?" he was asked. "This talk of Academy and Society and Ten Painters uniting to form one body?"

"What do I think?" he replied, turning with a quick slap of the brush from the canvas before which he was standing and describing a comprehensive circle in the air with the point; "I think that there has been so much babble and foolishness about the disunion and hard feeling among sets of artists that the public has been led to believe we are all backbiting and quarreling. Therefore the sooner we show how exaggerated all this gossip is the better; we can do so by meeting and agreeing that the time is past for a lot of small separate organizations—that's what I think!"

"Well, that is clear enough—but how are you going about it?"

"I am not, D. V., on any joint committee, and it is for joint committees to decide the how and when. I only speak for myself and give you what I believe to be the best thing for art as matters stand to-day."

"What advantage do you think may come of such a getting together of the artists?"

"Why should it not minimize the chances of mediocrities taking the lead? They keep out good work by allowing too much wall and floor space to commonplace pictures and sculptures," answered he. "It stands to reason, does it not? that the strong men of two camps like the Academy and Society are likely to prevail over the weak, because acceptance and hanging committees will have to favor the work that will do us credit. If the Academy and Society combine their forces in one exhibition the result must be an improvement in the quality of the work shown."

"And are you in favor of the combination of the schools of the Academy with the School of Architecture of Columbia University?"

"Unfortunately I could not be present at the meeting when that policy was ratified. I doubt if I should have voted for it. Does it not seem to you that the strongest art students, I mean the cleverest and most promising, will be certain to resent college life, reject what is called the college spirit, and desert an art school which is part of a university?

"God knows," continued Mr. Chase, as if answering his own question and talking to himself, "God knows, the art students need cultivation and all the excellent influences which ought to drop from the literary academic skies on their barbarous young souls, but—". * * *

"Other Academicians seem to share your doubts, Mr. Chase. There are Brown, Beckwith, Alden Weir, and others who have protested that the question of the merger had not been properly discussed before the vote."

"Well, theoretically, you know, the idea seems excellent, and whether Columbia or the Academy will be the greater gainer it would be difficult to say—perhaps neither. I have had a deal of experience with art schools and ought to know something of students—and yet I am not setting myself up as an expert 'hors concours.' I may be wrong. Nevertheless, if you ask me for my frank opinion, I question whether an art school in university surroundings can ever attract the kind of scholars who will do great things."

"Define, define! Why do you think so?"

"How do I know? It is too complicated a matter to explain. The Ecole des Beaux Arts exists and flourishes in France, and isn't altogether a failure, * * * but would it live in this country? Young Americans are not like young Frenchmen, Dutchmen, Germans; they own the earth and want no police about."

"But our young men submit to restraints abroad."

"Very badly; but they must—and then they are hampered by the language and their position as a minority of the students. However—it isn't merely that, either * * * they don't fit into college life at all."

"You mean they have little interest in sports, as a rule, and would stand aloof?"

"Yes, and the undergraduates would reciprocate—there is no uniting them. After all, on its mechanical side, painting is like a trade, and takes up a lot of nervous and physical energy. If you draw or paint or model really hard, concentrating your energies for several hours, you don't care to rest yourself by playing football. Whereas if you are studying and poring over books, confined to a seat in a classroom, you naturally turn to athletics, sports, or some form of physical exercise as a relief. So there you are."

"Then, on the mechanical side, painting and sculpture belong with the trades?"

"Exactly! The artisan must be strong in the artist or he can never be great and permanently famous. And especially when he is studying, when he's an apprentice, it's ding-dong, training the hand, training the eye; and where's the energy and time left over for what is best in a university life? No, no! Utopia, I greatly fear!"

"But you agree that it would be better if our artists were more highly educated than they are, educated outside their profession?"

"Certainly I do. I often preach this sort of thing to my pupils, but somehow the best of them seem the most obstinate. I must confess with some humiliation that I have yet to see any very clear results from my well-meant preachments. Artists are just artists, like the little nigger with a wry neck, they's jest 'bawn so'!"

"You have a Summer class in Europe again this year?"

"Oh, yes—fifty scholars whom I shall meet this time in Madrid. Summer's the time for the Spaniards, for then they enjoy themselves baking in the sun. I expect to revel in Velasques this Summer—not forgetting Greco, Goya, and a few more, eh? It will not be so easy for us to get on with the Spanish language as it was last Summer when, as you recollect, we foregathered in London. But you know what Spain is—hospitality itself—and that grand air! By Jove! I don't think there is a nation in Europe can approach Spain. And the peasants, too, a splendid, sober, well set up lot of men one sees in the agricultural districts."

"And what about modern Spanish art?"

"In recent Salons there have been Spaniards who have revived the excitement made in his day by Fortuny. There was Zuloaga, for instance, and this year I understand that Sorella, Bastida and Henri Zo are upholding the honor of Spanish art with pictures that win much applause. The only trouble with the modern Spaniards is a lack of encouragement at home; they are still making their mark in Paris and many of them have to live in France in order to exist. * * * But, there, I've talked enough about myself. Now let me ask you a few questions. Why does THE TIMES—?"

A ring came from the telephone, and while Mr. Chase hastened to answer the call the interviewer hastened to escape an interview.

A River That Bridges Itself

UNLESS we can find some means of breaking up the huge raft that stretches in a solid mass for twenty-two miles up and down the Colorado River, in Texas, the river will have to find an outlet to the sea by joining its tremendous forces with a smaller river twenty-four miles away, and the American Continent will be provided with another natural wonder," said Government Engineer Gillespie at the Hotel Breslin. "At present we are reluctant to admit that we have found no means of breaking up the raft. It was at first only a jam of logs that three or four men might break up in an hour. But it has grown at the rate of a mile or more each year until now it stretches across the river from bank to bank, all the way from the mouth to Bay City, twenty-one miles from the sea. In some places it has become solid ground, with vegetation and trees growing upon it. Roads have been cut through over which teams cross from bank to bank, as unconcernedly as though a great river were not rolling swiftly underneath them, fretting at its self-imposed barrier.

"This monster raft has already become an object of interest to tourists. The water in the river is backed up so much by the bridge that much of the lowlands in Matagorda County has been inundated, and the safety of Bay City is threatened. Thousands of acres of rich rice producing land have become [illegible] important [illegible] [illegible]

it is that as this raft that covers the river grows larger the tunnel through which it has to pass is becoming smaller. Drift logs brought down by the Spring freshets are driven deep into the sides of the raft and into the soft mud of the river, and form a frame for the accumulation of more mud. Thus dammed, the river is rising foot by foot and overflowing the country. It is not improbable, unless this dam can be broken, that the whole face of the country in that part of Texas will be changed within twenty-five years.

"The river is about one-quarter of a mile wide and eighty feet deep where the raft has formed. It maintains these proportions for many miles from the coast. It is subject to sharp floods when the Spring rains fall, and a rise of twenty-five feet in twenty-four hours is not uncommon. As this raft has broadened and stretched further up and down the river it has thickened. Experience has shown that dynamite is not powerful enough to break it up. The trouble Gen. Dynamite Is Not a Bit Dangerous

THE recent railway accident at Harrisburg has brought out a vast amount of irresponsible talk about handling dynamite," said E. H. Clifford, a New York contractor, who has purchased tons of that explosive for blasting purposes. "The majority of persons who talk about dynamite have only a vague idea what it is. Dynamite is not the dangerous substance it is popularly supposed to be. It may be handled with absolute recklessness by an experienced man, and will not detonate except under well-defined circumstances. A detonation is about one thousand times quicker than an explosion. Dynamite detonates. It does not explode.

"Dynamite in its marketable form, in order to fit into drill holes, is shipped in sticks varying from half an inch to two inches in diameter, and from three inches to one foot in length. In the early days of its manufacture, before its properties were fully understood, there were some unaccountable explosions that gave dynamite a bad name it has never recovered from. Time has made us wiser. There is no danger at all in children finding odds and ends of dynamite thrown away by careless workmen. A child would find a great deal of difficulty in exploding it. Every now and then we read of somebody receiving a supposed infernal machine containing dynamite, which is promptly [illegible] was really dynamite it would explode just as readily, under proper conditions, if it were in twenty feet of water.

"Dynamite is nitro-glycerine held in an absorbent—wood pulp, coal dust, or other material—that will hold the explosive tightly. It is a powder of a reddish nature, varying in color with the absorbent used. The strength is calculated by the amount of nitro-glycerine absorbed by the carrier, varying all the way from 20 to 80 per cent. That generally used for blasting purposes in and around New York is 45 per cent. With the absorbent are other ingredients combined so as to obtain positive results in absorption and to guard against the danger of any free acid left in the nitro-glycerine. The latter is the only detonating property. The absorbent neither helps nor retards it.

"For commercial purposes stick dynamite is packed in twenty-five-pound to fifty-pound cases, with a liberal allowance of sawdust. It can be freighted and stored without danger provided common intelligence and care be used. It is only when ignorant persons attempt to experiment with it that it becomes a powerful destroying agency. In some States the transportation by rail is governed by strict law. John D. Rockefeller's Baronial Estate in Pocantico Hills

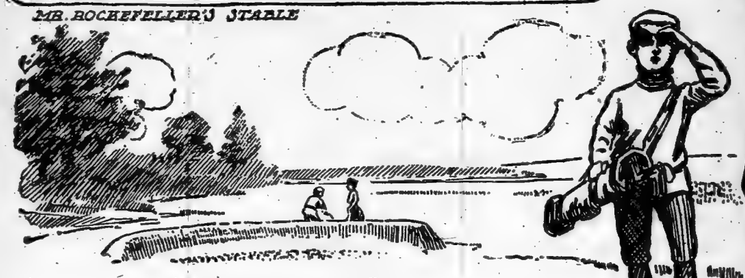
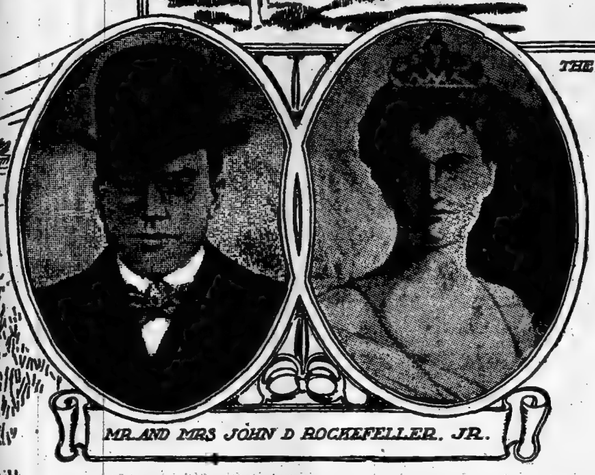
MR. ROCKEFELLER'S STABLE



MR. JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER ON THE LINKS

THE VILLA ON THE POCANTICO ESTATE



MR. AND MRS. JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, JR.

So Big that He Can Ride His New and First Automobile Seventy-five Miles Over His Own Property Without Using the Same Road Twice.

THE unexpected and serious crisis in the health of John D. Rockefeller, Jr., has temporarily checked his father's plans for building a fine mansion this Summer on his immense estate in the Pocantico hills. The ground had been staked off and operations were to have begun on May 1, when the arrival of young Rockefeller from Europe with the news that medical specialists he consulted there had failed to cure him, or even to give him hope of a cure, put everything at sixes and sevens.

The $5,000,000 or so that John D. Rockefeller has already expended in purchasing and improving Westchester County property, sometimes buying up small villages if necessary to further his plans, has been invested with the idea of leaving his only son with a suburban home that would compare with the great landed estates in England. Beginning with 500 acres in 1894, Mr. Rockefeller has gradually increased his Pocantico hills property to nearly 6,000 acres.

In his new automobile Mr. Rockefeller can ride seventy-five miles over his own property without going over the same road twice. The stables, which were part of the plans of the new buildings, are nearly completed. They cost about $300,000, and are said to be the finest private stables in this country, not excepting those on the big estate of James B. Duke, the tobacco king, at Somerville, N. J. Take the tall clock tower from Mr. Duke's fine stables, and they might be stowed away in the basement of the new stables of the oil king on his Pocantico property.

John D. Rockefeller has never built a home on this Westchester property. He bought two fine Colonial houses with the estate, and moved into one of them on top of a hill that commands a glorious view of the Hudson River. When this burned down, about two years ago, he built a seventy-five-foot observation tower on the hill, so that he could still have his fine view, and moved into the other house further down in the valley. This he surrounded, both on the ground and second stories, with glass sun parlors, until it looks now very much like a huge incubator. It is roomy and comfortable, but a shocking exhibition of architecture. The Standard Oil magnate goes there every Spring and Fall to play golf. He has a magnificent eighteen-hole course, which is the pride of his life. He plays there every morning, rain or shine. He likes to have his neighbors at Dobbs Ferry, Tarrytown, Yonkers, and Spuyten Duyvil play with him if they know the game.

Mr. Rockefeller is a good golf player, and he does not like to be bothered with other than good players. He is living on the Pocantico estate now, enjoying his golf links. But Mrs. Rockefeller is not there with him. She goes out every day or two to see how he is getting along, and Mr. Rockefeller makes occasional visits to town. But Mrs. Rockefeller does not like to live in Pocantico. Of her husband's many fine homes, her preference is for the old home in Cleveland, Ohio. It is by her wish that the Rockefeller family burial place is on a hill overlooking Lake Erie, in the beautiful Lakeview Cemetery, where President Garfield is buried. The Rockefeller monument, one of the tallest granite monoliths in the country, is already there to mark the burial place of some of Mrs. Rockefeller's closest relatives. When she is not in Cleveland, Mrs. Rockefeller prefers to live in her New York house, 4 West Fifty-fourth Street. She has fitted it up with cozy corners to her liking, and has had an elevator put in which she can run herself. There she feels in every way more comfortable than she does at Pocantico, Lakewood, or anywhere else except Cleveland.

The finest house on Mr. Rockefeller's Pocantico estate belongs to John D., Jr., but it was not built as a permanency. It is a huge, ungainly affair of thick beams and rough plaster like a Swiss chalet, which would be considered decidedly infra dig. at Newport, Tuxedo, or Stockbridge. The basement and chimneys are made from rough stone picked up on the property. The intention is that the scion of the house of Rockefeller shall move from there into the new mansion, which is to be built of Vermont granite, the same as the stables. Both John D. Rockefeller, Jr., and his wife like the Pocantico estate. It is within easy reach of their city friends and of their acquaintances in the country clubs that abound in that region. Young Mr. Rockefeller has always been willing to spend most of his Summers [illegible] of some degree or in more fashionable resorts. He went there last week, immediately on his return from Europe, and expected to remain there this Summer. But it has been decided that the air at Pocantico is not bracing enough for him. He is going to the mountains. There was a despondent note in the young man's voice and tears in his eyes as he told his Bible class last Sunday that he must give up its leadership and remain away until Fall, when he would return, "if God spared his life." Yet John D. Rockefeller is not at all despondent. He believes that a Summer's rest will put his son in fine fettle again. Some of the employes on his Pocantico estate declare that he will go ahead and build the new mansion as soon as his son is safely established in Summer quarters. He has 1,600 men engaged there laying out new driveways and carrying out improvements which he personally mapped out long ago. He is spending a small fortune in reclaiming waste lands and in improving the draining of various properties purchased. A chain of lakes and waterfalls is being built to the top of Rock Mountain to supply a fifty-thousand-dollar reservoir, from which the estate will be supplied with drinking water, and to supply high-pressure mains in case of fire.

It is not generally known that Mr. Rockefeller is a skilled civil engineer. He studied engineering as a young man, and has never lost interest in it. The Pocantico estate has been planned entirely according to his own ideas. There has not been a roadway built or a wall removed without his sanction. He laid out the golf course and the sunken rose gardens, which are about one-half the size of those in Fairmount Park, Philadelphia. Out of 100 or more cottages he has purchased in buying land he has directed which should stand and which should be torn down. One he has preserved, under the name of the Rookery, is a cottage built in 1750, in which Major André slept the night before his capture at Tarrytown. It is said that Mr. Rockefeller's first expenditure for this estate was $653,000. Six months later he added $50,000 worth of land in Sleepy Hollow. The next year he added the Kingsland farm of 207 acres, for which he paid $210 an acre. Since then he has been adding acre upon acre, mile upon mile, until people are beginning to wonder whether he wants the whole of Westchester County. He has not paid fancy prices. He has bought under the rose when necessary.

But Pocantico is the wrong place to go if one wants to hear talk about the hard-heartedness of John D. Rockefeller. Every farmer he bought out of house and home could have employment on his estate at good wages if he was willing to work. Half a dozen widows whose cottages he bought are now living in them rent free. The only thing he will not permit on his estate is hunting. Notices are nailed on trees informing men with a shotgun that John D. Rockefeller will prosecute them to the full extent of the law; and a few men who have made the test have found out that he keeps his word. Sightseers may roam all over Mr. Rockefeller's estate so long as they leave their cameras behind. He has as great a horror of them as has J. Pierpont Morgan. In the published views of Tarrytown and Sleepy Hollow one may find views of the estate of William Rockefeller, but none of John D.'s property. There are no "Keep off the grass" signs. Men about the grounds are polite in answering questions. The only prohibitory sign, which was put up this Spring, is at the head of the roadway leading to John D., Jr.'s, house. It requests visitors not to drive that way.

It is natural to make comparisons between the Rockefeller estate at Pocantico and the Duke estate of 2,000 acres at Somerville. There is scarcely any comparison to make. The Duke property is as artificial as stage money. By sheer dexterity in landscape gardening Mr. Duke has created a paradise in a wilderness, but without a hill worth mentioning and with few trees. He would probably exchange half a dozen of his artificial lakes for one of Mr. Rockefeller's hills and clusters of maple and birch. The Standard Oil magnate has acres of fine woodland where the squirrels run wild at play, and where all the songbirds of the northern woods are building their nests without fear of the predatory small boy. There are wild flowers which visitors may gather at will, and in such profusion that there seems to be no fear of their dying out, as horticulturists predict.

Just as Mr. Duke permits a man to keep a hencoop at the entrance to his estate rather than pay what he considers an exorbitant price for the land, so Mr. Rockefeller, with all his wealth, has failed to dislodge two tavern keepers from the ground where he would like to erect a fine lodge at the Pocantico entrance to his estate. One of these is a common saloon, where beer is sold from morn till night on Sundays to crowds from the city. The other is a tavern, old in the history of Westchester County, which is the resort of automobilists and carriage folk. Both are sharp thorns in Mr. Rockefeller's flesh. The saloon keeper says he will sell if he gets his price. The hotel man is rich and declares that he will not sell under any circumstances. He wants to perpetuate the tavern his father kept before him.

Once upon a time, in Cleveland, Mr. Rockefeller kept blooded horses. He has none in the Pocantico stables except two or three for breeding purposes. In his roomy stalls there is accommodation for thirty horses. He has less than twenty carriage horses on the place, although he owns four times that number. The upper floors are devoted to homes for the chauffeur and stablemen—not merely sleeping rooms, but living apartments that it would take all their salaries to hire in town. The harness room would make a turfman's eyes sparkle with delight. But Mr. Rockefeller's latest toy is his six-thousand-dollar automobile. He could not be persuaded to purchase a foreign-made machine. He bought his in Cleveland.

"I do not believe," he said to a visitor, "that foreign makers can put up an automobile fit for American roads. French machines may be all very well for racing, but I am not going to race, although," he added with a touch of pride, "I can do fifty-five miles an hour on that machine without turning a hair."

The visitor looked at the man absolutely without a hair on his head to see whether he was joking. But there was not a suspicion of a smile. Mr. Rockefeller never tries to handle the wheel himself. He likes to ride fast, and as long as he is on his own property he is in no fear of arrest for violation of the speed ordinance. His chauffeur has put a glass case around the rear of the automobile, which can be removed in fine weather, but which shelters the occupant from the wind or rain in bad weather. The new auto stands by itself in the centre of the great coach-room, and it pleases the owner to show it. A score of fine carriages, including John D., Jr.'s, yellow tally-ho, are pushed off into corners. The automobile holds the place of honor on the floor.

Anybody who does not want to talk business with Mr. Rockefeller has no difficulty in seeing him while he is at Pocantico. He is not a difficult man to approach. On business appointments it is necessary to write to his secretary, who frequently settles the matter without consulting Mr. Rockefeller at all. He is an early riser and an early rider. Tradesmen in Tarrytown see his auto before they have got their goods on exhibition for the day. But no matter where he is, Mr. Rockefeller always goes to sleep after his golf game, which ends about 1 o'clock. He is a firm believer in the healthfulness of the afternoon nap. No one, not even his wife or children, disturbs him during his midday sleep.

William T. Evans, Art Collector.

ONE of the most beautiful though by no means the largest of the many artistic residences in New Jersey is the house of Mr. William T. Evans at Montclair. It was the home of George Inness, the painter, and many of the landscapes which made his fame were painted in the neighborhood. Mr. Evans is a worthy successor to the artist, for to him more perhaps than to any other man is the living art of America beholden for encouragement.

By the prizes he offers for the best pictures at the annual exhibitions in New York and by his energy displayed as Chairman of the Art Committee in the Lotos Club, member of the Board of Governors of the Arts Club, and founder of the new Society of Art Collectors Mr. Evans has been a powerful influence for good. But it is as a collector of modern American paintings that he has done most to help promising artists. And he has occupied that somewhat difficult position without losing the respect and confidence of artists whose work he has not always been able or perhaps inclined to purchase. All this he has done as a side issue and a hobby, for he is a man in very active business whose time is gold.

From the large collection of American works at his house in Montclair a few pictures have been selected for the tinted supplement to-day. In his first collection, dispersed at an epoch-making sale, when many artists whose works had been neglected found themselves famous by reason of the high prices their pictures attained, the tendency was strongly toward landscapes and marines. But the new collection is full of figure work. During this change in American art to wider fields Mr. Evans has been a moving force, since he has encouraged figure work in the exhibitions which he aided by advice and loans, and he has helped to direct the course of art in this direction by his purchases.

It is several decades since Mr. Evans recognized the individuality of the half-poetical, half-humorous creations of Frederick S. Church. "The Witch's Daughter" is a bit from fairyland; "The Visitor," a little chapter from that Arcadia which Church has made his own, painting these imaginary scenes with a charm of color and an avoidance of sharp outlines that make them favorites with grown folk as well as children. Church has painted graver subjects, too, St. Cecilias, weird figures personifying the fog and the elements. Mr. Evans was also one of the first to appreciate the more classical bent of Will H. Low, and in his city residence placed stained glass windows by Low before that artist blossomed out as a mural painter on a large scale. The lunettes of "Music of Peace" and "Music of the Dance" reproduced to-day show the artist's skill in composition. The figures are distributed over the field in such easy poses that one has to study a while before one realizes how much thought has entered into the balance of the masses and the lines taken by the several figures.

The brooding face of Walter Shirlaw's woman "Among the Poets," turning the leaves of a volume, is fair enough, but black and white can scarcely reproduce the rich low tones of the painting, one of the most successful of the artist's works, though not one of his ambitious canvases. It is painted with great enjoyment, and the pleasure is felt by the onlooker. Shirlaw often paints large canvases that have the grand air and suggest possibilities in him for mural work of a high order. But this is a collector's bit that the eye lingers on without much interest in the subject, so attractive is the head emerging from the dusky background, so harmonious the tones of cloak and book.

Among our illustrators few have equaled William T. Smedley in the naturalness of his figures. He never forces the note, but gives just the right crispness to the human document. "A Day in June" tells its story of time and occasion in a quiet, genial way that all will relish. The contrasts between strong sunlight beyond the window and the man's head in shadow, just turned enough to catch his enamored but a trifle uncertain look; the light and shade on the girl's face and figure as she leans against the wall and listens to talk, which is doubtless full of fun, but unmistakably deals with the always interesting topic; her luxurious enjoyment of holding the key to the position, are all done with the ease of a master. In this case the black and white reaches nearly to the merits of the original.

Henry Oliver Walker's "Morning Vision" closes the list of pictures chosen at random from a collection full of interesting and beautiful canvases. One feels in it the influence of Botticelli, but the faces are of our own time. The angels have the wondering look of children who have strayed from another world. The mother is herself scarcely more than a child, and the boy who sees the vision of angels stretches out his hand with a gesture of calm authority, in no wise surprised at the coming of his heavenly visitants.

While these pictures offer only one side of the Evans collection, they are enough to show the breadth of sympathy in the collector. Mr. Evans never buys European works, but keeps true to the [illegible] which he has pursued for [illegible] years. He secures [illegible]

PURELY MYTHICAL.

Dido had just committed harakiri in the most approved and accurate fashion on top of her blazing funeral pyre in the citadel of Carthage.

Far out at sea, Aeneas saw the flames and wondered. The city seemed on fire. Long he watched and earnestly. At last, turning with a sigh to the helmsman, he remarked peevishly:

"I'll lay you a good jinjerwayfur that woman's cutting up her old didos again."

And subsequently, when he met her in Hades, he knew he had been right.

I.—THE WAITER.

Observe him, puffed with high-flown rosy pride,
Like a drum major move the floor adown.
Oh, not an autocrat that wears a crown
Can simulate his prancing palfrey stride.
His pleasant grin, so long and deep and wide,
Gilds that bland face which never knows a frown
Save when a guest, though emperor or clown,
Fails the fat fee into his hand to slide.
Full oft I watch him, with his wild slap-dash,
Of form the very apotheosis,
As he bows low and scrapes, or onward skips,
Freighted with fish balls, pie, and egg-gemmed hash,
And something seems to whisper me, I wis—
There also serves who only work for tips.

Within the window, bold and resolute,
The dripping batter on the griddle hot
He pours and quickly flaps it with a not Too martial air, for it he'd but transmute
Into those golden pads, beyond dispute
The morning glory of our Winter lot,
While shopping maidens, rooted to the spot,
Wring their glad hands and murmer "Ain't he cute?"
Easy the head that wears a paper crown,
Bobs on his shoulders, till at last his jaws
Open wide and all the poet in him wakes
When with deep pride he lays his picture down:

III.—THE CASHIER.

Behind the counter in a lilied dream,
With half-closed eyes, she drifts to fairyland—
Far from the realm of vegetables canned,
Blanc mange, fried liver, doughnuts, and ice cream;
Yet when the pie fiends pass her in a stream,
And drop the coin into her dimpled hand,
She opes her eyes and with a flourish grand
Smites the cash register with joy agleam
And makes each patron, basking in her glance,
Feel as if floating in a saraband
With all his rapture flapping and unfurled,
And that the sunny region of romance
He holds in fee, and that the jeweled hand

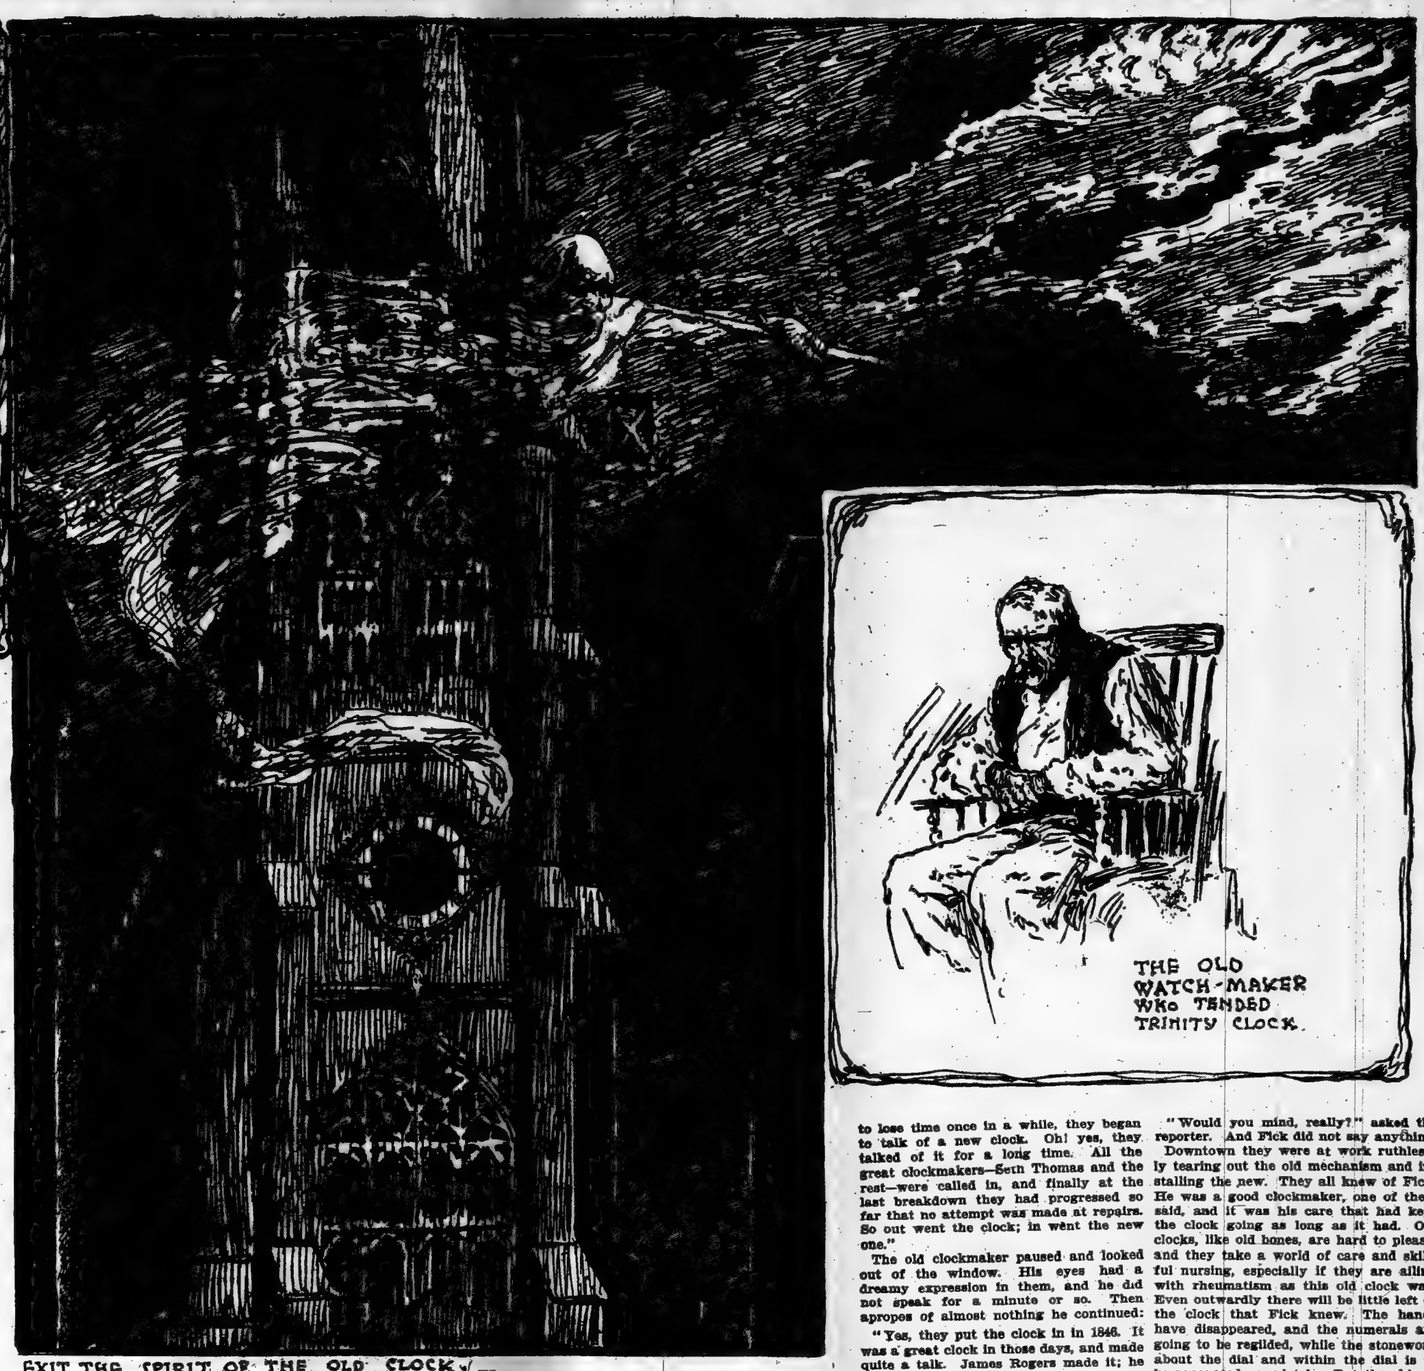
Old Trinity Clock Was a Living Thing to Its Keeper



Why Its Breakdown After Fifty-nine Years of Service Means More to Henry Fick than to Any One Else Within the Range of Its Now Silent Voice.

IN a metaphysical sense the flight of time is purely a personal matter, and is measured variously by various men in accordance with their manner of life, their temperament, and their calling. He who works in the heart of strenuous affairs finds the winged years all too swift to encompass what he would do, while men of the simpler sort, who have hit upon some quiet routine, and are very happy in it, reck little of their flight—until something occurs to interrupt that routine. Then they look about them dazedly, and wonder, it may be, where the days have gone.

So with Henry Fick, the old German keeper of the old Trinity Church clock, which ended its service last week. It was a good while ago when, for the first time, Fick toiled his way up the age-worn belfry to wind the great timepiece. And he remembers now that he did not half like the duty, because it was a mighty hard climb, and a steep one, and it was creepy up there with the sun glooming behind the Jersey hills, and the wind beginning its low evening monody. Ay, it was kind of creepy up there; it is yet. But, tut! Fick did not mind that. Of course not.

Then, too, the weights were ponderous, and it was a back-breaking job to wind them. There is a legend that old John Sperry, one of the first keepers, was killed by a stroke from the winding key, which slipped out of his hand and whirred like a great fly-wheel. But Fick doubted that. The old clock was harmless enough, and would not hurt any one. And to prove it he demonstrated that the winder could slip only a fraction of a foot even if the grip on the handle was relaxed.

So—but then Sperry might have died from some internal strain as a result of his labors on the heavy weights. Ah! yes; that might well be so, but the old German's eyes twinkled their disbelief. He liked the old clock. Why not? It had the heart-beat of life, and clocks are more human than other inanimate things, if only for that reason. Also he was a maker of clocks. Yes, yes; he had been making clocks in this city since 1857, and that is a pretty long while.

Well, he is going to miss it; yes, very much. Every week, every Tuesday afternoon, he had journeyed up into that old belfry to give new life to the clock, and to see that it went throughout the week, and that it erred not as to the hour, or even the minute. He liked that, after the first few times. The tower was a likable place, with its musty silences, broken only by the regular tick-a-tock, tick-a-tock, and rising from below that mysterious hum of a great city preparing for night.

Then later there was the evening pipe on the church steps, and the view of the homeward hurrying throngs glancing quickly upward at the clock, and perchance correcting their watches by it. There was recognition of accuracy—the recognition of public opinion!

Well, but the clock grew old, as all things do, and the years told, and there came a day last week when there was a gasping wheeze about the wheel movement and a faint plaintive note in the chimes. The old keeper hurried up the stairs, as a physician hurries to the side of a dying patient. But ere he reached the mechanism, the clock gave a sort of sigh and the sweet chimes died away before they had finished pealing the quarter hour. Fick bent over the key and the weights came up, but the clock was silent. Its fifty-nine years of service were at an end.

Fick climbed slowly down the stairs, shaking his head, and went back to his little clock store on Eighth Street. He will never go into the belfry again. The clock he knew is gone. They had been thinking of removing it for some time. The breakdown decided them, and the Howard Clock Company was called upon to implace a new clock—a modern clock, with all improvements, one of which will enable it to wind itself. And so there is no more use for Henry Fick.

But he smiles bravely about it, and says—sarcastically—that he imagines he will be able to get along without that duty; it was arduous work, taking care of it. For the clock had been growing rheumatic and dilatory of late years and there were lots of times when it did not sound the chimes as it ought to. And this required constant attention and tinkering and—oh! he has his clock store here on Eighth Street and a good business. Remember, also, that he did not want the position when it was offered. In fact, it was only at the behest of one of his good customers that he took it.

And yet, as he also said, time flies fast, and now that the end of his clock had marked that fact patently, perhaps he would realise the passage of years all the more. Suddenly he lifted his head.

"Age! That clock old!" he said. "Nonsense; nothing less. That Trinity clock might have, ought to have, gone on for one or two hundred years. Age was not the trouble; the clock was ailing from exposure. Yes, that was what the matter was, and nothing more," and Fick peered out from under his shaggy white eyebrows and passed his hand over the unthatched dome of his head. Did the reporter doubt it? Not he.

"The internals of the old clock were exposed to the elements," he continued. "The Autumn gale lashed in the rain through the belfry openings, the sleets of February, and the fogs of Spring, and the Winter's snow entered the clock and rusted the mechanism, and warped the woodwork, and incrusted the hands with barnacles so that sometimes it was difficult to move them. That was all."

Yes, that was all. Like a skillful, loving physician he had diagnosed accurately the nature of the old clock's malady, and he had told the Trinity Corporation all about it. But what could they do to save it? Nothing.

+ + +

"You see," said Fick, "the works should have been placed where the snow and the rain could not get at them, and to do that would cost almost as much as putting in a new clock. So they did nothing. Finally, though, as the clock began to lose time once in a while, they began to talk of a new clock. Oh! yes, they talked of it for a long time. All the great clockmakers—Gern Thomas and the rest—were called in, and finally at the last breakdown they had progressed so far that no attempt was made at repairs. So out went the clock; in went the new one."

The old clockmaker paused and looked out of the window. His eyes had a dreamy expression in them, and he did not speak for a minute or so. Then apropos of almost nothing he continued:

"Yes, they put the clock in in 1846. It was a great clock in those days, and made quite a talk. James Rogers made it; he had a store downtown, and was the great clockmaker of the day. Yes, a great clockmaker, and he made a good clock; that one they had in Trinity. But Rogers is gone now; gone years ago. All the great clockmakers of that day are gone, and now the clock is gone, too.

"Well, well, that is life. The one they are putting in now—I won't wind it, you know—is a fine clock, and it ought to keep its task for two centuries or more. They are going to have the works down where the dial is. In the old clock the works were 'way above the dial—almost up in the peak of the belfry. The rain won't be able to drive in and rust the works as they did with the old clock. If the old works had been where the new ones are they would not be putting in a new clock, and I suppose I should still have to be going downtown to attend to it."

"Would you mind, really?" asked the reporter. And Fick did not say anything.

Downtown they were at work ruthlessly tearing out the old mechanism and installing the new. They all knew of Fick. He was a good clockmaker, one of them said, and it was his care that had kept the clock going as long as it had. Old clocks, like old bones, are hard to please, and they take a world of care and skillful nursing, especially if they are ailing with rheumatism as this old clock was. Even outwardly there will be little left of the clock that Fick knew. The hands have disappeared, and the numerals are going to be regilded, while the stonework about the dial and within the dial is to be renovated completely. But the chimes will be the same. Weather which destroys old clocks sweetens old bells, and no doubt they will be ringing out over the old gravestones, singing of the passage of the hours, and tolling the death of the old years and the dawning of the new when this modern timepiece has taken its place among the things that are old—when Henry Fick and the clock he knew and nourished and loved are almost as though they never had been.

But in the living present the clockmaker sits in his shop on Eighth Street, mending things that are strangers to him, and the crowds that hurry along Broadway, weaned of their habits by the blank face in the steeple above, have got over even the mechanical habit of feeling for their watches as they pass under the old brown walls.

Incidents of a Day with Mrs. O'Brian, Matron of the Tombs Prison

IF there could be a redeeming feature for a woman in an involuntary visit to the old Tombs Prison down on Centre Street, and a more or less prolonged stay there, it would be the comfortable appearance of Mrs. O'Brian, the matron in charge, and her four assistants. Sitting at her desk near the entrance of the woman's prison the other day, with a blue wrap of a soft shade over her head and shoulders, Mrs. O'Brian might have posed for an "Our Lady of the Tombs." But it was nothing as interesting as a pose, only a good cold. The matron, with the rest of New York, had acquired it on an open car the day before. Yet an open car would hardly seem necessary, since in that passage is a draught, Winter and Summer, big enough to blow a lighter woman off her feet.

To any one who is not obliged to visit it, there is something uncannily fascinating about a prison. That is one of the reasons that so many letters, flowers, and gifts of all kinds go to prisoners of all classes and of sufficient importance for the outside world to learn anything about them.

It requires a guide in and a guide out for the outsider who has no personal claims upon the hospitality of the Tombs. A request for the Warden may get the intruder past the man at the door, and the Warden does the rest. That means a guide who stands for the visitor's good character, and says open sesame to all barred doors and uniformed officials.

The way to the woman's prison leads, if it is in visiting hours, past a long line of men visitors who have relatives or friends residing there temporarily, past the head of the line where they are being searched previous to admission; past the door of a small room where one of the assistant matrons is performing the same service for women visitors; past a line of men who are opening big paper bundles to see that no contraband articles are being carried in; so through a door into the courtyard where is standing perhaps one of the public carriages at the service of the Tombs boarders for their transportation back and forth. There a sign indicates the way to the "female prison annex."

During the door leading [illegible] they get the women clothes, [illegible] grees on this particular morning, and the visitor thinks sentimentally that it cannot register the degrees of the feelings of the women confined within.

But there is Mrs. O'Brian. Mrs. O'Brian hasn't the least bit of sentiment; not even pretty human interest stories to tell about the many prisoners of big and little fame she has known in the years since 1895 that she has been in the Tombs.

"They get notoriety enough without my talking about 'em," she says. She will not say one word personally about any of those who have come and gone from the days of little Marie Barberi, the young Italian girl who attracted so much public interest ten years ago to Nan Patterson, who was at that moment receiving visitors in the prison proper.

"Did you wish to talk with Miss Patterson?" asks Mrs. O'Brian. The Warden has already asked that question before. It was difficult to believe just then that any one could come to the Tombs who did not ask to see that famous person. But the visitor (still sentimentally inclined) is asking about any possible prisoners who having received kindnesses during their stay in the Tombs may have come back to see the matron and express their thanks after they are free.

"They never come back," says Mrs. O'Brian; "only the disorderly ones who are brought back. After they are gone I never see them again."

"Oh, of course," acquiesced the visitor understandingly; "they would not like to do that, but they write to you."

"They never write," says Mrs. O'Brian decidedly.

"But they are grateful for the kindness they receive in their trouble?" continued the visitor.

"They are none of them grateful," said Mrs. O'Brian, "for anything that is done for them. Kindness might be poured out upon them; they don't care a hair. Kindness is wasted upon them, and they receive it all the time."

That is rather disconcerting to the sentimentalist, but when one is really in that frame of mind it takes more than one rebuff to dissipate the feeling.

"[illegible]able people are coming here all [illegible] for them, but there is no gratitude in the women who live their lives."

There is an interlude here, for a couple of prisoners are brought in to be recorded in Mrs. O'Brian's books before they go into the prison. They are nice-looking young women who would not attract attention one way or another outside. One is dressed all in black and the other wears a blue gown and a black hat, with a wreath of white flowers around it. They are both rather well dressed, but the girl in blue is a previous acquaintance.

"Step up, Jennie," says Mrs. O'Brian. "So you are here again." Then she goes through the list of questions, name, place of residence, religion, (Protestant, Roman Catholic, or Hebrew.) Jennie is only twenty-two, she says, and that she is a Hebrew.

"Would you like to see the rabbi, Jennie?" asks Mrs. O'Brian. The rabbi is one of the hardest workers among the Tombs prisoners.

"No, I wouldn't," says Jennie. "He didn't do me a bit of good with the Judge last time. And, honest, Mrs. O'Brian," she continues, "I wasn't doing a thing but waiting for a car when they pulled me in."

"Well, they are on the lookout for girls like you," says Mrs. O'Brian, intending perhaps to be consoling.

The girl in black, who has a hoarse voice, acknowledged New Jersey as a birthplace, and says that she is twenty-three years old.

"A pretty age to be coming to a place like this," says Mrs. O'Brian rebukingly.

"Good morning, Mr. Patterson," Mrs. O'Brian calls here to a gentleman with white face and long white whiskers who comes in at the door and passes directly into the prison. Then Mrs. O'Brian has another visitor. It is the rabbi this time. He has discovered Jennie and he comes to speak about her.

"Such a pretty girl as she was when I first saw her in the House of Refuge." Ah! so Jennie has been in the House of Refuge! Mrs. O'Brian has not known that. "I did everything I could for her then," he continues. "Her family is very respectable, and I got them to move out of Allen Street, where they were living, to get her away from the surroundings, but it was no use."

"But you would help her for the sake of the family?" continues Mrs. O'Brian.

"The family?" says the rabbi. "The family doesn't have anything to do with her now. She doesn't live with them. That name she gives here isn't her right name."

The visitor, still looking for sentiment, sympathizes with Mrs. O'Brian for the strain upon her sensibilities the work in the Tombs must be. She would not be able to stand it if she did not get away every night, of course.

But not at all. Things are as they are and Mrs. O'Brian takes them as they come. Just now she is not living in the Tombs because the rooms she occupied have been torn down in the course of the reconstruction of the building, but it is much more comfortable to have them. She is tired, perhaps, at night, and it is more comfortable not to go out and it is easier in the morning. She usually has a room outside so that during her "time off" from Saturday noon over Sunday, she can be away from her business surroundings, but otherwise she prefers the Tombs.

But it must be so hard for her when the prisoners have been sentenced and come from the court broken-hearted.

"They tell me often that it serves them right and they get no more than they deserved," says Mrs. O'Brian calmly.

"But the women of the better class," insists the sentimental one, "those who are prisoners, who have committed the more serious crimes, who do not come in the class of women who are arrested for petit larceny or disorderly conduct. They must break down."

"Oh! they may cry and worry a little in their cells, but you don't see anything of it outside," replied the matron.

"And they don't seem utterly broken-hearted?"

"But when they get a long sentence of many years, they must collapse utterly, they must," persisted the sentimental visitor, but Mrs. O'Brian interrupted:

"Not a collapse," she said placidly.

As a matter of fact inside the prison everything looks cheerful enough to carry out Mrs. O'Brian's idea of a lack of gush and melancholy romance.

Jennie and her friend are going out with an officer in search of a lawyer. They are quite cheerful and happy apparently. They might be in a Summer boarding house. They have removed their hats, and passing one of the cells Jennie's white-wreathed chapeau can be seen lying on the bed. The cell is not much smaller than some Summer hotel rooms. In another cell a woman in a gay pink wrapper is reading a paper that is spread out on her lap. Nan Patterson is in one corner of the corridor near the lower row of cells standing with a silver purse bag in her hands, a pleased look on her rather inconsequential little face, as she talks with a smiling gentleman in a clerical dress. Mrs. Smith is in the prisoners' sitting room talking through the bars which separate it from the corridor, with another man. The two are easily recognizable.

That sitting room is not particularly interesting or aesthetic perhaps. It is long and narrow, and the benches on either side might be called Mission furniture from the severity of the lines. Here the women prisoners come at certain hours in the middle of the day if they like, and it is a relief from the monotony of the cells. There have been visitors to the Tombs who have thought these prisoners were too cheerful.

They are not as a rule overfond of being gazed at like animals in a zoo, and if there are a number of visitors at a time, and the guide or matron chances to slip away, the chances are nine out of ten that the sympathetic visitors may be guyed a little. They are not all "perfect ladies" who come to the Tombs. That is one of the disadvantages of the place.

But sentimental visitors and other sentimental people who are not visitors would if they could have a heart to heart talk with Matron O'Brian once in a while [illegible]

Making Junk of Steel Battleships

IF UNCLE SAM ever has an auction of a job lot of steel battleships, similar to that lately held by his friend John Bull, auction fiends are likely to get a bad bargain unless they go slow. Discarded vessels of war are knocked down cheap, as auctions go. But it costs a fortune for the man who bids to remove his property after he gets it.

The sale at Chatham dock yards has set a standard for battleship auctions. Nothing exactly like it had ever before been known. Sir John Fisher, the progressive head of the British Admiralty, decided to make scrap iron of ten armored cruisers and twenty other war craft, including gunboats and torpedo boats, that were looked upon as naval wonders not so many years ago. It was stipulated to the bidders that none of the vessels could be sold to any foreign power. They had to sign bonds to break them into junk. Astonishment was expressed that warships representing a total value of $15,000,000 should have gone under the hammer for $690,600, or about $22,000 each.

"I should say that was a fair price for them," said Capt. Baxter, Naval Constructor at the Brooklyn Navy Yard. "Breaking up an armored battleship is no joke. Suppose, for example, the United States were to order such a sale—though the chances of it are exceedingly remote—one of the first battleships to be condemned might be the Indiana, a pioneer in the White Squadron. She cost $6,500,- [illegible] it might cost $75,000 before what was left of her when I got through could be made marketable. It would be a work not of weeks, but of months. There are millions of rivets that would have to be cut by hand chisels before the hull could be torn apart.

"There is no guesswork about this. When the British battleship Neptune was sold about two years ago the purchaser was willing to pay, over and above the $90,000 cash he bid for the vessel, $50,000 to have her broken up by the Admiralty and another $50,000 or thereabout to prepare the material for sale. In other words, he was ready to put out $190,000 for the ship before he could hope to realise any profit on his transaction. Warships, even when obsolete, are extremely valuable property. Governments that sell them for junk take no chances. I understand the men who bought at the Chatham sale must submit a series of photographs to the Admiralty from time to time showing various stages of the breaking-up process.

"The only thing we have ever had to approach it in this country was the breaking up of the iron monitors, in course of construction, when the new navy was determined upon. But these vessels were obsolete before they were finished. They were torn to pieces as [illegible] their ways in the [illegible] to pay when a bat[illegible] cost 10 per cent. of her original value, or approximately $650,000. Ten years is a long time in the life of a warship. She will need a thorough overhauling then, even if she has not had it before. There is a good deal of difference between a battleship like the Indiana and one of the new vessels, like the Connecticut—difference in type, size, speed, and armament. It is like comparing one of the revolvers or rifles used during the civil war with the perfected weapons of today. Improvements are going on all the time in warships, as in everything else.

"With the exception of the monitors, the United States has not found it necessary to consign its obsolete warships to the junk pile. Even the old wooden vessels, which cost about $750,000 each, are still working, although not in active service. The Franklin is the receiving ship at Norfolk. The New York Naval Militia has the old New Hampshire. The Independence is at San Francisco. Boston has the Enterprise. It is probable that these ships of the civil war age will be made useful until they actually fall apart. Why should the Government wish to sell them? They would be worth nothing, except for their copper.

"The monitors, I believe, brought from $15,000 to $20,000 each. But then, they were built of a certain quality of iron that is seldom made nowadays. Steel has taken its place. The material was probably sold back to the foundry. Likely

The Call of the Camp Heard by Youthful Nature Lovers

Preparing the Camp, Lake Temagami.

A Well Equipped Canadian Camp.

Chief Paul, Old Indian Guide.

A Veteran Trapper of the Woods.

Where the Campers Get Their Mail.

Now Is the Time to Prepare to Respond---An Ideal Form of Vacation for the City Youngster---Great Increase of Schoolboy Camps in Recent Years

CAMPING OUT! What visions these two words conjure up of bright days in the woods, of canoeing, fishing, and swimming in the clear waters of cool streams and lakes, of long tramps to spy out the land, of appetites never quite satisfied, and of those evening hours around the crackling camp fire when good stories are told, hunting adventures repeated and the music of familiar college songs sent reverberating through the quiet woods, offending the ears of such four-footed beasts as may be prowling around.

This is the time of year when those to whom these things appeal begin to look ahead to a season of recreation and sport in the open air. Camping out by no means implies the hunting of wild game, nor is it a phase of existence to be enjoyed only by the strong and hardy. It has come to be as much a part of the regular Summer vacation as the fashionable seaside resort or the boarding house on the farm. Camping to-day is conducted on scientific and educational lines. One may choose his camp and his mode of life in it with almost as much precision as he does his Summer hotel.

There are camps of all prices and varieties, for boys, for girls, for college youths, for young men and older men whose prime object is to shoot and to fish. Then there are the private camps, with which the Adirondack region is filled, and which are gradually penetrating into the woods of Canada. It is not of those, however, that the ordinary camper thinks when he prepares for the woods. He expects to sleep in a tent, to live in the open air, to catch a good part of his food, and to be free to pull up his stakes and move on to fresh scenes if the fancy strikes him. Camping, at its best, means independence and freedom, and its varied delights will be tasted this year by a larger number than ever.

It is in the number of camps for boys, however, that the growth has been most marked. The Young Men's Christian Association has undoubtedly given the greatest impetus to the establishment of boys' camps. There is scarcely a well-equipped Young Men's Christian Association building to-day that does not have its boys' department, and wherever such a department is found, a boys' camp is its natural result in the Summer. Last year, it is estimated, 300 camps were conducted by different associations, while over 8,000 boys and young men enjoyed their privileges. This year there will be more. Many of these association camps are located on a convenient bay or river or lake not far from home, which the boys can reach within a short time and at a low cost. In such cases, an old abandoned farmhouse fulfills the purposes of living, or rather sleeping, quarters admirably. If there is a sudden overflow of juvenile campers and the weather is good, temporary quarters are rigged up outside.

Many of the boys only remain three or four nights, and in order to accommodate the largest possible number it is often necessary to limit the stay in camp to a week or ten days. Boating, bathing, and country walks are the chief amusements, while baseball is always in order, and sometimes tennis and minor athletic games. Competent instructors and leaders remain in the camp during its entire season. The lads who know little or nothing about swimming are taught. No one is allowed to handle a boat until he can show that he understands something of the art of rowing. The play of the boys is carefully regulated so as to avoid overexertion, and yet every member has a certain share in the work of the camp.

The number of camps for schoolboys has been steadily increasing also for several years. In the woods and mountains of New England, in the Adirondacks, among the Great Lakes, and within the last two or three years in Canada, camps for boys in the various preparatory schools of the country have sprung up, and every season witnesses additions to the number. The desire to go where camp life may be found in its most primitive surroundings has led to the opening up of new sections in the north woods of Canada, and for the last two or three years many boys from the college preparatory schools have spent their Summers there.

The success of these schoolboy parties has led this year to the definite organization of three or four special camps in Canada. Among the schools interested in this plan, and from which delegations will be sent, are St. Paul's of Concord, N. H.; Hotchkiss School, at Lakeville, Conn.; Pomfret, Conn.; Groton, St. Paul's of Garden City, the Winthrop School of Philadelphia, the University School of Chicago, the Hill School of Pottstown, Penn., and the Asheville School, North Carolina. There will also be, in some of these Canadian camps, parties of students from Yale, Harvard, Princeton, and Cornell.

The boys are conducted by some of the teachers and instructors, and they will be under the jurisdiction of their elders just as though they were in school. There is, of course, far more freedom, but practical instruction is given in everything pertaining to open-air life, the making of a camp, cooking of food, preparing fish and game, paddling a canoe and handling a gun, finding one's way if lost in the woods, while certain hours are given to lessons in botany, ornithology, swimming, forestry, the habits of wild animals, and other practical information.

The camps that have been arranged for these preparatory school lads this Summer are in the Temagami, French River, Mississaga, and Desbarats regions of Canada. Desbarats is a few miles above the head waters of Lake Huron, and it is the far-famed place where the Ojibway Indians give every year the play of Longfellow's "Hiawatha" in their native tongue. The Ojibways are among the few Indian survivors in Canada that still retain plentiful traces of their aboriginal days.

Every camping party that goes to the Canadian woods is anxious to secure one of these Ojibway Indians as guide. Their knowledge of the forest and everything that pertains to the open-air life is invaluable. One of them, a half breed, popularly known to hundreds of tourists as "Aleck," has earned the reputation as the most taciturn, uncommunicative inhabitant of the Canadian woods.

Aleck is the boss cook of the woods. His method of breadmaking is this: He opens a flour bag and mixes in it a quantity of flour the size and shape of a large cocoanut, with hot bacon fat as a mixer, and then adds cornmeal. The bag is his only bread pan. A little sugar and baking powder are added, and then he kneads the whole for one minute inside the bag. The mass is then lifted out of the bag and kneaded down flat into a pan. Twenty minutes over a camp stove and the bread is done to a turn.

Another popular Indian guide who has been for several years with the Keewaydin Club is "Big Paul." He is a genuine Ojibway, a fine type of the old woods Indian now fast disappearing. The greater part of his life has been spent in hunting and trapping. During the Summer he acts as a guide, and there is none better in the Canadian woods, for he is a born teacher, and has instructed the boys in the preparatory school camps in many of the secrets of the forest.

In the Temagami section are half a dozen permanent log camps and any number of delightful localities for tenting in the Summer. These camps are located in the heart of the big Government reservation of 5,900 acres set apart recently by Canada. The reservation is between the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, and one of the most popular canoe trips leads from Temagami to the French River, the old water route of the French and Indians to the Western prairies and mountains. Champlain came down the French River, and in early American history it played an important part. With the navigation of the great lakes the French River gradually ceased to be used as a means of transportation to the West.

The cost of these student camping trips is from $100 to $200 a month for each person.

A number of schoolboy parties for the Canadian camps will leave New York, Philadelphia, and other Eastern localities about the middle of June. The Keewaydin Club conducts most of these student camps. At Temagami the club will have two large camps this year, one being for older boys, and among these will be a number of college students. A. S. Gregg Clarke, a Harvard graduate and now master of the Asheville School, N. C., has been the director of the Keewaydin Club camps for several years, and among his assistants this Summer will be George W. Creelman and Charles W. Locke, both Harvard graduates; Alfred B. Hall of Yale; James H. Biram of Amherst, George Jackson of the University of Cincinnati, O. J. Campbell, an instructor in the United States Naval Academy, and Ralph C. Porter of this city.

The White Mountains have for several years been the headquarters for several school camps, and, while not so far away from the haunts of the white man as those in the upper Canadian woods, they afford equal facilities for studying nature, learning something of woodcraft, the habits of animals, and the ability, if need be, to care for one's self if suddenly lost in the woods without the aids of civilized life. One of the most successful of these camps overlooks the beautiful Loon Lake, while Mount Washington and the Green Mountains are visible in the distance. The boys live in tents, but near by is the camp lodge, a roomy, old-fashioned farmhouse that affords accommodation in wet weather. There is a small library in the house, and two or three big rooms are fitted up for indoor games, while wood fires in the open fireplaces are found very comfortable in the cool nights toward the end of August.

+ + +

Frederick L. Thompson, the former Captain of the Amherst track team, will have charge this Summer of the athletic sports of the boys. He will also be one of the leading councilors of the camp. The entire camp staff will be college graduates, and they will supervise the sports and the special outings so as to insure the greatest possible amount of physical exercise and enjoyment for all. A coaching tour through the White Mountains has been planned this season. A big coach will be secured about Aug. 1 and the entire camp will journey through the most picturesque localities of the White Mountains, climbing Mount Kearsarge and Mount Washington during the tour and stopping at North Conway, Echo Lake, Crawford's, Bethlehem, Franconia Notch, the Flume, and other popular places. Another tour for the boys who wish to take it will be a long canoe trip, starting from the head of Moosehead Lake and extending for over 200 miles through some of the wildest and most attractive regions of Maine. There will be plenty of fishing during this canoe trip, and with good luck canned provisions will scarcely be opened, except in case of unforeseen emergency.

+ + +

Most of the camp necessities are provided, so that the boys do not have to equip themselves with a mass of paraphernalia, most of which inexperienced campers afterward find absolutely useless. Each boy, however, is required to provide a camp uniform, consisting of a cap, jersey, sweater, flannel knockabout, and khaki trousers, running suits and tennis shoes, besides two pairs of heavy blankets and a pillow. The use of cameras and musical instruments is encouraged. There are practically no rules, but gentlemanly conduct is always insisted upon, and there is an unwritten law that profane language is not to be used within the confines of the camp. On Sundays, the boys pile into a big farm wagon and attend church in the little New Hampshire town eight miles away. The great aim of the camp, as is true in all similar ones, is to allow the boys a sense of freedom from restraint while inculcating habits of regularity and thoughtfulness.

How Mother McClane Manages Her Day Nursery for Brooklyn Babies

THE house was not so large, but it was clean. It had white Swiss curtains at the windows, and the steps that led up to it had been freshly scrubbed. At the opening of the door there appeared a motherly little woman with a round rosy face. The face was encircled by a small checked old-fashioned fringed shawl.

"I want to see the day nursery," said the woman who stood without.

Mother McClane, for this was her name, permitted the woman to enter and led her to the nursery, which was in the basement. There was a savory odor of viands, but the midday dinner was over. The basement was clean and carpetless, and also freshly scrubbed.

"There ain't many children to-day," said Mother McClane; "it is Saturday. The mothers mostly stay at home and take care of their own children Saturdays. Their washings are finished. Nearly all our children are children of washerwomen."

Some children in blue-checked aprons played about a low table made to fit their size. A Newfoundland dog played near them. When Mother McClane sat down the dog came and laid his big head in her lap. She stroked it while she talked.

"Sometimes we have eighty children here of a day," she said, "sometimes more. They come, rain or shine. Our children love to come here. We take good care of them. We wait on them ourselves, Mary and me." The perspective revealed Mary on all fours scrubbing the kitchen. "These three children you see here have consumption of the blood and bone. They won't live long. Their father died with it. The mother is as bad off as the children. These children may live three months, but they can't live a year, the doctor says."

"What brings on consumption of the blood and bone?" asked the woman.

"It comes," replied Mother McClane, from starvation. These children have never had enough to eat in their lives till they came here. Now it is too late to save them. Come here, dear," to the youngest boy, and she put back his collar and showed the woman the lumps made by the consumption caused by starvation. "He is only four," she announced further, "but he can whip any boy in the nursery," and the woman somehow or other found herself rather rejoicing at that.

"I commenced this work," resumed Mother McClane, "three years ago, and in that time I have cared for 10,000 children.

"Not all at once," exclaimed the woman.

"No. Time in and time out. I commenced without a pot to boil my dinner in, in a little five-room cottage here in Brooklyn. I went to Mr. Wells, he's principal of School No. 8, you know, and I says to him, I says:

"'Mr. Wells, don't you think a day nursery is needed in these here parts?' And he answers back, 'There ain't narthin' needed more, Mother McClane,' says he, 'than a day nursery.'

"With that I started it—Mary and me together. I went to the corner grocery and begged for credit for a week. They gave it to me. At the end of the week I had the money to pay. It's been that way ever since. We haven't, to say, had so much donated as some, but we have had our living expenses. It takes $80 a month to run the house—$35 for the rent. That's a good deal to come regular every month on the first, but we've managed to pay it. We would like a home of our own, though. It would be a great savin' of rent—a little home of our own—no difference how little it was, so it was ours. All the talk now seems to be about the blind babies, but these little children you see here—little children what's got consumption of the blood and bone because they ain't never in all their born days had enough to eat, they needs help, too.

"Do you know, they don't understand enough to eat when the first come here? I have to teach 'em. At their homes."

"What sort of homes have they?" asked the woman.

"They ain't got no homes at all," said Mother McClane, "to amount to narthin'. One room, a stove, a table, a chair, and one bed for the mother and father and sometimes five or six children. That's the kind of homes they've got, these children. And as for eatin', they don't have narthin' to eat either to amount to narthin'. Their mothers cook a strip of meat with potatoes. They hand them a piece of meat and a potato in their hands. Then they run out into the yard, if they've got a yard, in the street if they haven't, and eat it like little animals. When they come to us, Mary and me, we cut up every bite they eat and give it to them in a dish with a spoon. No. Never any knives or forks. They wouldn't know what to do with knives and forks if we gave 'em to them.

"We have plenty for them to eat, different food every day; Monday, roast beef; Tuesday, a stew of some sort; Wednesday, something else, and so on through the week till Monday, when we start with the roast beef all over again.

"No. They ain't, to say, interestin' children. Can't be. Never had no chance, no teachin'. I had one interestin' little girl, Kitty O'Brien, but I had to send her away. We couldn't keep her clean. We would wash her, Mary and me, good and clean every day, but the next day she would come back worse than ever. It was the place she lived in. Narthin' could come out of a place like that clean. At last I says to Major Gardner—he's been mighty kind to us about helpin' with the day nursery—'Major,' I says, to him, 'what must I do with Kitty? I can't keep her clean. I have to burn her clothes every little while; then when I put fresh ones on her she comes back the next day worse than ever.'

"Then he says to me, he says, 'Mother McClane, Kitty, she's the sort of leaven what'll leaven the whole lump. You'd better send her home altogether than have to burn the house down.'

"So I took his advice and let her go. I hated to. Katie was a nice little child. When I finished giving her her bath she used to raise her face up to be kissed, she was so glad to be clean.

"I went to her mother to remonstrate with her, but it didn't do no good, not a particle. The mother was worse than Kitty was. You'd sink your foot in the dirt of the floor, it was that slimy, but the mother, she didn't seem to mind it. Seemed like she thrived on the dirt, got fat on it. The father was the same way and the other children. What you goin' to do with a family like that? There ain't narthin' you can do," she finished, and put in a silent interval stroking the dog.

"We keep the children for 5 cents a day," she began again presently, "but some of 'em is mighty airish when they come bringin' their children.

"They toss their heads and say, 'What you give for 5 cents?'

"I answers, 'Ain't takin' care of the children all day long, givin' them two square meals, and cleanin' them up worth 5 cents?' But some of 'em don't seem to think so. They objects to everything. If some little something don't happen to suit 'em they flirts off with their children and don't come back no more. Some of 'em objected to the dog, afraid he would bite the children. This here dog wouldn't bite no child that lived. I had another little dog, Mack, the most affectionate animal that ever breathed the breath of life. They never did get done objecting to him till he died, which he did on account of the children a-feedin' of him prune pits. No; they didn't do it a-purpose. They was tryin' to be kind to him to make up for the objections of their mothers, I guess.

"Sometimes it's a sort of thankless task, this takin' care of the slum children, their fathers and mothers is so particular.

"Then you'd ought to see the widower fathers. We ask them 10 cents a day 'Tain't narthin' but right. They earn more than the widowed mothers do. They ought to earn $2 a day, anyway; but they want the same rates for their children that we give the widowed mothers. We'd take care of the children for narthin', we often do when they are deservin'; but when a father is able to earn $2 a day, don't stand to reason we should keep the children for narthin', and we don't.

"They don't only want two meals a day and their children taken care of for 5 cents, but they want them well clothed. We clothe half the children because we have to burn the clothes they come in or the Board of Health would be after us. In the three years I've been keeping this day nursery you can't guess how many garments I have burned. Five thousand. You can't imagine how these slum people live. It would break your heart to see the homes of some of 'em; but seems like they ought to be a little cleaner than they are.

"Water don't cost narthin' and soap is cheap.

"This time of year they don't send their children to the nursery as much as they do in the dead of Winter. This is the time the city is givin' out coal and rashuns. The slum people is tricky. They stop work this time of year and take life easy, got plenty of coal and eatables for a little while. They keep their children at home and take care of them themselves, savin' the 5 cents a day, till the rashuns give out; then they send them again.

About this time, too, some kind of disease—measles or whoopin' cough—breaks out among the slum children, and there are a good many deaths. Bad food, no food at all, narthin' to live on, no comfortable bed to die on even. That's slum life.

"We got a little orphing child; his mother jest died. She was one of our mothers. She was a Swedish woman, come over here, married, lost her husband and went to the washtub. She kept at the tub till she died, sending her child here regular.

"We did all we could for her. Her sister will take the child, but she is delicate too, so I suppose the most of the care of it will fall on us. We find a lot of sickly cases. My daughter she took care of the slum people here in Brooklyn till her health broke down tryin' to keep 'em clean, tendin' of 'em when they were dyin', and layin' of 'em out. She was a bright, bloomin' girl when she commenced the work. Now she's that delicate you'd never know her. I like the slum children, though. They take the place of my son that died. I try to make a home for them and myself, to keep from missin' him till the good Lord gets ready for me to go to him."

Mother McClane said this very simply and without a tear.

"Would you like to go up stairs and see the cots?" she asked by and by. "We don't keep the children here overnight, but sometimes they take naps in the daytime. That's why we have the cots."

The children who were to live so short a time stood huddled together, looking at the woman. She went over to them and took each by the hand. One boy was pretty and bright eyed. The girl was very pretty. Only the youngest was disfigured by the marks of the disease.

The woman wondered why they had been born at all, to starve and die.

"Good-bye," she said.

"Good-bye," they returned, brightly.

"Perhaps, now that they are well fed," she reasoned as she followed Mother McClane up stairs to see the cots, "they will live."

Mother McClane shook her head.

"The doctor tells me not," she said. "The starvation has been goin' on too long, he says. It's got into the blood and bone, he says."

THE CASE OF THE HOBBSES' CAT--A GERMAN METHOD

SOMETHING was seriously wrong with the Hobbs family cat; something that catnip and other common remedies known to Mrs. Hobbs could not reach. Tabby was the idol of the children and the pet of the household. At the solicitation of his wife and children Hobbs consented to stop on his way downtown at a cat hospital in Lexington Avenue and seek advice. He came home that evening with a substantial grayish powder.

"The doctor says we're to give Tabby this all at one dose," he said, as though that settled the matter so far as he was concerned.

"Did he say how we were to give it to her?" asked Mrs. Hobbs.

"Why, no," replied Hobbs, fretfully. "I did not ask him such an absurd question as that. As it would be difficult to give a powder hypodermically, I suppose it will have to go down her throat," he added with fine sarcasm.

"Very well," retorted Mrs. Hobbs; "you hold the cat and I'll force the powder down her throat."

"Nothing of the kind," said Hobbs. "You hold the cat and I'll handle the powder. I've a quicker hand and a surer eye than you have."

The combat ended in the capture of Tabby, who, scenting mischief, had disappeared under the bed. Hobbs held the cat, one of the children forced its mouth open, and Mrs. Hobbs made a jab with a spoonful of powder. There was a struggle, after which Tabby disappeared with a considerable quantity of Hobbs's cuticle. The contents of the spoon were distributed over his trousers.

"There!" exclaimed Hobbs, who is a baseball enthusiast, looking ruefully at his blood-stained hands, "you muffed it. I knew how it would be. Half the dose wasted—and look at my clothes."

"Goosey," as the children called the maid of all work who [illegible] a month in addition to her board, was [illegible] portation from the Fatherland, interfered at this juncture.

"Duss you vant to giff dot stuff to der cat?" she asked.

"That's no bad guess, Goosey," replied Hobbs.

"Den get her for me."

Tabby was once more routed out from her hiding place, while Goosey wandered to the ice chest. She reappeared with some lard, which she mixed with a portion of the powder. This she rubbed on the cat, where Tabby could conveniently reach it. Tabby was surprised. She was as proud of her thick, snow-white coat as the Kaiser is of his mustache, and had no purpose to have it soiled. She promptly licked off the lard. Goosey applied another dose in another place. Tabby licked that off, too. Pretty soon all the medicine was inside Tabby's tummy.

"Goosey," said Hobbs. "How did the Kaiser ever come to lose you? Take a whole day off instead of Thursday after 2."

While On the Train Your Life Is in His Hands

Work of the Busiest Man in a Busy Business---The Thousand and One Things the Dispatcher Must Carry in His Head---The Safety Valve of the System

THEY put a new long-distance train into service on the New York Central last week. It was a flier. It was designed for nine-hour service between this city and Buffalo. Leaving Forty-second Street on its maiden flight at 2:30 o'clock in the afternoon, the train made all scheduled stops and pulled into Buffalo at 11:30 o'clock, exactly on time. Along some stretches of the road the train traveled at the rate of seventy-five miles an hour.

It was a remarkably successful trip, and the invited guests overwhelmed with congratulations the General Passenger Agent, the Superintendent, the engineer, the conductor—every one, almost, save the Chief Dispatcher and his little group of assistants who sat in the gloomy office in the Grand Central station, leaning over charts and telegraph instruments, following that train mile by mile. Yet these men were really responsible for the smoothness and expedition—the success, in short, of the trip.

But no one saw the chief and his assistants, who, while attending to the Buffalo flyer, were also attending to every other train, flier, accommodation, freight, and the like that was rolling over the rails of the Central and of its subsidiary branches. They are not supposed to be seen.

It may readily be grasped that in order to shoot the Buffalo train through on its swift schedule time it was necessary to dispose of other trains in various ways. There were freight trains to be shunted on sidings and way trains to be switched to other tracks, or sent to their destinations by roundabout routes, there were time tables to revise, and unexpected freight and special passenger trains to account for—all to the end that the flyer might speed along on its journey as fast as the engineer could drive his iron steed, which, as has been said, was sometimes at the rate of seventy-five miles an hour.

The chief dispatcher is a wonderful man, and as versatile as a wonderful railroad man must needs be. Many titles suggested themselves to the mind of the reporter who watched him amid his duties the other day, but above all was the impression that he was the safety valve of the road. For upon his skill, accuracy, quickness of judgment, resource, and ability to seize upon and settle an emergency as soon as it shows its head the safety of the patrons of the road absolutely depends. Here is one of the most common emergencies:

One of his assistants hands him a dispatch from Stamford, say. The dispatch tells him that there is a freight wreck near by, and that the east-bound passenger tracks are blocked. He does not have to refer to his charts to know that the Colonial Limited is plunging into the environs of Port Chester. That fact is carried in his head, as are all other vital facts. Port Chester is only ten minutes away from Stamford, the scene of the wreck, and in the natural order of things the Stamford signal tower man has sent word to the Port Chester tower to block the train with danger signals. In the natural order of things also the Port Chester signal man has complied. But the dispatcher in New York is not supposed to rely on natural orders of things. Every precaution must be checked and doubled by him. So he warns the Port Chester tower man also, and at the same time sends this message to the conductor of the Colonial:

"Watch for orders at Port Chester."

By the time the train has pulled up at Port Chester the dispatcher, whose mind has been working like lightning, has decided what to do. Within a few minutes the conductor of the express is in receipt of orders to back his train to so and so and to take such and such a line, as the case may be, while of course other trains affected by this order—there are always several of them, passenger and freight—have to be attended to in one way or another, and that quickly.

He is not only the safety valve, but the emergency man, the all-seeing eye, the preceptor of conductors, of engineers, and general surgeon of the rolling stock. He is the most strenuous man of a most strenuous business, and that is saying a great deal.

There are two of them in the Grand Central Station—one has charge of the New York Central and the other of the New York, New Haven and Hartford. They are supreme in their lines. They have their assistants, of course, but the assistants do not devise, they carry out orders, and in an emergency, whether it be at 7 o'clock in the evening or 2 o'clock in the morning, the Chief Dispatcher is routed out of his bed, or from his dinner table, or the theatre—he must leave word where he may be found—and brought to the station on the jump to straighten out affairs that are tangled or are about to be. He is supposed to work eight hours daily, but as a general thing his duties occupy nearer fifteen or eighteen hours than eight.

The New Haven dispatcher's office the other day was a most exciting place. The room was filled with long tables, on each of which was a telegraph instrument ticking merrily, and an operator bending over great tabular sheets of paper on which he recorded the progress of the various trains which he was assigned to follow. On these sheets were records of every train that had left the station that day. The Bay State Limited was speeding on its way to Boston—had just started, in fact, and the column on a certain sheet devoted to the progress of that train was long and clean, and devoid of figures. This train would not be heard from by the dispatcher until it reached Harlem Bridge. Inside that limit the yardmaster has control. But beyond the Harlem River the dispatcher begins to take notice. Signal reporting stations are located along the route every few miles, and as the train passes the signal is flashed into the dispatcher's office like this:

"Train No. 333. Z. T. O. T." The first two letters signify the reporting station, and the O. T. means "on time." If the train is late or ahead of time, the number of minutes is reckoned by the dispatcher's assistants, and then set down on the sheets.

The Chief Dispatcher, a big man, and pleasant despite his arduous duties, was bustling about getting out orders for the bulletin board, which was surrounded by a group of engine drivers and conductors. Every engine driver and conductor must report to the chief before taking out a train to receive instructions as to the conditions of the road and what they may expect on their trips. If any change has arisen in the complex system of conducting the trains it is the chief's duty to tell them all about it. Then with the bulletin notes in their heads and the dispatcher's more comprehensive orders in their hands they dash down the stairs, board their engines and trains, and away they roll out of the station.

The chief smiled agreeably at the reporter.

"Go ahead," he said, "and look about you. As for me, I do not care to talk; I haven't time in the first place—I am too busy, and in the next place there are so many other busy men in this station that I do not feel that I have any right to talk as though I were the whole thing. Why don't you see the Superintendent or some one, I—"

But one of the assistants had reported that the signal 5—5—5 had just come in from some block in New England. That is the danger signal, and it means that the towerman has deemed the accident, or hiatus, or whatever it is, of sufficient importance to warrant the stopping of all trains bound in all directions. In short, this danger signal paralyzes all traffic. Without waiting for any word the chief sends out the signal over all the division, and then after he has done that he sets about finding out what the trouble is, and when he has learned, which he does in an incredibly short time, he begins the work of moving the trains which his orders have held up. He has to move them so that all of them will reach their destinations with the least possible delay, and of course the amount of work and brain effort involved in this depends upon the magnitude of the emergency which caused the operator first to send out his three-fives signal. In the present instance it was a freight train broken in two. This suggested the possible danger of the two sections coming together and buckling and spreading out over the passenger tracks. This was recently the cause of the fateful Harrisburg wreck on the Pennsylvania Railroad. The Central system has a rule that all traffic must be stopped when a parted freight train is noticed, and this naturally makes for increased safety for the passengers. The Cincinnati flier, however, was right upon the freight train when it buckled, and so it is doubtful if even the Central's system of stopping all trains could have prevented the accident.

The chief must know the road over which he holds sway like a book. He must know just where every switch is, and he must have at his fingers' ends a comprehensive knowledge of every switch and crossing and junction, and where every train is at a given time, and where extra engines and extra cars and extra crews are to be found. In the event of an accident he must know right on the jump the character of the section of the road where the accident has occurred, and what the character of it is this side of the accident and what on the other side. The chief end is, get things moving, and he must serve this end with the least possible delay and the least possible detriment to the service of the road. He always rises grandly to an emergency, for that is what he is there for, and at such times his orders fly like lightning, almost before thinking, so well versed is he in his duties.

The slow freight is the bane of the dispatcher. This constitutes the third-class traffic—the passenger traffic being the first class and the regular freight the second class. Slow freights are designed to carry the itinerant business, so to speak—business that crops up unexpectedly day after day. Trains carrying this class of freight consequently start out at all times, and their course is dilatory and inimical to the regular traffic of the road, unless it is handled with skill.

This is part of the chief's duties—to handle it with skill, and so he follows the course of the sluggish slow freight and plans hour after hour how he can get the regular freight trains around it. At the same time his work is rendered decidedly more arduous by the fact that on the Danbury Branch, going up into the Berkshires, he has a single track for passenger and all freights to deal with, while on the Harlem Branch there are two tracks. It takes constant thought and attention to keep things moving on these two branches, while, of course, the main line, having four tracks, makes things easier. The other day there was a slow freight moving up the main line and it was falling behind hour after hour. The chief's brow was wrinkled, and he was sending out dispatches to the conductor which increased in severity seriatim.

When a train is late for whatever cause the conductor must report in person on his return to the station and tell the Chief all about it. Then in turn the Chief must go to the Superintendent and repeat the excuses to that officer. Also, the Chief must look out for the rolling stock, and if there is anything the matter, a flat wheel, a broken air pipe, or anything at all, he must see that this is repaired before the defective car is allowed to leave the station. At the same time he must know of any defects in the roadbed, and just at what speed certain bridges may be crossed, and all this information is in turn handed to the conductors and engineers before they leave the station.

The Chief Dispatcher is busy every minute. He has no time to eat while on duty, and the fact that the New York Central and New Haven lines move their trains with such safety and expedition is due in large part to him.

THE CZAR'S BABY

OH, say, little Kid of the Autocrat,
It looks like the job you have
Is one that gleams
With the glow of dreams
Of the highest and happiest Slav.

A brilliantly dazzling, wonderful job,
That's enough to make one blind,
Who doesn't own
A place on a throne
With the great, white Czar behind.

Oh, say, little Kid of the Autocrat,
There isn't a kid like you
In all the earth
That has given man birth
And work for his hands to do.

You are IT for all of the Russian world,

You'll throw up your job right now.

New Yorkers Will Spend Nearly $60,000,000 on Summer Vacations

NEW YORK'S vacation season is now in full swing. This may seem a strange statement to make before the June roses have begun to bloom. But the fact is, direct steamer service from this city to the Mediterranean health resorts has completely changed New York's outing season within the last five years.

The vacation season used to begin in April, with society's rush to Europe in time for the London and Paris season, which runs through May and June. It now begins in March, with steamer loads of tourists who wish to take advantage of the best climatic conditions in Southern Europe, and lasts until October, when men who could not enjoy a holiday without a shotgun are not hampered by the game laws. In that time New Yorkers spend anywhere from $50,000,000 to $60,000,000 seeking health, pleasure, and recreation. These are the figures given by the general manager of the largest tourist agency in the world, by the General Passenger Agents of the two greatest trunk line roads running out of New York, and by the General Managers of two transatlantic steamship lines.

The direct travel from New York to Mediterranean ports is increasing enormously each year. Some of the finest steamers of the ocean passenger fleet are now engaged exclusively in this service. There are about twenty-five in all making regular sailings, divided between the Cunard, White Star, Hamburg-American, North German Lloyd, Fabre, and Italian [illegible] on these ships is far heavier than it is on the North Atlantic boats. Before the snow is off the ground the piers of these southern-bound steamships are heaped with steamer trunks. The cry of the baggage smasher is heard in the land weeks earlier than it used to be. Florists have to rush artificially rare flowers before their season, in order that the cabins of departing friends may be transformed into fairy bowers. A great many business men find that it suits them better to take vacations early in the year. The hot months are the hardest for them to leave their business. By going before Spring really begins they are home again in time to buy the first straw hats and fortified in health for hot weather work. Besides, for those who can get away for occasional week-ends to near-by beaches New York is a pretty good Summer resort.

Corporations and firms employing a large number of men find it much more convenient to distribute the vacation season over seven months than to compress it into three months. Their working force is not decimated until they begin to wish there were no such thing as an annual vacation. The old-timer who boasts that he "has not taken a vacation in twenty years" is no longer popular. Every clerk in New York worth hiring, from office boy up, looks for his annual vacation with pay, as surely as he looks for his salary, provided he has been in the employ of his firm for one year. Business men say the prospect of these annual holidays makes men chary about changing employ[illegible]

Some idea of the amount of money the New Yorker spends on his annual outing may be gained from the statement of the manager of a tourists' agency in lower Broadway that the receipts of that office alone in one month last Summer exceeded $1,000,000. This was a record figure, and was accounted for by the rush to the St. Louis Exposition. But the manager estimated that at least one-half that sum was expended by persons who were limited to comparatively cheap vacations of one or two weeks, within easy distance of New York.

The vacation crowd of New York is estimated at 650,000 by persons in a position to judge. Some of these get along with two weeks in the country at anywhere from $20 to $35. The range upward is practically without limit. A fair average for the work-a-day New Yorker's annual outing is $75. But there are hundreds who think nothing of spending ten times that sum. The books of the New York Central show that between 40,000 and 50,000 tickets are sold each year from the Grand Central Station to various points in the Catskill Mountains. It is within the range of possibility to spend two weeks in the Catskills at a cost of $25, including railway fares. But the person who tries this will have to go to a farmhouse in some quiet place, and keep away from the frivolities of hotel life. It costs twice the amount of money mentioned to have a fairly [illegible] Vacations in the [illegible] tral for a fortnight or month in these mountains every Summer. Saratoga gets about 15,000 New Yorkers each season.

Vacation travel to the Thousand Islands and other Canadian points is increasing every year. At least 25,000 tourists from this city bought tickets for Canada last Summer. It is expected that there will be more this year, because Canada will get its share of the 12,000 New Yorkers who spent on an average $150 each in visiting the St. Louis Exposition last year, and will want to go somewhere else this year. The Pennsylvania Railroad carries 70,000 New Yorkers each season to vacation points in New Jersey and Delaware.

The Central of New Jersey gives about the same figures for the beaches from Atlantic Highlands all down the New Jersey coast. The cost of a vacation there is about the same as in Northern New York or in New England—$25 or $30 for two weeks means rigid economy. Twice that sum means comfort. Everything in excess of $25 a week is sheer luxury. Long Island offers cheaper facilities than anywhere else around New York City. If a man cares for nothing but fishing he can have a pretty good time on Long Island for $10 or $12 a week. The Long Island Railroad cannot differentiate between its annual Summer vacationists and those who travel frequently over the line to the race tracks and to Coney Island and Rockaway, but the total number of ex[illegible] tickets sold to New Yorkers on [illegible] pleasure bent runs into the mill[illegible] between the time the Mediterranean and society passengers get away until July, when the schools close and the sweet girl graduate has received her diploma. Then there is another boom until the middle of August. A number of parents will not go abroad without their children. Advance bookings to Europe this Summer are greater than they have been in any year since the Paris Exposition of 1900. Transatlantic travel grows more luxurious and correspondingly more expensive each year. The style of accommodations gets further away from the old standard as each new steamer is launched. There is a great demand for cabins en suite with private bath, and a still greater demand for cabins with only one berth instead of the old-style double-berth cabins.

But the West is making as great a fight for the vacation New Yorker this year as it did last year with the St. Louis Exposition. It wants to lure him further afield. Low excursion rates are offered from New York to the Lewis and Clark Exposition, at Portland, Oregon, this Summer, including brief visits to principal points on the Pacific Coast as far south as San Francisco. The Western roads are making great efforts to get their share of the Eastern vacation business, and are meeting with a fair share of success. Take a look around at the railway stations, steamship offices, trunk shops, dry goods stores, and everywhere else where necessities of travel are displayed and [illegible] Vacation time is the

Society at Home and Abroad

IF it had not been for the weddings it would have been a dreary week. The weather until Thursday was simply out of the question—"beastly." In the country it was cold and damp and depressing, and the best hours were those at 5 o'clock tea, or before dinner, when the company at house parties assembled in the large halls before the wide fireplaces with huge bonfires of logs or in the evening during dinner and afterward at bridge. Those who went down to Belmont Park had the homelike clubhouse as a place of refuge—and this, by the way, is going to be one of the most popular suburban resorts for the ultra-fashionable set. There were coaching parties, but driving was anything but pleasant, although along the routes to Ardsley and Belmont Park and Woodmansten the country is exquisite and everything in bloom. Those who went down to the sea in yachts—to use a trite adaptation—were enthusiastic only at the start on the first day and many fluked after Tuesday's experience. The Caronia, after all, afforded the best place to view the start.

The passenger list of the ships sailing Tuesday was like a page of the Social Register, and among those on board the Caronia were Mr. and Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, who were off for a three months' European trip, including some motoring on the Continent and the usual visit to Germany, and a wind-up in Paris and London. Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt has been a bit of an invalid, and for some time she has been at the Hot Springs of Virginia. The Northern Star is in commission and a yachting trip is on the programme.

With Lady Brassey, the wife of the owner of the far-famed Sunbeam, was Mrs. H. A. Pakenham, who was Miss Ashley Cooper, a niece of Lord Shaftesbury. Her husband, who is with Lord Brassey, has been Secretary to Lord De la Warr in the colonies. His grandfather was Mr. William Clark of this city and his mother was a niece of the late William Staples, so that he is half American. He is also a first cousin of Kenneth Frazier, the artist, who married Miss Julia Fish Rogers. On his father's side he is a descendant of the Gen. Pakenham who was defeated at the battle of New Orleans. Lady Brassey is the second wife of Lord Brassey. His first wife was the author of the famous book of yachting experiences on the Sunbeam, which is now a standard work. Her tragic death is remembered. The present Lady Brassey was Lady Sibyl de Vere Capell, the daughter of the late Viscount Malden.

Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Whitridge and Miss Whitridge and Miss Ethel Barrymore were on the same ship. On the Kaiser Wilhelm II. were Mrs. Vanderbilt and her daughter, Miss Vanderbilt; Mrs. E. Potter, Mr. and Mrs. Albert R. Shattuck, who are to go automobiling on the Continent; Mr. and Mrs. J. Clinch Smith, Mrs. Frederick Bell, the Baron and Baroness de Fersen and the Baroness von Bardeleben; Mrs. Penniman, Robert Van Courtlandt, and Mrs. W. L. Strong, the mother of Mrs. Shattuck and the widow of the former Mayor of this city. Mr. and Mrs. Clinch Smith are to be abroad for a long period. Mrs. Smith has a house in London. Peter Fenelon Collier has taken the Moorings, the Smith place at Newport and the former home of Mrs. Van Courtlandt Hamilton, who is now the Baroness von Graffenried. The Robert Colliers do not intend to go to Newport. They will go abroad in the later Summer.

Marrying in May has suddenly become popular and in the week to come there are to be several weddings which had been arranged to take place later in the season. Among these will be that of Harry Twyford Peters and Miss Natalie Wells, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. Storrs Wells, and of Edward Hosmer and Miss de Peyster, a sister of Mrs. Garrett Kip. There were several weddings of interest during the past week. That of Walter Phelps Dodge and Mrs. Coles was one of these. Mrs. Flora Bigelow Dodge, who has a cottage at Sioux Falls, had the ceremony performed at her home. Mr. Dodge is well known as a writer on travels. He is a Yale man. His first wife was an Englishwoman, but the match was not a happy one. Mrs. Flora Bigelow Dodge arrived at Sioux Falls in time for the ceremony. She went directly from New York, where she remained until the sailing of her intimate friend, the Countess of Suffolk.

A London wedding was also one of much interest in New York, where the bride is very well known, having been here a year ago, and having given several lectures and held some conferences. The wedding was that of Miss Olive Christian Malvery to Archibald Mackirdy, United States Consul at Muscat, Arabia, a full account of which was in the cable reports of THE TIMES. The bride is the daughter of a Scotch clergyman. Her mother was an East Indian Christian. While in this country Mrs. Mackirdy always wore the native costume and was a picturesque personality. She was a very pretty young woman with a very musical voice, and her lectures were given under the patronage of a number of fashionable women. For a time in New worth. The largest fashionable wedding in town was that of Miss Macaffee to Lewis Butler Preston. Mr. and Mrs. Preston will go shortly abroad on their wedding tour.

This week will witness several weddings, thus brushing away the absurd old superstition about May. In fact, of all of those who have married in this month there are but few instances of unhappiness or of disaster in after life. In fact, the percentage of happy marriages has been greater, so far as fashionable society is concerned. Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Mackay celebrated the anniversary of their marriage on Wednesday. The wedding took place at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. William Duer on West Twenty-first Street seven years ago. The first wedding of the week will be that of Miss Elsie Waterbury, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James M. Waterbury, to Gouverneur Morris, which will take place tomorrow at St. Peter's, Westchester. This will be followed by a reception at the country seat of Mr. and Mrs. Waterbury. Miss Dorothy Pierrepont Edwards will be maid of honor.

+ + +

On Thursday, May 25, Miss Estelle de Peyster, the daughter of the late Col. Johnston de Peyster, will be married to Edward Sturges Hosmer at Grace Church. Owing to the recent death of Frederic J. de Peyster, a relative, the wedding will be a very quiet one. Miss Justine de Peyster, a sister of the bride, will be maid of honor, and Louis Holyoke Hosmer will be best man. The bride will be given away by her brother-in-law, Garrett Kip. Mr. Hosmer is the nephew of the late William Sturges, whose widow married Francis H. Leggett. The ushers will be Samuel Blagden, Jr., Killaen Van Rensselaer, Jr., D. McR. Livingston, Walter Dorsey Davidge, and Theodore Hansen, Secretary of the Russian Embassy, Washington.

+ + +

On Saturday, at the wedding of Miss Honor Ellsworth Barr, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William R. Barr of 13 West Fifty-sixth Street, to John Sheafe Douglas, Miss Gillian Barr will be maid of honor, and the Misses Hildegarde Turie, [illegible]cie Mayo-Smith, Hilda H. Goodwin, Grace Quackenbush, Helena Ruth [illegible]urd Ely, and Maria S. Douglas will be the bridesmaids, and Frederick Douglas will be best man. The ushers will be Reginald Jevons, Washington Brauns, Louis C. Berrian, and Horatio Krans.

Miss Violet Richardson will have a home wedding on Thursday when she marries Eben R. Knowlton. The ceremony will take place at the Grosvenor, Fifth Avenue and Tenth Street, where Miss Richardson and her mother have made their home this spring. Miss Dorothy Annan will be maid of honor. The best man will be Ira Richards. There will be an informal reception after the ceremony.

+ + +

At Middletown, Conn., on Thursday, will take place the wedding of Miss Helen Pickering Russell, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Russell, to Charles Russell Auchincloss, the son of Mr. and Mrs. John W. Auchincloss. There will be a number of guests from town who will take the trip to this pretty Connecticut village for the ceremony and reception. It is to be a green and white wedding. Miss Elizabeth Auchincloss, sister of the bridegroom, will be maid of honor. The bridesmaids will include the Misses Mary Cozzine Lefferts, Edith Kent Sanger, Evelyn, Ruth, and Maud Jackson, and Emily D. Grugan. The best man will be Charles C. Auchincloss, and the ushers Samuel Russell, Jr., and T. MacDonough Russell, brothers of the bride; J. Howland Auchincloss, John Grenville Bates, Gustav Schwab, Jr., Joseph B. Thomas, Jr., Clive Livingston Du Val, and Arthur Douglas Dodge.

Thursday has been chosen as the date of the wedding of Miss Natalie Wells and Harry T. Peters. This will be a very large church affair with a small reception afterward. Miss Wells is one of the Newport belles. Mr. Peters gave his farewell bachelor dinner last week. He belongs to the New York branch of an old Philadelphia family. His best man on Thursday will be Harold H. Weekes and the ushers Albert Z. Gray, Lewis Iselin, Henry O. Havemeyer, Jr., H. B. Williams, Jr., David Wagstaff, and Harry I. Nichols. Mr. and Mrs. Peters will go abroad for the Summer. The wedding was to have taken place later at Newport, but owing to the illness of the bride's mother an earlier date was arranged.

+ + +

A Friday in May is certainly a sensible fillip to the superstitious as a date for a wedding day. Next Friday Miss Eleanor Atwood Scott, daughter of Justice and Mrs. Francis M. Scott, will be married to William Henry Tew at Trinity Chapel. The wedding will be a very picturesque one. The ceremony will be performed by the Rev. Frederick George Scott of St. Matthew's Church, Quebec, who is a cousin of the bride. Miss Margaret Sims Scott, a sister of the bride, will be maid of honor. James Dinsmore Tew will be best man. Mrs. Frank Dresser is to be matron of honor, and the bridesmaids are the Misses Dorothy and Elizabeth Hurry, Miss Betty Collamore, and the Misses Mirian[illegible] ushers will be John Douglas Kilpatrick, Clifford Buckingham, and T. Sutherland Scott of this city; Frank L. Warren, Jr., of Stockbridge, Mass.; Charles Cogall Egbert of Niagara, Ontario; Alfred J. Brandt of Holland, Charles E. Carpenter of Baltimore, and Ralph Whiting of Boston. A small reception will follow the ceremony at the residence of the bride's parents.

Mrs. A. Cass Canfield. (Photo by Bradley Studios.)

+ + +

Another May wedding which is of National interest will be that of Capt. Richmond Pearson Hobson, who has appeared in print more than any other young navy hero, since his first exploit in the days of the Spanish War, and Miss Grizelda Houston Hull of Tuxedo. Miss Hull is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George H. Hull, and a granddaughter of Judge Russell Houston of Kentucky. The Hulls have lived at Tuxedo for the last two years. Owing to the recent death of Capt. Hobson's father the wedding will be a very quiet affair. It takes place on Thursday at the residence of the bride's parents at Tuxedo. There will be neither ushers nor bridesmaids. A few intimate friends and relatives will be present at the ceremony. Capt. Hobson and his bride will reside at the old Hobson homestead, Magnolia Grove, Greensborough, Ala.

+ + +

The Hon. Hugo Baring and Lady Baring keep open house at the Lodge at Douglaston. This place of Mrs. William P. Douglas has been a favorite retreat for English people, and the Lodge at one time was occupied by Capt. and Mrs. Randolph. The former died and was buried at Douglaston, and the latter became the second wife of the late William C. Whitney, and was also interred temporarily at her death in the little cemetery at the same place.

There will be many weddings in June. June 1 will be the date for at least four of these, and nuptial events will be the order of the day until nearly the end of the month. St. James's Church, Madison Avenue and Seventy-first Street, will be the scene of the wedding of Miss Louise Hollins and Henry Chauncey Cryder on June 6. Mr. Cryder is the son of William Wetmore Cryder. Miss Hollins is the daughter of William M. Hollins of Montclair. The wedding reception will be given at the residence of the bride's uncle, Charles A. Wissmann. The Misses Hollins, who lost their mother when they were very young, lived with their grandmother, Mrs. Wissmann, until she died, and their home has since then been with their uncle. Miss Edith Hollins will be maid of honor. The best man will be Charles Keller Beekman and the ushers are to be A. Gordon Norrie, I. Chauncey McKeever, Theodore A. Havemeyer, and Richard T. Wainwright. [illegible] some years Mr. Cryder made his [illegible] at the St. Antony Club, both the young people have many relatives and are connected with a number of the prominent families at Newport and in New York. Mr. Cryder is a near relative of the George Peabody Wetmores, and also of the Cryders and Hunters, and other well-known families. His mother was a Miss Chauncey. One of Miss Hollins's uncles, F. De Ruyter Wissmann, married Miss Jones, a sister of Mrs. William E. Iselin and Mrs. Louis Cruger Hasell.

Miss Sara Means, who is to marry Vivian Spencer on June 3 at the family residence at Mount Kisco, will have Miss Thompson as maid of honor, and the best man will be Henry D. Spencer. The ushers will be Charles H. Welles, Henry Talmage, 2d, James D. Layng, Jr., and George J. Byer.

Saturday is always the most fashionable day at Belmont Park. Meadow Brook and Long Island people are entertaining house parties, and their guests flock to the park and the clubhouse. Thus are gathered together such representative people as Mr. and Mrs. Mortimer Brooks, who have taken the Foxhall Keene house; Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Waterbury, Mr. and Mrs. H. Van Rensselaer Kennedy, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Hitchcock, Jr., Mrs. Eustis, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, and Mr. and Mrs. Payne Whitney, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Mackay, August Belmont, Mr. and Mrs. Norman De R. Whitehouse, Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Bird, Mr. and Mrs. Perry Belmont, Mrs. James L. Kernochan, Mr. and Mrs. Fellowes, Miss Fellowes, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Peters, Mr. and Mrs. Havemeyer, Miss Sands, Mr. and Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Oliver H. P. Belmont, and a host of others. It is true that recent sailings have depleted the list. Robert L. Gerry and Miss Gerry have been frequent visitors, giving several parties on the coach. Alfred Vanderbilt has driven either down to Belmont Park or to Ardsley. Mrs. Alfred Vanderbilt is at the latter place, and twice this past week has she had guests on the coach, taking them to Ardsley to luncheon. The Elbridge T. Gerrys are booked to sail this week, and Mr. and Mrs. Whitelaw Reid and Miss Reid are also booked for the end of the week on the 27th. To many, however, as the season has been late, these bookings mean little, as departures have been postponed. James Henry Smith is in town and has not sailed. Bourke Cockran has gone abroad, and it is said that he will not return until very late in the Autumn. He has leased his house at Sand's Point. Mr. Cockran will have a daughter to bring out within a few years.

It has been rumored, but without authority, that Mrs. Astor contemplates returning to Newport earlier than usual. Mrs. Astor has certain set dates for sailing and for her different terms of residence in various places. About eight years ago she varied this and went to Newport in June. It was a cold month, with weather very much like that of the past week, and she never repeated the experiment. It will be also remembered that she became quite ill a few Summers ago, and left Newport and returned to Europe. Her daughter, Mrs. Haig, has returned to her English home and Mrs. Astor will be with her in London during June. James J. Van Alen will shortly arrive in this country. He is to have a fishing fortnight at his Nova Scotia club and will look in at Newport, but will not open his house there this year if he keeps his present plans.

Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Harriman will remain at White Plains until late in the Summer, when they go to Newport for a short season. That resort will miss Mr. and Mrs. William E. Carter, who have taken a house near Rugby, in England. Mr. and Mrs. Harry Lehr, whose arrival in this country was announced last week, have taken the Carter cottage at Newport for the Summer.

Miss Alice Roosevelt is to be at so many places and is so much in demand that it is difficult to know exactly her plans. It was arranged that she would go with a party to the Philippines. Mr. and Mrs. Robert Goelet are to have her as a guest at Newport in August, and she will also visit several of her girl friends who are now married. She will not go abroad and be presented at Court. Robert W. Goelet will keep open hall at his mother's villa at Newport and will be one of the several entertaining bachelors who are increasing each year there. James V. Parker, the dean of the set, has already opened his cottage and established himself in his Summer home. Lispenard Stewart is to have White Lodge as usual, and last week it was opened. There is Mr. Brugiere, from California, and a Mr. Rainey from the West, and should James Henry Smith really appear at Newport, the colony would have a most welcome addition. Mr. and Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish will open the Crossways in July about the same time that Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs will appear at her villa. Mr. and Mrs. Oliver H. P. Belmont are to be at Belcourt, so that the [illegible] of one little set is already at [illegible] Doubtless Mr. and Mrs. Charles Hill-

Society will be centralized more than ever after this year. There is always a little unbending and opening of gates in Summer, especially when young and dancing men are needed, but even Newport will be a place of sets. There is no doubt much exaggeration in the rumor that Mrs. Vanderbilt next Winter is to organize a dancing class, the limit to be placed at twenty. But there have been exclusive classes before, in past years, when it was a most difficult feat to become enrolled as a member. But men began to fight shy of these assemblies, and they were soon voted old-fashioned, and to-day, except for the younger set not out in society, the only one remaining of the several then existing is the Saturday Evening, irreverently and unjustly called the "Small and Hungry"; possibly because given on Saturday evening, it was in the nature of a Cinderella dance, and a light but all-sufficient supper was served. The Family Dancing Class is now but a memory of other times, and it is very doubtful if even Mrs. Vanderbilt could get up or revive interest in this form of amusement in her set to-day. However, the extremely rich contingent of society will continue to become more and more exclusive, and should Mrs. Astor or Mrs. Gerry decide to drop the yearly ball or reception, the last chance of a general reunion of society would vanish. Under new conditions a few hostesses can follow the English custom and ask to a dance, a ball, or an evening all kinds and castes of people who are clever and famous and prominent in their sphere of life. But there are very few who entertain in New York who have either the established position or the temerity to do this. When in the course of human events Mrs. Astor's ball will have ceased to be a yearly occurrence, society much more general and much more interesting will have to look to Mrs. Mackay, if she would take a town house of sufficient size to give large entertainments. But the time of the dancing class lies in the past except for the purpose of neighborhood reunions, or school graduate affairs, such as the Farmington or one or two larger dances like the Junior Cotillion.

Mr. and Mrs. George Vanderbilt remain at Biltmore until the middle of June. They are to give a flower fête during that month. They have had a succession of large parties all during the Spring. Mr. and Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., have not entertained on a very large scale as yet. Their house will not be ready for some time. Mr. and Mrs. Payne Whitney are living in a very simple manner, having now and then a few friends over for Sunday. Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Van Rensselaer have begun their annual yachting cruise, and were in New York with a party for the ocean race. William E. Iselin will have a June cruise in the Emerald. Mr. and Mrs. C. Oliver Iselin and the Misses Iselin are at New Rochelle. The neighborhood of Katonah promises to be one of the new fashionable centres in the suburbs. Mr. and Mrs. John Livermore are to be there, and Mr. and Mrs. Louis Boissevain are building in the neighborhood. Social life centres around the country seat of Col. William Jay. The majority of the fashionable set are to be but a short time at Newport, possibly a part of August and September, but the pied à terre for the majority will be country seats in the neighborhood of town. In these days of motors, society is quite independent of the railway. During the week the restaurants and theatres were crowded with well-known people, notwithstanding the European exodus. With Tuxedo, Westchester, Long Island, and the Hudson within motoring distance, there will not be a dull moment in town until the dog days have set in.

Mr. and Mrs. W. Goadby Loew are opening their place near Seabright. Mr. and Mrs. William Street are to entertain there this year, and Mrs. Neeser and the Misses Neeser will give house parties all during the Summer. This coming week Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Kernochan open their place at Navesink Highlands. Mayor and Mrs. George B. McClellan will, according to present plans, occupy a cottage on the Jersey coast this Summer. The bungalow experiment made at the Baltusrol Club has proved a gratifying success. Many little dinners are given out there these May days, and there is always a crowd over Sundays.

+ + +

Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Robinson have opened their place on Orange Mountain. Later they will go to Richfield Springs.

+ + +

Departures for Lenox continue, and the season there promises to be very gay. Miss Elizabeth Remsen will go there this week. She has taken a cottage in the Berkshires for the Summer.

+ + +

At Ridgefield, on June 3, Miss Winona King of Albany will be married to Oliver Perin of Baltimore. Miss Irene King, who is the fiancée of Francis Carley, a brother of Mrs. Oliver Harriman, will be maid of honor. The ushers will be Nelson Perin, Francis Carley, William Hitt, Percy Pyne, 2d, Ebens Byers, and Nat McKay. Lawrence Perin will be best man. The bride [illegible] will be given away by her [illegible] law, E. S. J. McVickar of this city, and Bishop McVickar of Rhode Island will perform the ceremony.

Mrs. Frederick Neilson is in town, but will soon sail for Europe. Mr. and Mrs. William Rockefeller will be at their country seat, near Greenwich, on June 1. William G. Rockefeller, Jr., will give his usual Spring fishing party at his Adirondack lodge in June. Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Vanderbilt are also to take a party there as soon as the coaching season closes and before they settle at Newport for the Summer.

Society yesterday divided its patronage between Belmont and Morris Parks. The opening of the new automobile speeding track made it a gala day for Westchester. The past week the Orange Horse Show also attracted fashionable patronage. Mr. and Mrs. Ira Kip, Jr., are to entertain at their new farm the first week in June. Morristown will have its usual week-end attractions, and the Brookline Horse Show will take the Reggie Vanderbilts and others Bostonway.

Turning from all these plans of brightness, happiness, and gayety, to the more sombre side of existence, the necrology of the week has placed a number of prominent families in mourning. On the 13th Frederic J. de Peyster was laid to rest with his ancestors in Trinity Churchyard. Mrs. de Peyster, her son, and her daughters have the sympathies of a large circle of friends. The de Peysters have always maintained the hospitable traditions of the old New York set. Their former home on Forty-second Street was the scene of many a charming gathering. At Lakewood each Autumn they formed a part of a delightful set of people who have gone for years to a certain hotel and ranged around themselves a most agreeable society of their own, and among their number were the Pells and the Rhinelanders and others bearing historic names. The death of William Everard Strong was very sudden. Mrs. Strong and her daughter, Miss Strong, were just about to sail for Europe, to visit Mrs. Moreton Gage, the elder daughter. Mr. Strong was a member of the Union, Knickerbocker, and other clubs. Mrs. Strong was a Miss Smyth, one of a well-known New York family. Mrs. Strong and Miss Strong will be at their Summer place on the New Jersey coast later in the year.

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

THE ancient superstition that May is an unlucky month in which to marry is certainly exploded, for the list of weddings for this month will compare favorably in numbers with those of last, even with the Lenten ceremonies, which heretofore have been as rare as weddings in May. Of course the week following Easter is always crowded with marital events, for the majority of people are still in town, whereas early in May many depart for Europe or open their country homes, and in any event most of the town houses are closed at that time. Nevertheless, June always brings a few town weddings, and fashionable ones, despite the fact that the town is then deserted by society. After this it will be foolish to regard May as any less a month of weddings than April or June.

Several young women of social prominence in New York have had homes of their own with a menage independent of that of their family. Mrs. Henry Spies Kip, while Miss Frances Coster Jones, had an apartment and lived with a chaperon there, practicing music faithfully; indeed, the whole apartment building in which she lived resounded with melody—or the reverse, as most of those having apartments in it were studying music. Mrs. Kip is the daughter of Mrs. Lewis Q. Jones by her first husband, who was a brother of her second husband, so that Mrs. Kip's stepfather was also her uncle. Another young girl to set up a separate establishment is Miss Marguerite Chapin, daughter of the late Lindley Hoffman Chapin by his first wife. Miss Chapin spent most of the Winter in Paris. Her stepmother, Mrs. L. H. Chapin, is a charming woman and quite young. In neither of these cases has there been any family differences leading to separate households. Miss May Van Alen, in taking a house of her own in town and having it rebuilt for her future occupancy is therefore no pioneer, and besides, Miss Van Alen is much older than the young women already mentioned. In England Lady Rose Molyneux was the first society girl to establish a country home. With the approval of her parents she occupied one of the Befton residences, where she kept her own staff of servants and entertained house parties independently of the rest of her family. She is a sister of Lord Sefton, and her sister, now married, Lady Gertrude, is quite an authority on India, as she has lived there and knows it and its people well.

That white or pure gray hair adds greatly to a woman's appearance there can be no doubt, especially if the woman be youthful in either reality or appearance. Among the New York women blessed with such coiffures are Mrs. F. Egerton Webb, who was Miss Mary Randolph; Mrs. M. V. S. Tiffany, who was Miss Mary Virginia Smith and a sister of Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont; Mrs. Franklin Bartlett, who was Miss Bertha Post, and Mrs. Stephen Olin, who was Miss Emmie Harriman, and whose first husband was William E. Dodge, a son of the philanthropist. Mrs. John Jacob Astor, whose almost black hair is now half silver, has gained in beauty by the change. The effect produced by Mme. Van André, sister of Mrs. Chauncey M. Depew, at Sherry's one evening at the dinner hour, when she entered with silver gray hair done in Pompadour coiffure and gowned in silver gray [illegible] embroidered in silver, [illegible]

The truth is that white hair enhances the beauty of a handsome woman and redeems the homely one by softening her features and complexion and imparting a touch of the unusual, the latter a distinction in itself to most people.

Mrs. Marion Crawford, wife of F. Marion Crawford the novelist, although she has two grown daughters, is said by an American women who recently met her abroad to look not a day over twenty-six. She is a blond, slender and graceful, and exceedingly fond of society; quite a butterfly, in fact, and altogether different in her tastes from her husband. The home of the Crawfords is in Sorrento, on the Bay of Naples, and there Mrs. Crawford spends most of her time. Mr. Crawford spent several months in New York only a short time ago.

Mrs. Hugh Fraser, sister of Marion Crawford, and who has just started on a lecture tour here, is a personal friend of the Emperor and Empress of Japan, and was also of the late Queen Victoria. Her husband was British Envoy for some years to the Mikado's kingdom, and it was in Japan itself that Mrs. Fraser had for some years a chance to closely study modern Japanese life. Her book of stories—Japanese romances—is one never to be forgotten by those who read it, and her other novels and books have proved most fascinating. She was, of course, a daughter of Crawford, the famous sculptor, and lived many years in Italy. Her success in the matter of the recent Japanese tableaux for the benefit of the widows and orphans of the Japanese soldiers and sailors in the present war was a marked one. When a child her father modeled her in one of his statues, and that particular study has been a favorite with the admirers of his art. Mrs. Fraser has cordial and charming manners, being unassuming and sympathetic. In appearance she is of middle height, slight, with expressive gray eyes, an aquiline nose, soft gray hair, and a most agreeable voice.

Mrs. Thomas Hitchcock, Jr., one of the crack horsewomen of the fashionable set, has had several bad croppers during her hunting career, but has never been at all daunted by them. She was taught at an early age to ride and drive, and has always been devoted to out-door sports. She is tall, with a very slim, straight figure, and almost invariably dresses in the severest of mannish fashions, even her handsome costumes of delicate or rich colors have coat effects and straight lines. Mrs. Hitchcock is a granddaughter of the late W. W. Corcoran of Washington, founder of the famous Corcoran Art Gallery there. In this gallery hangs a portrait of Mrs. Hitchcock's mother, Mrs. Eustis, who died while still young, to be followed by her husband. Mrs. Hitchcock was brought up by her aunt, Miss Celestine Eustis at the Eustis home at Aiken, where every Winter Mrs. Hitchcock and her husband spend much of the time. She was the first to introduce riding astride, and her doing so created quite a sensation at Aiken. She is one of the leading spirits in the Meadow Brook hunting set, and a fearless rider to hounds. Mr. Hitchcock is a brother of Center Hitchcock.

The going of W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr., into practical railroad work recalls the interesting case of Bertrand Fangers Bell, a nephew of Mrs. Morgan Dix, who, although a millionaire, worked as a day laborer in the works at Chillicothe, Ohio, of the Baltimore and Ohio Southwestern Railway, of which his father had been a Director, in order to understand the workings of the entire business of railroading. His mother was a Miss Soutter, a member of an old and prominent family of Virginia. She married the late Edward R. Bell of New York, and after the death of his parents Mr. Bell made his home with his aunt, Mrs. Dix, wife of the Rev. Dr. Morgan Dix, rector of Trinity. He was graduated from Harvard, was a brilliant linguist, and traveled extensively. A few years since he went to Chillicothe and started in as a day laborer in the railway shops there. He was both generous and kind, and his fellow-workmen liked him for himself. After working all day in the shops he would spend his evenings in fashionable society, and, meeting Miss Beatrice Boggs, a daughter of the late Marcus Boggs, became engaged to her. The marriage took place some two years ago. After Mr. Bell had become familiar with the work of the shops he left and took a place as fireman on one of the engines of the Baltimore and Ohio Southwestern Railroad, and later, after learning all about the practical side of the work, gave up that line of work. His home is Elm Ridge, at Scarsdale, N. Y.

It seems incredible that in these days and in this country a healthy, uncrippled human being could grow to womanhood without having been more than two blocks away from the building in which she was born. Nevertheless, a member of the Henry Booth House Woman's Club of Chicago told Miss Emma Pischel, the club's leader, that prior to joining the club and going with other members on their outings, she had not been more than two blocks distant from her birthplace. This club is unique, reaching a class of narrow-minded women with neither means nor desire to enlarge their mental horizon. It is doing away with race prejudices between its members, who are the very poor residents of the district in Chicago in which it exists, West Fourteenth Place. The club was started about four years ago. A man, William Noyes, was its first resident head. He was succeeded by Miss Gertrude Barnum, and when she took up other duties her place was temporarily filled by Miss Mary Jenney, but Miss Pischel, who has been its head for two years, succeeded Miss Barnum. The beginnings were very small indeed, for a house-to-house canvass succeeded in bringing only about eight women together, but now it numbers about sixty, with an average attendance of half that number. In addition to entertainments for the members, talks on hygiene, the proper care of children, and on other topics are frequently given, but the introduction of new ideas is hard indeed. The women listen respectfully, but go on in their old tracks, claiming that the way they were cared for and brought up is good enough for their children. Nevertheless, the workers believe that by persistent effort they will finally accomplish many needed hygienic reforms. This Summer a community kitchen garden, on a vacant lot hired for the experiment, is to be tried, as last year the backyard gardening proved productive of good results, and this chiefly because the growing children of the club members delight in working in the earth and in planting seeds and seeing things grow.

Lady Oranmore, who has recently arrived in London, is one of the English society musicians. She has a really fine voice and her playing is excellent. She comes from a musical family, her sisters all being musical, and before their marriages they gave family musicales, each girl having her own instrument, and the programme would include duets and trios. Lady Oranmore was the Hon. Olwen Ponsonby, and was married four years ago. The full title of the family she married into is Oranmore and Browne. There are few of these double titles; others are Broughman and Vaux, Winchelsea and Nottingham, and Mowbray and Stoughton.

Other musical families are those of Georgina Lady Belhaven, whose seven daughters played on as many different instruments and their mother on another, so that they formed a complete orchestra. Lady Alexander Kennedy and her two daughters play the piano, violin, and violoncello, respectively.

Of titled Englishmen given to music, Lord Shaftesbury is a good example. He sings well and plays also, often singing for the benefit of his poorer neighbors. He is to sing on June 15 at the Irish Folk-Song Concert, to take place in Londonderry House. He sings the folk-songs of Donegal, and is much interested in other old Irish songs, and is a great-grandson of that Marchioness of Donegal to whom Thomas Moore dedicated some of his Irish melodies. Lady Shaftesbury is also fond of music and has a box at the opera two nights each week. She is the eldest sister of the Duke of Westminster, being formerly the Lady Constance Grosvenor, and has the odd nickname of "Cuckoo."

Lady Henry Bentinck, whose nickname is "Queenie," and who was the Lady Olivia Taylor, is also devoted to music, as is her mother, Lady Bective, and she often gives concerts in her home. She was a very great heiress, much money and estate being taken from the Headfort title for her. She married in 1892 a half-brother of the Duke of Portland. Lady Henry Bentinck is also one of a number of young, or comparatively young, English society women who have gray or white hair, and whose number, like those on this side of the water, seems to be increasing. Lady de Gray, Lady Brassey, who was recently here; Mrs. Rhodes, and Mrs. Hall Walker are among the possessors of gray hair.

Kunzite is a new, semi-precious, mauve stone, and a novelty in jewelry. There are zircons that look like brown diamonds, and many varieties of green stones, including apple-green chrysophrase, peridots, tourmalines and olivines, pink sapphires, white topazes, Labrador, jade, and onyx, all of which are being made up in the most artistic fashion. Strangest of all, however, is the water stone of Uruguay; it is semi-transparent and white, and in its centre is water, that moves about as the stone is moved. The fashion of wearing inexpensive colored beads, imitations of semi-precious stones, or with no pretense at imitating anything, is an artistic fad. There are both round and oval lilac and heliotrope beads of necklace length that are pretty with mauve gowns, and green ones for green gowns, and so on. A white lace or muli blouse over a lilac slip, a lilac skirt and coat and a hat trimmed with lilacs is enhanced by a short string of lilac-hued crystal beads. For those who object to imitations of jewels, but who haven't the money for the costly real articles, real amber and coral and gold beads can be procured at low prices. There are many odd necklaces to be procured for a very few dollars, and of which there appear to be only one of a kind, to be picked up in the shops, and, as these are artistic, what more could be desired? To wear an imitation necklace by no means implies that the wearer believes it will deceive any one, or desires that beholders should believe it is something other than it is—an ornament pure and simple.

The London season promises to be a gay one, and there will probably be two Courts in May and one in June. The change from the former afternoon function to evening Drawing Rooms, followed by dancing, is a great improvement on the former Courts and one much enjoyed by the younger set, and those who are presented.

The Duchess of Marlborough has opened Sunderland House and is expected to entertain, and the Duchess of Sutherland is expected to give a ball for her niece, Miss Ivy Gordon-Lennox. The latter was over here during the late Winter or early Spring, and with her parents, Lord and Lady Algernon Gordon-Lennox, was entertained by the C. T. Barneys.

The Duchess of Roxburghe will hardly entertain in London before the latter part of the season, if at all. The Duchess of Devonshire purposes giving her annual ball at the close of Derby Day, and at this both the King and Queen will probably be present. Lady Eileen Wellesley is to come out, and it is likely that her mother, the Duchess of Wellington, will give a ball at Apsley House in her honor. Another débutante, who is the daughter of a Duchess, is the Lady Olga Osborne, for whom her mother, the Duchess of Leeds, will entertain. Lady Minto may give a dance for the Ladies Eileen and Ruby Elliott, and it is counted on as certain that Mrs. Mackay will give a fine ball at her home, on Carleton House Terrace, in honor of her granddaughter, the daughter of the Princess Stigliano Colonna, also a débutante. Lady Norreys and Lady Eden will both entertain for their daughters, Miss Alexandra Bertie and Miss Elfrida Eden. The craze for fancy or costume affairs is on the wane, and dinner dances and dinners, followed by bridge, promise to be the continuous events. The King frowns on house parties over the week end out of town, so smart London will spend its Sundays in town.

+ + +

Lady Colebrook is giving a series of political dinners. Lady Wimborne, Lady Hayter, Lady Cawdor, Lady Salisbury, Lady Denman, and other hostesses interested in politics will entertain a great deal.

+ + +

On the other hand, the death of the Dowager Duchess of Abercorn has placed in mourning Lady Lansdowne, the Duchess of Buccleuch, the Duchess of Abercorn, and others. It is said also that the Duchess of Westminster may go with the Duke to South Africa. Mrs. Adair, who has not been well, will go to the country, and Mrs. Chauncey will summer on the Continent. What Mrs. John Jacob Astor will do in the way of entertaining remains to be seen, but her taking a house in London added to her popularity within so short a time promise something.

THE SOCIAL WHIRL.

THE last meeting for the season of the Mary Arden Shakespeare Club took the form of a reception and breakfast in the Hotel Regent. The reception was at 12:30 on Wednesday, the luncheon at 1. The President, Mrs. Anna Randall Deihl, was assisted in receiving by Mesdames D. C. Morrison and J. V. Donahue and Miss Pelletreau. There were covers laid for thirty-five at luncheon, which was served in the small dining room, the guests being seated around five small tables and one long one, the President's table, where were also the guests of honor. They were Mesdames John H. Judge, Clarence Burns, Selle De Rivera, Sergbois, Pelletreau, and Toastmistress Doré Lyon. The decorations were white carnations and yellow daisies on a background of asparagus ferns and brake. There were music and readings after the affair for the entertainment of the ladies, and a vote of thanks and appreciation was given to Mrs. Edward Morse Cutler for the very able way in which she filled the position of Chairman of the Luncheon Committee. Those who entertained were Mrs. Anita Hendricks-Spence, Miss Clementine Tétedoux, and Miss Penfield.

Mr. and Mrs. A. Lacklin, who sailed Thursday on the Grosser Kurfuerst for a three months' trip to Europe, have been guests for some time of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Hatfield, residents of the Hotel Ansonia.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank D. Jordan of 231 West Eighty-ninth Street, will open their Summer home in Morristown in June.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Gordan, 244 West One Hundred and Fourth Street, have left town for their Summer residence in Pittsfield, Mass.

On Tuesday there will be a dance following the commencement exercises of the Hamilton Institute in the Leslie Rooms, Broadway and Eighty-third Street. A number of west side society people have received invitations. Mrs. Archibald Shaw, 108 West Eighty-first Street, will receive.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Bissett sailed for Europe on Thursday for a visit of seven weeks to Mr. Bissett's home in Aberdeen, Scotland.

Henry J. Ryan has returned from a two weeks' visit to his sister, Miss Kate E. Ryan, Dalton, Mass., to his apartments in the Ansonia.

Mrs. D. Mingle, 417 West Eighty-sixth Street, left last week for her country home in Allenhurst, N. J.

Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Rogers are spending a few weeks at their country place in Postchester, N. Y.

The Misses Alice and Carrie Pye of West One Hundred and Twenty-third Street will return next week from a trip to Washington and Philadelphia.

The Fortnightly Euchre Club held the last meeting for the season in the Palm Court of the Hotel Endicott on Thursday. The gathering was the largest of the Winter.

Mr. and Mrs. George Primrose are visiting Mr. and Mrs. D. C. Jacobs, residents of the Hotel Belleclaire, Broadway and Seventy-seventh Street.

Mrs. Andrew Carnegie has given her consent to have her name used as Vice President of the Women's Peace Circle of New York City, of which Mrs. Arnold Schramm is the founder and Mrs. Harry Hastings the President. The Circle held its first meeting on Thursday at 3:30, in the Madison Square Theatre. Some of the other officers are Mesdames Richard Bent, M. Helen E. Montfort, George Steele, Bradhurst Schieffelin, C. C. Catt, A. M. Palmer, Jacob Litt, Oscar Strauss, A. G. Spencer, D. B. St. John Matthews, and Esther Hermann.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry B. Durnham and Miss Durnham, who spend their Winters in the Ansonia, have gone to their Summer home in San Francisco.

Miss Florence Newman sailed for Europe on Thursday, to be gone about two months.

Mr. and Mrs. John S. Huyler, 8 West Seventy-second Street, are in town for a short time before going for the season to Larchmont. They have lately returned from a trip of six weeks through the West.

Last Sunday the New York City Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution attended a special service in Old Trinity. The sermon by the Rev. Dr. Nevitt Steele, chaplain of the chapter, was a particularly stirring one. After the service the Daughters went in a body and decorated the graves of the Revolutionary patriots, thence to the statue of Washington, in front of the Sub-Treasury Building, and laid a tribute of lilies there. On Tuesday the Daughters of the Revolution unveiled a window in St. Luke's Chapel, West One Hundred and Fourteenth Street, and invited Mrs. Donald McLean, Regent of the Daughters of the American Revolution, to be their guest of honor. This week Mrs. McLean will start for Genesee Valley, where she will be entertained by the Katherine Schuyler Chapter, of which Mrs. Hamilton Ward is Regent. On Saturday there will be a reception of the Mohican Chapter at Scarborough, in the home of Mrs. Trenton Arnold. Mrs. Henry S. Bowron is Honorary Regent of this chapter, and Miss Fuller Active Regent. From there Mrs. McLean will go to Trenton to attend a reception of the Trenton Chapter, Mrs. Alexander Jamieson Regent, thence to Annapolis, Md., where she will be the guest of Gov. and Mrs. Warfield. She will preside over the June meeting of the Daughters of the American Revolution in Washington before it adjourns for the Summer, and after visiting Cincinnati will return to New York.

A wedding that is looked forward to with great interest by upper west siders is that of Miss Margaret Heaton Wise, elder daughter of Dr. and Mrs. P. M. Wise, to Tredwell Gardner Hopkins. The ceremony will be performed by the Rev. Dr. Henry Evertson Cobb in the West End Collegiate Church, West End Avenue and Seventy-second Street, on Saturday, June 10, at 4:30, and will be followed by a reception at the Hotel St. Andrew, to which over three hundred invitations have been issued. The bride will wear a gown of white mousseline and carry a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley, and will be attended by Miss Marjorie C. Sanford, her maid of honor. The Misses Margaret Ewing of Ohio, and Helen Mason Wise, sister of the bride, will act as bridesmaids, and will carry pink roses. After the reception the young couple will leave for an extended tour of the Canadian lakes, and will be at home, on their return, in Yonkers. The best man will be Louis D. Hopkins, brother of the groom, and the ushers Thomas Mallaby, John Fowler Trow, Jr., Charles Clark Perkins, and Bert Prentice.

On Friday the final meeting for the season of the Friday Afternoon Euchre Club will be held at the residence of Mrs. Bartell, 345 West One Hundred and Twenty-first Street. Some of the members are Mesdames Seabrook, Camp, McCarney, Sipe, Stone, Spannan, Glor, Rader, and Findley. Mrs. George Banfield is President of the club.

On Tuesday Mrs. S. R. Maas and Miss Rita Maas opened their cottage at Long Branch for the season.

On Saturday Miss Maida Pierce, 272 Lenox Avenue, will sail for Europe on the Graf Waldersee. Miss Pierce will not return until the middle of September.

Mrs. William A. Marble, 126 West One Hundred and Twenty-first Street, has closed her town house, and gone to Larchmont for the Summer months.

The committee in charge of the sale that was held on Friday in the United Charities Building for the benefit of the workers at Blackwell's Island and Flatbush were Mesdames Tunis G. Bergen, Wendell T. Bush, Nathan M. Clark, Harvey E. Fisk, and George Stevenson Bixby. Miss Emma Ireland was Chairman of the committee.

Mrs. Harry T. Sherman has left her apartments at the Marie Antoinette to spend the Summer in Europe.

Mr. and Mrs. James H. Logan and Miss Logan are at home in their quarters in the Ansonia, after a stay of six weeks in Petersburg, Va.

Mr. and Mrs. George A. Burt are going abroad soon, and while in London will be entertained by C. T. Yerkes.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur A. Stilwell, 118 West One Hundred and Twenty-first Street, have opened their cottage at Sound Beach, Conn.

Miss Mildred Farrington, 1,991 Madison Avenue, has recently announced her engagement to James R. McMann.

Mr. and Mrs. Norman Raff have returned to this city after a two months' trip through the West. The longest stops were made in San Francisco, Salt Lake City, and Denver.

Robert A. Brynt, who has been on a trip to Cincinnati and Columbus, Ohio, returned to his apartments, in the Endicott, last week.

Mrs. E. B. Williams, 68 West One Hundred and Seventh Street, is spending some weeks in South Carolina.

Last evening there was an impromptu dance in the dining room of the Colonial Hotel, Columbus Avenue and Eighty-second Street. C. F. Tucker was the host. Some of those who enjoyed his hospitality were the Misses Markherita, Allene, and Ruth Pierce; Mase, Wolf, Abrams, and Stull, and Messrs. J. and S. Schiffer, Bearman, Chisholm, Herpst, Hemphill, and Hoggard. The chaperon for the evening was Mrs. Pierce.

Mr. and Mrs. A. Linden, residents of the Belleclaire, sailed for Europe on Tuesday on the Caronia. They will travel through England and the Continent all Summer, returning to this city in September or October.

The final meeting for the season of the West Side Bowling Club was held on Wednesday, and was followed by a dinner. Some of the members are Mr. and Mrs. Donald Nicoll, Mr. and Mrs. Murdock Brown, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Potts, Mr. and Mrs. Asa Shipman, Miss Vassar, Miss Maida Pierce, and Messrs. Wallace Nicoll, Howard Sharkie, and Clarence Bell.

Mr. and Mrs. Austin Betteley have returned from their wedding trip to Philadelphia, and will be at home with the bride's family, at 49 West One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Street, for a month. They will spend the rest of the Summer at Long Beach and in New Hampshire, and will go to housekeeping in the city in the Fall.

Miss Ella Darling, 204 West Eighty-second Street, has as her guest Mrs. Armstrong of Chicago.

The National Society of New England Women, Colony No. 6, of Rutherford, N. J., will hold its last meeting and reception on Friday, June 16. Many New York women are interested, and will attend. Mrs. Theodore Glover is Chairman of the Entertainment Committee.

On Thursday evening, in the rooms of the National Arts Club, 37 West Thirty-fourth Street, the Riverside Branch of the Woman's Municipal League, together with representatives from the City Club, the Municipal Art Society, the Society of Landscape Architects, the Tree-Planting Association, and other affiliated societies, gave a stereopticon exhibition, with explanations, by Samuel Parsons, Jr., setting forth the conditions of the city's trees, more especially in Central Park. Miss Margaret Astor Chanler is President of the League, and the Chairman of the Riverside Branch is Mrs. A. L. Curtis.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Tate have opened their Summer residence at New Brighton, Staten Island.

Mrs. W. A. Bowron and Miss Bowron, who winter in the St. Andrew, have gone for the Summer to Mount Kisco, N. Y.

On Thursday, June 1, Miss Florence Carpenter, 526 West End Avenue, will be married to W. H. Geishenen in the West End Collegiate Church. The ceremony will be followed by a large reception in the home of the bride's parents.

Sheltering Arms: Its Origin and Work

DURING the week, and especially on the 29th of the month, the Sheltering Arms, at One Hundred and Twenty-ninth Street and Amsterdam Avenue, celebrates its forty-first birthday. It occupies nearly a whole square and looks like a bit out of old England. The oaks and particularly the ivy lend themselves to the impression, and the architecture of the cottages which form the Arms further supports the idea. Beneath the ivy which trails in profusion over the housefronts reside some 170 or 180 children.

Three elderly maiden ladies direct the home, daughters of a former rector of St. Mary's—the Misses Richmond, who have devoted their lives to carrying out the original bequest. One of them, Miss Sarah, is the Superintendent, who might easily stand for a portrait out of the Dickens gallery. It is only necessary to say that these ladies, who were the heirs of the property, now worth much over a half million, gave their loyal and life-long support to the idea of the donor, and have given effect to his intention to found a broad, far-reaching, and catholic charity.

Although the Arms is conducted under the auspices of the Episcopal Church, having been in the first instance a foundation of St. Michael's Church, it is not sectarian. Its inmates include representatives from all countries and faiths, and are chosen without prejudice in these matters. It is not an orphan asylum, nor yet a foundling home. It was originally established for the purpose of caring for those children not otherwise provided for by the manifold charities of the city. Nor is it distinctively eleemosynary. Nor does it furnish education in its own schools. Its inmates attend the public schools and have their home in the Arms, and in all meanings of the word home, they find it there. Nor does it ask city or State aid, and in this particular is almost unique among the institutions of the city. It has, however, an endowment fund amounting to $450,000, it lives in its own houses, has its own particular and worthy aims and is supported by the countenance and subscription of many of the most important and the oldest families in New York.

Such an institution is interesting, and a bare sketch of its history is not amiss at this anniversary time. It was founded in 1864 by the Rev. Thomas McClure Peters, who gave his own home on the west side of Bloomingdale Road at the southwest corner of One Hundred and First Street for its establishment. At this time there was found deserted on the City Hall steps a blind child named Maggie Boland. She was too young for admission to a blind asylum and was not an orphan, and was therefore not eligible for any institution then existing. The child and its circumstances were the subject of newspaper comment and general sympathy at the time, and she became the first inmate of the home. The house was opened with forty children and the demands for admission soon outgrew its capacity, and in 1670 it moved to its present quarters at One Hundred and Twenty-ninth Street, where it shares the block with St. Mary's Church, except a few lots on the northwest corner, one of which is occupied by the city Fire Department. Although at the beginning it was singular with reference to the children it received, there are now several homes in the city which have the same object in view, St. Christopher's, the Messiah Home, and St. Johnland.

Life in the Arms is conducted on the home cottage system, each cottage being in charge of a house mother, the main point being to retain the family as opposed to the institution, and to preserve, so far as possible, the individuality of the children. Much of the endowment fund has come from legacies and from endowed beds. These thousand dollars are, dows a bed perpetually. A gift of $500 constitutes the donor a patron and $100 secures an honorary life membership. The list of benefactors might almost be copied from the Blue Book, which gives the names of persons of social distinction in New York. In its long list are included the names of Astor, Aspinwall, Livingston, Fish, Bell, Butterfield, Cary, De Peyster, Draper, Furniss, Goelet, Graham, Gallaudet, Havemeyer, Hewitt, Cooper, Schermerhorn, Hoffman, Howland, Iselin, Lorillard, McKim, Minturn, Morton, Rhinelander, Steers, Stewart, Vanderbilt, Winthrop, and Zabriskie, to name only a few of the hundreds of patrons.

Some of these donors have built cottages, as the Cooper Cottage, built by Mrs. Peter Cooper; the Little May Cottage, in memory of May Cary, a granddaughter of the elder Astor; the Wolfe Cottage, the Van Horne Cottage, the Furniss Cottage, and so on. Others have given beds, and one of the most touching and interesting features of the little children's dormitories is to read the modest memorials that hang over the snow-white couches. Many of the inscriptions are entirely impersonal, as "In memory of Baby Tom," "May's bed," and referring to the report we find Baby Tom's bed supported by a fund of $2,693.86 and May's bed with $1,762.20, and beds marked simply "In Memoriam," which are fully endowed and whose givers do not let their left hand know what their right hand gave.

The moneys received from legacies and endowments has for thirty years been set aside from current expenses, because, in large part, the Arms is self-supporting, and its income meets, or nearly meets, its cost.

The life of the children in the Arms is as far removed from the institutional quality as possible, but still the establishment bears the stamp of the institution. The children wear in the grounds and in the cottages a uniform check smock. The younger ones have their hair cut short, and there is discipline, but there is no shrinking nor servility on the part of the inmates. They are visited by their friends at will, and there is, of course, no commitment on the part of the authorities to the homes. In fact, the applications are far in excess of the capacity of the houses, and some of these requests are refused for obvious reasons, as, for example, the wish of a well-to-do couple to have their boy, aged six, received, because they could not control him. Another parent presented a child because, at the ripe age of seven, he would not go to school. Their difficulty was left with them. But the children who are received are those having only one parent, or both, without home or facilities to care for it. For example, a cook, who cannot, of course, take a child with her when out at service, and yet earning $30 or $35 a month, is able to pay something for its maintenance. The children stay for a shorter or longer period, from a few months up to ten years. A number are employed in the Arms, and many of them, grown up and established in business, are frequent visitors to the home. Altogether, the Sheltering Arms is an interesting place.

Wanted to Get Home.

An eager curiosity stirred the boys in the office when Gusher appeared with a compass attached to his watch chain, instead of the locket he had worn for three years, a trinket which contained the miniature of a sweet-faced girl he was proud of showing when in a confidential mood. Gusher was unmercifully chaffed about the compass. He was asked if his yacht was in commission, and whether the compass was thrown in with his navy blue suit and yachting cap. Finally the victim said:

"Tell me, old man, what does it mean?"

"It means," replied Gusher, "that my old boy lives in Brooklyn."

HATS AND FROCKS

DESPITE the fact that never in the history of millinery have more outre, trying, and even ugly shapes and combinations of coloring obtained than this season, it is still possible to get conservative and becoming chapeaus artistically trimmed, and such hats are quite as smart as the more unusual modes from Paris.

One of the most important of all things—and an essential that the Parisian never forgets—is to have the hair beautifully coiffed. Anything more distressing to the eye than one of the new absurdly knocked-up Parisian chapeaus, trimmed with a hodge-podge of colors, on top of a stringy, ill-kept mass of hair, with perhaps a few stray locks dangling here and there, cannot well be imagined. The Parisians are noted for their exquisite coiffures. Their heads show no straggling locks, and their hair is almost always Marcel waved; if the hair has no natural gloss an artificial one is given it, and artificial hair also supplies any deficiencies in that line. Marcel waving is not so much the vogue, even among fashionables, here as in Paris, which is perhaps best, for continued waving with hot irons is undoubtedly destructive, but any woman can have neatly dressed hair. To have such hair, however, no matter how luxuriant it may be and how healthy the scalp, the former must be carefully brushed and the latter kept healthy by friction, the occasional use of suitable tonics, and regular shampooing. Light hair is seldom glossy, but the mixture known to every one and which hairdressers use will give it a certain gloss that it will retain several days. This preparation, however, is not good for the hair if used continuously, and at its best it renders the hair a bit sticky, and therefore less cleanly. The invisible nets made of hair that may be obtained in any shade are invaluable in keeping the hair in place, and they cannot be detected two feet away, and are seldom noticed even at the shortest range.

As the Frenchwoman almost invariably wears her hair high, the Marcel waving breaks up the ugly plain line usually produced by this mode, and the knocked-up hats tilted down over the nose are less trying. Besides, the Parisian is always handsomely gowned and carries herself well, and thus carries off these chapeaus better.

At recent fashionable weddings, in smart restaurants, and at the races, many chapeaus other than the pronounced shapes mentioned have been worn by many of the best-gowned and smartest women. The small toque with simple wings or other adornment is still in as good taste and fashion as ever, and the picturesque, wide-brimmed hat turned up in any becoming way at the back and sides is worn by those it suits on the proper occasions.

The polo hat, or Tommy Atkins cap, or whatever one may call it, was doomed from the first; it is a style that appealed to the vulgar taste, and its cheapness and the ability to get it in the cheapest forms and to wear it with little or no trimming has rendered it suited to the poorest purse; but indeed the writer does not ever recall having seen this shape, even at its inception, on the head of even a single fashionable woman. A few young girls wore it when the imported models were the only ones seen.

Flowers and feathers are equally fashionable at the moment, and are often seen together, but this is never in as good taste as the use of one alone. While in former days flowers were used under the brim and tips above, the reverse now obtains, and many small tips are used under the brims, while flowers are arranged on the top of brim or crown, or on both.

A French hat in pale mauve, with its crown encircled by white and mauve flowers, is not tilted as to brim, but the whole chapeau is tilted to one side by the shape of the bandeau. On this bandeau are fastened small poufs of mauve ostrich tips, and white watered ribbon chous are also used thereon.

Much of the artificial hair, in the way of curls, is attached to the bandeaus of the hats, and French milliners keep a good assortment of curls in all colorings to show their customers, for, owing to the extraordinary tilt of many hats to the fore, even the quantities of feathers or flowers leave awkward spaces, which these curls fill.

The Parisians have selected the small hat as the smartest possible for present wear; these are lifted at the back by bandeaus and filled in with enormous cashepeignes, being seldom turned up at the sides. The larger hats are rolled or tilted at the sides. One of the prettiest and most becoming devices to avoid the turning up at the back is to have the shape very deep at the back, and this can be trimmed with ribbons, tips, or flowers.

The box turban is fashionable and well suited to street wear, to traveling, and for shopping, and is much worn by young women. The younger matrons like toques for the same use. The toques usually have oval crowns, and the turbans square, bell-shaped, and wide crowns. Flowers are much used on these, in small bunches, or clusters, but feathers and wings are in better taste, although perishable. Quills and ostrich tips really last longer than the wings, for the latter, being artifically made, will begin to go as soon as the mucilage used to fasten them becomes dampened or the feathers are subjected to strong winds; even if the body of the wing is wired or sewed the loss of the fine outer feathers at the base ruins the appearance of the wings and they have to be renewed. The price of these wings has little to do with their durability.

The gooseneck wings are especially pretty, as they form a finish to the wing proper. A pale-blue hat—one of the new tilted saucer shapes in pale-blue crinoline—had two of these wings as its trimming at one side and around the crown. Two of the wings were fastened to the right side, the gooseneck portion of the inner one was passed through a ripped seam in the hat and carried around the base of the crown; the other gooseneck curved to the front on the outside of the brim. On the bandeau at the back were chous of blue velvet ribbon.

An exquisite robe suggestive of old-time modes has been imported, merely to go back to Europe again, to be worn there by the wealthy American girl who added it to her trousseau and who will spend the Summer abroad. The skirt is a trailing robe of sunray plaited, pale-green chiffon cloth—that sort of green that shows when apple trees first begin to bud. Over this is worn a low-necked, sleeveless coat of white lace lined with pale-pink chiffon. The coat part is tight-fitting, an easy fit, of course, in order not to strain the materials, but fit it does from the bust to far below the hips like a glove. At the top the coat ends just across the top of the bust, and it closes down the front to the waist line, where it begins to separate and the skirts are rounded away to the bottom, giving a panel effect to the skirt front. It does not round away much, however, until it reaches the knees; in the back it comes to within eight inches of the floor.

Across the top of the coat, down each side of the front, and extending around the bottom is a border of apple blossoms, and their foliage in shaded pinks and white and greens, and even grayish green appears in the twigs; these flowers are worked in chiffon, silk, and chenille. Bands of the embroidery cross over the shoulders, as there are no sleeves to the coat. Attached to the top of the coat, tacked under the upper edge, is a single fold of a white chiffon, and fastened to this as a foundation is a very wide scarf of white tulle, which is plaited and invisibly tacked, to cover the shoulders and upper part of the bust with billowy folds, the ends being carelessly knotted together in the front in a loose, twisted bow, with one group of short, doubled ends. Of course, this bow once tacked remains untouched till the tulle loses its freshness, when it may be renewed. The tulle does not conceal the border of blossoms, as only the lower folds of the tulle touch its top. Below the floral shoulder bands and attached to each one is a sleeve cap of white chiffon, and over this folds of tulle are draped, like the fichu about the neck, to form sleeves six inches long, and below these folds, attached to the chiffon cap, is a very full double ruffle of tulle six inches long at the inside of the arm and twelve inches long at the outside, the ruffle being graduated.

Mrs. Henry C. Potter, who with her husband, Bishop Potter, attended the tableaus for the benefit of Japanese widows and orphans of the present war with Russia, was one of the simplest gowned women present. As every one knows, she was Mrs. Alfred Corning Clark, and is very wealthy. She wore a plainly made lightweight black cloth coat and skirt, the skirt of walking length and having very few plaits, none at all around the hips, save perhaps two or three in the back. This skirt had the effect of inverted battlement insertions—that is, long narrow sections rather wedge-shaped and extending up the skirt instead of down. These were finished at the top with modified picket points trimmed with braid. A simple white blouse was worn, and her rather flat white hat with moderately wide brim had a wreath of black poppies around the crown.

Bishop Potter's daughter, by the first Mrs. Potter, Mrs. Mason O. Davidge, a slight woman, was in pale gray voile and chiffon trimmed with lace, and topped by a rather large white straw hat almost covered with palest lilac colored mauve wistaria. She wore a wide stole boa of coq feathers, black on one side and white on the other. The bodice had rather close upper sleeves with lace insertions and very long, moderately full, drooping puffs of gray chiffon for lower sleeves.

Mrs. Charles B. Alexander was in a trailing robe of black crêpe de chine, the trailing skirt crossed by two wide bands of embroidery several inches apart, and the lower of the two was probably fourteen or sixteen inches from the hem. The bodice had a guimpe and stock of beautiful white lace, and the crêpe part of the bodice was exquisitely embroidered or decorated in some way with a set design in various shades of mauve blues. The sleeves were full and wide at the elbows and showed the embroidery. Her rather small hat was trimmed with ostrich tips matching the shades of blue used to decorate the gown.

A simple dinner gown for a widow, ordered by an American woman in Paris, is described in a private letter from abroad as follows: The frock is a black chiffon over a supple and thin white silk lining. The skirt of round length is shirred around the waist line, and the bodice is also shirred in at that point; a six-inch girdle—an inch or so of which extends over the top of the skirt, the other five lapping over the bodice—is of black taffeta chiffon, fastened a bit to the left of the front with a straight jet buckle an inch wide. The sleeves are each formed of a single full puff that droops from the shoulders; each is shirred on cords four times just above the elbows, and is finished by a short, double ruffle of the chiffon, from under which droops a single ruffle of white lace two inches longer than the chiffon over the ruffle. The bodice is cut at the top and in both the back and in front in V's, the depth of which in the centre is exactly eight inches from the base of the neck. These are sharp V's, and at the sides the distance from the base of the neck to the bodice top is but two inches. A shaped bertha of white lace and plaited chiffon forms the finish. The tucked chiffon section is three inches deep and the tucks flare sufficiently to have the section fit smoothly to the bodice; this tucked piece is inserted at the top and back of the lace bertha or deep overhanging collar, the tucked portion ending in the front perhaps two inches from the shoulder seams.

The lace collar forms a deep point in the back, and extends out over the shoulders at the sides; the tops of the centre fronts meet at the base of the V and then fall apart, each forming a deep V, and attached to the point of each of these V's is a white silk tassel heavily jetted in fine black crystals. Folds of white tulle are laid under the top edges of the bodice. The skirt is decorated with six-inch insertions of white lace matching that on the bodice. The upper one forms a V in the front and the back, and is on a line above the knees, rising much higher at the sides and descending to form the V's. The lower insertion rises in the centre front to form an upward turning V, the top of which just meets the downward turning point of the upper V; the lace then slants to form two rather short, abrupt V's, one turning downward a little to the outside of each side of the upward turning V; the lace then rises a little, and follows the line up the upper row, but some ten inches lower down, and in the back it forms the same sort of downward pointed V as does the upper row. A white crinoline hat trimmed with black ostrich tips and a dash of black velvet ribbon, long black suède gloves, and, with black hose and black suède slippers, complete the toilet.

A handsome pongee costume seen at Sherry's at the luncheon hour had an accordion plaited skirt with the plaits stitched to a point below the hip line. It was a short skirt, and there was also an Eton jacket to go with it. This Eton coat was loose in the front, the side fronts separating, and each being slanted from the sides toward the centre fronts. These fronts came below the waist line and slanted up to the side or under-arm seams, and from that point the back part also slanted up a little till it reached a point within four inches of the centre line of the back. Here each side stopped abruptly, and the centre back, to a width of eight inches, was cut up and out to a depth of, say, four inches. A five-inch band of heavy pongee-colored lace outlined this open half-square in the back and extended along the bottom of the jacket to the points in the front, and, being shaped there to fit the points, turned and continued up the fronts and around to the shoulders, where they ended against other bands coming from the back and extending down from the neck. From this neckpiece another wide band started on each side and extended from the neck down along where the shoulder seams would otherwise have been to the bottom of the elbow sleeves, or, rather, till they met still another band that finished the bottom of each wide elbow sleeve. The jacket, being chiefly open lace, was very cool looking.

A beautiful gown seen at Delmonico's at the dinner hour was one of the new dull-blue chiffon taffetas, trimmed with several shades of dull-blue chiffon and white lace. The hat was a Neapolitan in blue, to match the gown, an exaggerated boat shape, with one side rolling over the oval crown. From the right of the crown shaded blue ostrich tips started and curled to the left over the crown, and also over the rolled side; one of them touched the hair at the back, and the others came very near it at the side. Near the rather sharp point in the front was a white rose, with pale-green foliage. The top of the gown had a coat effect. There was a very deep boned stock of white lace and a pointed yoke of chiffon, tucked so that the quarter-inch tucks followed the pointed outline, meeting in the centre front and back under lengthwise strips of white lace. This yoke, a short one, was edged with an eight-inch bertha frill of fine white lace that extended out over the lace sleeves, forming sleeve caps or epaulets. The body of the bodice, or coat, was blue chiffon, shirred at the top on the yoke and under the frill of lace, and was shirred again four inches above the waist line, where a shaped, folded girdle of blue chiffon taffeta went around the back and sides. In the front of the bodice the shirred chiffon, which came together at the top under the lace frill, was drawn back at the sides, and at the waist line the space between the chiffon bodice sections was about eight inches. Three-inch frills of lace matching the bertha formed a scant ruffle at the edge of each section, and these ruffles extended down over the silk girdle and went around a deep, rounded, half-oval section of lace that formed the coat skirt at the sides and back. The bodice between the ruffle sections of shirred chiffon was filled in with soft folds arranged in surplice effect of silk, these formed a deep point down the front over a boned foundation, and the sides of this waistcoat section were invisibly joined to the girdle just where the lace ruffles crossed over at each side. The sleeves were very full, but rather small puffs of chiffon to the elbows, where three overlapping lace ruffles formed the bottom of each. The skirt was sunray-plaited silk, cut on a line above the knees in wide and rather shallow scallops, and to this was joined a very deep flounce of blue chiffon embroidered in shaded blues and white. At the top of this flounce was an upturned triple box plaiting of three shades of blue chiffon, the upper one three inches deep, the second two and a half, and the third two inches. These plaits were invisibly tacked to hold them in place, and a twist of pale-blue velvet ribbon shading from pale to dark blue concealed the joining of the chiffon flounce. From under the bottom of this flounce and on the foundation skirt were three narrow plaited ruffles in three shades of blue, the one at the bottom being the darkest.

Mrs. Lewis Butler Preston, formerly Miss Mabel McAfee, and a granddaughter of James B. Haggin, with whom she made her home previous to her marriage, had a simple wedding gown. It was a princess robe of heavy white satin, the trained portion of the skirt falling in folds simulating a double boxplait. The robe was perfectly plain and closed invisibly, but simple though it was, there was a quantity of almost priceless point lace on the bodice part, and a veil of the same rare lace. There was an unlined stock and guimpe of lace, and from this fell a bertha of point lace fully twelve inches deep, and this was so draped as not only to veil the top of the robe, but also to form full sleeve sections, where it passed over the shoulders. Under this bertha were folds of the same lace, and under these were small, puffed satin sleeves that terminated above the elbows under bias folds of satin, each showing a small stiff bow at the top near the back. Long white gloves came up over the elbows. The veil was a three-cornered, shawl-shape, one end was frilled very scantily above the full, dark pompadour of her coiffure, without concealing the latter, and a few tiny sprays of orange flower buds were caught here and there just under the edges. The body of the veil hung down the back and over to the right side, where the pointed end hung to the right of the robe, a much more artistic effect than the usual arrangement and one quite novel. Her bouquet was a large round one of natural orange blossoms. She wore one of her wedding gifts, a superb necklace of diamonds. This was formed of roses, each with a centre of a single large diamond, surrounded by five or six smaller ones. These roses were graduated in size from the centre one in the front, to the sides; the back appeared to be a row of large single diamonds. The centre rose of the necklace—for the design as indicated, seemed to be a rose pattern—was nearly an inch across. It was one of the handsomest necklaces seen on a New York bride in many a long day.

Black and white silk shirtwaist costume, trimmed with narrow ruffles. White hat, faced with black, and trimmed with white flowers.

Miss McAfee's attendants were Mrs. Neville Moberly, matron of honor, and Miss Lida Burpee of Waterbury, Conn., maid of honor. Mrs. Moberly is a relative of the bride and a sister of Mr. Haggin's young wife, the latter having been a relative of the first Mrs. Haggin. They wore simple frocks of white dotted Swiss, topped by hats laden with apple blossoms, and each carried bunches of apple blossoms, the latter flowers also decorating the church. The hats were large, round-crowned, straight-brimmed affairs of white straw, tipped ever so slightly to one side and having bows of pink taffeta ribbon with looped edges set under the brims at the side, and similar bows were used on the brims at the back and also at the sides; sprays of pink and white apple blossoms were placed all around the crowns on the brims. There was not a suggestion of the tilted, knocked-in French productions of the day about them. They suited the gowns and their wearers admirably. The frocks, as said, were dotted Swiss; the skirts were gathered at the top and hung quite full. A little below the knee was a narrow gathered ruffle perhaps five inches wide and a similar one went around the bottom of the round skirts, while midway between them was another ruffle with a flat puff nearly as deep as the ruffle at the head. The ruffles and the puff were both headed by ruched tops. The bodices were shirred at the bottom, and the sleeves were elbow affairs, with lace ruffles over long gloves. Each frock had bretelles, girdle, and sash of pale pink chiffon taffeta and a stock to match. The girdles were deep shirred belts some five inches wide, and the sash ends, round at the bottom and with the edge cut in small scallops bound with the silk, came to below the top of the upper ruffles and were some eight inches wide. These ends were slightly gathered at the top and set in under the girdle, there being no bow or knot to head them. The bretelles were folds of the silk, also scalloped and bound, and these widened out gradually from the sides beginning some five inches below the shoulder seams and formed three overlapping rounded sleeve caps; the outer one came well out over the sleeves and drooped a little, the second was perhaps two inches narrower, and the third some four inches only in width.

Mrs. James B. Haggin, the bride's step-grandmother, wore a robe of transparent white silk gauze that seemed slightly stiffened over an underslip of white chiffon over silk. The gauze overdress was elaborately embroidered in bowknots, ribbon ends, and flowers, chiefly roses, in ciel blue silk. The bodice was shirred in tight at the waist line, and the embroidery showed at the top. The elbow sleeves, rather close at the top, but flaring out wide over the chiffon undersleeves, were of a single straight fold of the gauze, embroidered to match the skirt. Her hat was a rather large one of pale blue crinoline, with a wide brim, the edge of which showed a double bias fold of the crinoline. It was tilted up at the one side by a bandeau and was trimmed with blue ostrich tips to match. Although Mrs. Haggin affects blue, she is a very pale blonde, with a peculiar but distinctive coloring that for whom scarlet in quantities would seem to be an ideal setting.

+ + +

+ + +

Miss Marguerite Pierson wore a silk mull in ciel blue thickly sprinkled with small white dots of different sizes. It was a princess robe, too, and also of round length, but at a casual glance seemed a waist and skirt with shirred girdle, for it was shirred to fit the figure to a distance of some five inches above and six inches below the waist line. The top was cut out to give a square yoke effect, produced by the white stock and guimpe. The mull was shirred to form a ruching at the top where it lapped over the guimpe, and between this and the shirring of the girdle or body part it formed a wide but not full puff that drooped slightly. Around the bottom three or four tucks varying from two to four inches in width and several inches apart formed the finish. The sleeves were shirred puffs to the elbows. Her hat was pale blue straw trimmed to match. MARIE WELDON.

THE CLUB HOUSEKEEPER.

CLUBS—women's clubs even—have the reputation of being inimical to the home, yet the most important member of most clubs is its housekeeper. If the New York women's clubs had homes, instead of being hotel nomads, the greater number of them, this would mean a hired individual, paid to perform certain duties to which she has been educated. But the club housekeeper is quite another person. She is a club member whom the club delights to honor with one of its most responsible offices. She is one of the most amiable members of the club which calls her its hostess, and she is also a good housekeeper in her own home, for the duties of the club housekeeper are those of a private hostess in her own house, with many of the responsibilities.

The club housekeeper is a descendant of that other busy woman of the old-time church social. She is the same kind of amiable martyr, and the talents of a good housekeeper are no more at a discount than in the days when a woman was considered masculine and next to wicked if she could write clubwoman after her name.

It is no sinecure to be club housekeeper. If the meeting of the club begins at 3 the club housekeeper is there not later than 2, and probably half an hour earlier. She sees that the decorations have been properly placed, if there are any, and she is sure to be on hand when the caterer arrives with the refreshments. She sees that the maids are ready on time, and when refreshments are to be served that they do their duty, and, with any other clubwoman assistants, that every one is properly served. Before she leaves she knows that everything is in proper order.

One of the best-known housekeepers or hostesses in New York clubdom is Mrs. J. Alexander Brown. For several years she performed this office for the Professional Woman's League, as well as for the Woman's West End Republican Association; she performs this same duty for the Rainy Day Club, and she pours tea at the Actors' Church Alliance afternoon teas, and assists at celebrations of the Daughters of 1812, of which organization she is an original daughter. Good housekeeping is as much in demand in woman club days as in those of the church social.

The Luxury of Friendlessness.

"Oh, dear!" exclaimed Miss Forty-odd, disconsolately, "it certainly seems as if there was nothing for me to live for. I don't suppose I've a friend in the world."

"Nonsense!" came in the cheery tones from The Optimist. "You have a great deal to be thankful for, if, as you say, you have no friend. Just reflect that in that case there is no one to borrow money of you; no one to call when you are in the middle of an interesting book; no one to tell you scandalous stories of other people; no one, in short, to bore you to your face and abuse you behind your back. And still you say you have nothing to live for!"

What the Year in the Theatres Has Indicated as Viewed from the Standpoint of America's Leading Theatrical Producers---A Managerial Debate on the Question of Public Taste in Amusements.

IT is customary at this season of the year for the chronicler of dramatic events to make a deduction from his records of the season as to the general conditions which prevail in the theatre, setting forth in connection with a schedule of plays produced, plays successful and plays unsuccessful, an estimate of the results of the year in the theatre. Such a deduction, although sometimes representing the opinion of the informed and judicial mind, is nevertheless but the view of the individual. It has seemed worth while this year to depart from the ordinary custom to the extent of securing the testimony of those men who, whatever their ideals, are able to speak with the authority that obtains in the case of those whose knowledge is the result of practical and oft-times costly and disappointing experience.

It will be found from a perusal of the statements of these men—representative of American theatrical interests—that a difference of opinion exists not only as to what the public demands in the way of amusements but also as to whether there is really such a thing as a public taste in amusements at all.

Whether one agrees with the general statements or takes an entirely different view of the situation the fact remains that here is food for thought.

In the general discussions one fact seems to have been overlooked to which we have frequently referred during our comment on the season's plays. The success of such plays as "Mrs. Leffingwell's Boots," "Leah Kleschna," "The Music Master," and "The College Widow" seems to indicate that in addition to demanding a basic interest in the play itself, the public has reached a point where it insists upon a competent ensemble in production rather than a well-advertised name at the head of the cast.

The following recapitulation of the season printed in the current issue of The Dramatic Mirror is authoritative and is therefore worth reproducing at the present time. The most surprising fact in connection with the actual figures seems to be that the number of new plays produced this season was not nearly so much in excess of last season as seemed to be the case.

The Season's Long Runs.

The following are the plays that ran for fifty performances and over:

Daniel Frohman Discusses Wholesome Drama.

THE fluctuation in the style and character of entertainments every decade always brings out an indication that the public taste has changed in respect of public performances.

It is true, styles of performances vary, and that one class of performance repeated and constantly reiterated becomes monotonous.

To "musical comedy," which has maintained a certain individuality in its character for many years, the public has remained true, while the quieter and more artistic stage form of musical comedy, such as those which delighted the audiences years ago, like "The Mikado," "Pinafore," "Iolanthe," &c., have gone out of style and are replaced by a more vigorous and exciting class of musical play; but the same taste could again be appealed to if work of this high character, none the less pleasing and amusing because it was artistic, would still be presented.

But when Gilbert and Sullivan separated their vogue ceased, only because their later productions, and those of their imitators, were not of equal merit. Then the old forms of "variety entertainments" were replaced by the present style of musical comedies. These are really musical farces, containing a variety of musical, comic, and terpsichorean episodes, known as "turns." These have succeeded latterly through the individuality of the chief performers. Certain classes of works of this kind are highly successful when they contain mirth provoking comedians of more or less choregraphic or comic capacity.

Frequently managers seek to put forth fresh qualities in the way of novelties in this form of entertainment within the scope and framework of what is at present known as musical comedy. But in the drama there is no fluctuation in the public taste.

It is true that the milder kinds of plays, based upon slight and simple complications, fail to thrive, and the absence of strong dramatic works has predisposed audiences to attend musical entertainments. This enforces one particular lesson, therefore, to managers, and particularly to authors, to construct and develop out of the life of to-day plays that shall not only reflect modern life, but shall have a strong, vigorous, pulsating, dramatic quality.

The great difficulty with many authors and managers is to discover a theme that would interest these large and varied audiences. Sentimental subjects, with proper character development, susceptible of illustrating strong emotion, are the first proposition for plays that come to managerial preferment; but there are sometimes subjects of equal interest none the less engrossing because based upon other themes than the favorite dominating love theme. These are more difficult of inventing, but are none the less desirable. But plays of essentially strong human interest, treated with skill and with a deft and convincing knowledge of character and motives, never fail to produce the proper result, both artistically and financially.

No matter how many theatres or circuses may divert the attention of this big population, the theatre presenting a strong drama of these marked qualities is bound to fare well in the vast competition which now exists in the theatrical field. In other words, a good, effective play has nothing to fear from a supposedly fickle public.

There are no arbitrary fashions in plays beyond the general one of appealing by irresistible convictions to strong human interest and to human emotion, but those works embodying National characteristics are, for an American audience, more certain of a successful appeal than the exotic drama.

American audiences are extremely alert and quick to select any class of entertainment which has distinctive merit of its kind, whether a minstrel show, a comedy, or a poetical drama. It asks but one thing—that it must not be bored!

Another lesson formed through recent experiences of the drama in the past four or five years is the dethronement of the so-called "problem" plays, but the attractive, wholesome drama, involving a stress of strong human emotion and sympathy and bound to that which has an ennobling impulse, will thrive at all times.

David Belasco

David Belasco Bemoans the Lack of Competition.

THE results of the theatrical season just closing scarcely require comment; they speak for themselves. If it has been for the most part a season of disaster and failure, it is not right to blame the public or to seek excuse in the statement that there are "too many theatres." The trouble is not that there are too many theatres, but that among these theatres there is too little competition. This sums up the situation in a word, for it stands for the evils that have been brought about by the commercialism of the drama through the methods and influences of the Theatrical Trust.

Art cannot be syndicated. It must have the widest scope, unfettered, untrammeled. So when a half dozen money-minded managers, with eyes on the box-office, decide not only what plays shall be seen but how these plays shall be interpreted, it is no wonder that the standard has gone steadily and inevitably downward. In the straight drama there is not one of the Six who can read and understand an original manuscript, or who dates back the judgment of an intelligent reader with a production. He must see the play on the London or Paris stage, and judge of its possible success in America by the measure of its success abroad. But as the tastes of the native public and the foreign public so absolutely differ, it does not take a particularly wise observer to explain, on the basis of to-day's managerial policy, the almost inevitable failure here of foreign-made plays. On the other hand, when the intelligent manager gives the American author a chance, what is the result? Count up the few real New York successes of the past season, and you will find, almost without exception, that they were written by American authors and were produced by managers outside the circle of the Syndicate Six.

In the field of light opera and musical comedy the same general fact holds good. Public taste continues to demand something better, but with few exceptions the offerings are cheap and vulgar, silly and inane. The days of the good old-fashioned opera comique are gone, and the secret of their writing and production seems totally lost. And it will remain lost so long as the present-day musical comedies are built according to the standards of the box-office brigands. These men presume to usurp the province of stage manager and instruct their actors that the one requisite to success in musical pieces is "hustle and shout!" Perhaps this is their method of covering the deficiencies of book and score.

The public, however, is not to be taken in by such tricks. The total failure of all such musical pieces during the past season shows that the public knows when it has had enough. This explains the waning of musical comedy, nor can it revive until some outside manager realizes the artistic side of this branch of theatrical entertainment and gives the public a chance to appreciate and approve that which is not an insult to their intelligence.

Concerning the made-to-order stars, they have vanished rather more hurriedly than they have appeared. In no instance has one of them succeeded, nor is it proper that they should succeed. Not in talent, personality, or popularity, or even in hard work or honorable achievement, have they earned the right to be placed before the American public as representative artists. Does honest, painstaking effort and patient, consistent endeavor, carried on through many years of study, count for nothing in the race for artistic supremacy on the stage? Fortunately the public has decided this matter for us. For, without exception, the few stars who have succeeded during the past season are those who, by long devotion to their art, have earned legitimately the right to shine alone.

The sooner the truly ambitious actor realizes this the better. The careers of too many have been ruined during the past few years by overambition on their part and overindulgence on the part of their managers. Let them seek to avoid the short cut to fame. There is only one road, and that is long and narrow and rough.

The genuine successes of the past season in New York have been so few that they can be counted on one's fingers. It has been a worse year than that which preceded it; the coming year will be still more disastrous unless there shall be some heroic revolt on the part of intelligent and art-loving managers against the arbitrary and grinding commercial principles that control the American stage of to-day.

David Belasco

"Wagner Driving Out Ragtime," Says Henry W. Savage.

IN the field of serious opera the most interesting and encouraging lesson of the past year is that the lyric drama, when sung in the language of the Nation, is no longer an experiment. This conclusion is drawn from an experimental cross-continent itinerary of nearly 15,000 miles with the English Grand Opera Company and with a season of twenty-seven weeks with the company singing "Parsifal" in English.

Although the English Grand Opera Company had enjoyed nine seasons of success previous to this year, although eighty-two productions had been made and over 4,500 performances given since the company was founded in Boston, its triumph had been confined to a limited number of Eastern musical centres. This season the company was booked for sixty-seven engagements. Over a fifth of these were in cities that had never heard the company. Among them were Montreal and New Orleans, the home of French opera in America. Grand Opera in English was taken through Canada, through the Eastern, Central, Southern, and Western States, and almost without exception it has met with flattering ovations—ovations for native artists and ensemble performances as well as for the opera itself in our own tongue.

This is largely explained by the fact that this country has the greatest music-loving public of any country on earth. Americans are sincerely devoted to the best in music as they are to the best in all the arts and the trades. Music has become an essential of our public school system. No city is without its music or choral society; nearly every college has its conservatory or school of music, while the music and vocal teachers number almost as many as the school teachers. This has produced a new generation of Americans, who desire a knowledge of the classics in grand opera literature. Grand opera sung in English is necessary to meet this demand. There is fine encouragement in this for the producer. No Government support is necessary. America is the first country to demonstrate that she will support her own artistic endeavor. We now have a constantly increasing love of opera per se, and the opportunity to listen to the great master works in our own language has given a better understanding of the dramatic poems on which the operas are composed. This has won the interest of the great mass of theatregoers, who until recent years, looked on the [illegible] opera more as a fad or a [illegible] than as a living embodiment of the highest form of lyric art.

The success of the past season has taught that the public at large is taking a real interest in operatic musical forms as contrasted with the art of tuneful airs. It would seem that Wagner is driving out the ragtime.

The more serious drama, in which the elemental human emotions are treated, must always command consideration, and will always find a response on the part of the educated theatregoer, but, in between times, the thoughtful or care-burdened man wants a little frivolity. This need not be buffoonery, horse play, or indecency. The field may be properly and prosperously tilled with no serious, but at the same time intelligent and pictorially pleasing musical, trifles.

The outlook for high-grade musical comedies was never brighter. Besides, the auspicious career of my two latest efforts, "The Sho-Gun" and "Woodland," the continued and phenomenally successful tours of "The Prince of Pilsen," "The Yankee Consul," "The Sultan of Sulu," and other well-tried offerings of that kind, convinces me that this corner of the theatrical garden will continue to blossom as the rose for many seasons to come. My first new production will be a musical comedy by John Kendrick Bangs and Manuel Klein.

The American public will always patronize a good American comedy. This is an axiom that should continue to be foremost in the minds of successful managers and playwrights. I am sure the lesson of the past season will justify productions of comedies by American playwrights in large numbers next season. At a very early date I will produce a new comedy by George Ade called "The Bad Samaritan." This will be written and produced along the same lines as Mr. Ade's highly successful comedies "The County Chairman" and "The College Widow." I will try to offer plays in which the humor is natural and unforced, the story American, and the satire well developed but not of a kind that stings. I will also produce at an early date a comedy of modern American life, called "The Stolen Story," by Jesse Lynch Williams. In this play the big scene will be in the fourth act, which will represent a newspaper office at the hour of going to press.

Summarizing the lesson of the past season in the theatrical world, I think it has taught managers to study the likes and dislikes of theatregoers more closely than ever before. It is evident from past experiences that the American public will continue to patronize grand operas in the vernacular of the highest class and good American light operas, musical comedies, and genuine straight comedies.

To summarize briefly, American plays for the American people.

Henry W. Savage

"No Such Thing as Public Taste," Avers George C. Tyler.

IT is a wise manager who could form an opinion of value from a season's experience as to the public demand in the way of theatricals. The public, like the individual, is a very unstable and unreliable quantity in this regard, and there is probably no man engaged in the business, in New York or elsewhere, who has not, time and again, been made painfully aware of the fact. What may seem an absolute and sickening failure in New York City may prove a very gratifying success "on the road," or vice versa. The play that to the manager, to the representatives of the press, to well-informed and experienced friends on every hand who may be called in to pass judgment upon it, is declared to be [illegible] a successful [illegible] not have [illegible] by the very same critics, and possibly the same managers, too, who had predicted a triumph for it.

A New York production of a few years ago that I thought one of the worst I had ever seen—and in this opinion I was sustained by practically every supposed to be well-informed person I knew—was a howling success right from the start—has already netted $150,000 to its projectors and isn't through earning money yet. Another play that didn't receive a good word from anybody, and which for the first three or four weeks played to empty benches, gradually began to attract public attention, and finally enjoyed a five months' run in New York, and to constantly increasing business, and then "coined money" on the road for two seasons. Still others, which promised well, justified the promise, while others, and these without number, which gave more than equal promise, proved flat failures. Experience seems to count for little, for we have all seen men of large experience encounter an appalling succession of failures, while the embryo manager would pick out "a good one" and jump into a fortune in a season.

In the face of these vagaries, what is the use for any one to attempt to assert just what the results of a season indicate? They indicate past success or failure—very little more—but they furnish no security for the future. They teach one each successive year, more of the details of the business, just as one may become a better bricklayer or a blacksmith, but the lessons they impart as to future undertakings, or plans of procedure, are really of small avail.

As to the public taste—there is no such thing—that is clear and well defined. The public likes anything it likes, and even the public cannot tell you why. For some reason the play interests. It may be a serious play, and it may fascinate, or it may be a comedy, and it may amuse. It may be a musical production that will have some special feature which will carry it, or it may have no virtue at all, and live because some person or coterie of persons has said that it was good.

I should say that if the results of a season had taught one to apply himself constantly, unceasingly, that it will have accomplished its perfect work.

Sergle Tyler

Klaw & Erlanger Find Theatregoers More Discriminating.

A REPRESENTATIVE of Klaw & Erlanger said: "The lessons of the theatrical season which has just practically closed have been, in fact, the same that have been taught by experience during past years. The public demand for amusement has been as strong as heretofore, but perhaps theatregoers have been somewhat more discriminating in their selection of the performances they desired to see. New York is distinctively a music-loving city, and it can be said that musical productions have undoubtedly drawn more strongly than others. This will also be the experience the coming season, although virile plays, telling a story of strong human interest, will unquestionably always be popular and draw large and discriminating audiences.

"From a general standpoint, the musical production which contains bright and catchy airs and a comic story of interest will undoubtedly attract the major portion of public attention. I do not think it can be stated, as a matter of absolute fact, that public taste in reference to any particular type of performance undergoes any distinctive change from season to season. The theatregoing public always likes in general productions which carry an adequate measure of entertaining interest, whether it be musical or straight dramatic entertainment. During the past seven or eight years undoubtedly the public has been more strongly drawn toward light musical plays, and as long as these productions are made with the merit which the public demands of them they will prove the stronger attraction to theatregoers.

"The coming season this firm will produce vaudeville farce, musical comedy, spectacular extravaganza, spectacle, and drama in such plays as 'The Pearl and the Pumpkin,' which is to be first presented at the Colonial Theatre in Boston in July, opening the season at the Broadway Theatre in September; the Rogers Brothers in 'The Rogers Brothers in Ireland,' to appear early in the season at the Liberty Theatre; Joseph Cawthorne in a new musical comedy to be called 'In Tammany Hall,' to be presented at the Herald Square Theatre; McIntyre and Heath in a new musical comedy called 'The Ham Tree,' to be seen at the New York Theatre; Fay Templeton in a new comedy by George M. Cohan, to be produced early in the season; the new Drury Lane spectacle, 'The White Cat,' to be the annual holiday attraction at the New Amsterdam Theatre. Other musical pieces will be 'The Butterfly of Fashion,' by C. M. S. McLellan and Gustav Kerker; a new musical comedy by Harry B. Smith entitled 'Seeing New York,' and George Edwardes's London production of 'Veronique,' which will follow 'The Pearl and the Pumpkin' at the Broadway Theatre. The Drury Lane success of the last holiday season at the New Amsterdam, 'Humpty Dumpty,' will tour the principal cities, and George Edwardes's production of 'The Duchess of Dantzic,' which made such a long run and such a great success at Daly's Theatre, will be one of the principal road attractions of the year.

"The dramatic productions which this firm will present are the continuation of 'Ben-Hur'; Mr. Forbes Robertson, the distinguished English actor, in a selection of classical plays; a great production of Gen. Lew Wallace's romantic novel, 'A Prince of India,' dramatized by J. I. C. Clarke, and Marion Crawford's new romantic play founded on his widely read novel, 'Zoroaster.' These productions will cover the entire field of theatrical amusement, and will all be staged most lavishly.

"The new Summer production to be presented at the New Amsterdam Aerial Theatre and Gardens June 5, John J. McNally's new local review, 'Lifting the Lid,' will be made one of the best types of Summer production ever seen in this city, and represent the successful warm weather entertainment in a most attractive form. The company, which includes Fay Templeton, Louis Harrison, Virginia Earle, Diamond Donner, and other noted people, is a splendid exemplification of the public demand for big casts of talented people.

"The distinctive lesson which has been taught theatrical management by the public during the past five years especially is this one fact: that theatregoers will always patronize any entertainment with a generosity commensurate with its merits. Otherwise productions may always be counted on to draw great audiences and returns in full proportion to the measure of meritorious entertainment they present. The better the piece, the greater the popularity. Theatrical production in the end always resolves itself down to this single proposition: the manager guesses that the public would like to see a particular production. Banking on this guess, he presents it. If the public likes it, he always secures an ample return for his investment. If the public does not like it, it can only be ranked in the column of the failures. The public is entirely without sentiment in the matter of its patronage of any entertainment."

"Choice of Plays Rests with Public," Says Alf Hayman.

THE theatrical season just closed has been a most successful one, but it has disclosed nothing that is new about the public's attitude to the stage. It has, however, emphasized the Frohman policy of giving the best the dramatic market affords and of keeping the supply of novelties up to the people's insistent demand for them. As to plays, the fact is established that good plays, no matter to what branch of the art they belong, succeed, and bad plays fail. Comedy, romance, drama—every class of dramatic product has attention and support commensurate with its merit. You can't compel the theatregoer to swallow a poor play any more than you can compel a restaurant patron to gobble an "off" egg, and you can't keep him away from a good play with a cordon of police.

The choice of good and bad plays rests with the public. The authors write them, the manager makes his selection, and the folks who pass their money in at the box office have the final and important say-so. They are the first and last court of appeal for all concerned. So if there is at any time anything wrong with the stage, it isn't the drama itself that is to blame, or the managers, but the playgoing public. There has been croaking and faultfinding on this subject ever since the theatre came into existence. In every age, even the most brilliant, the [illegible] has gone on that [illegible]

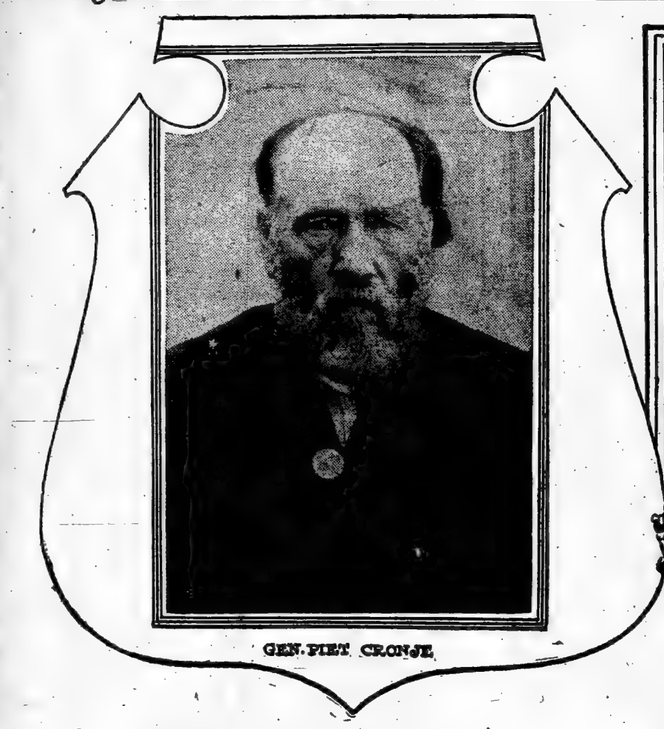
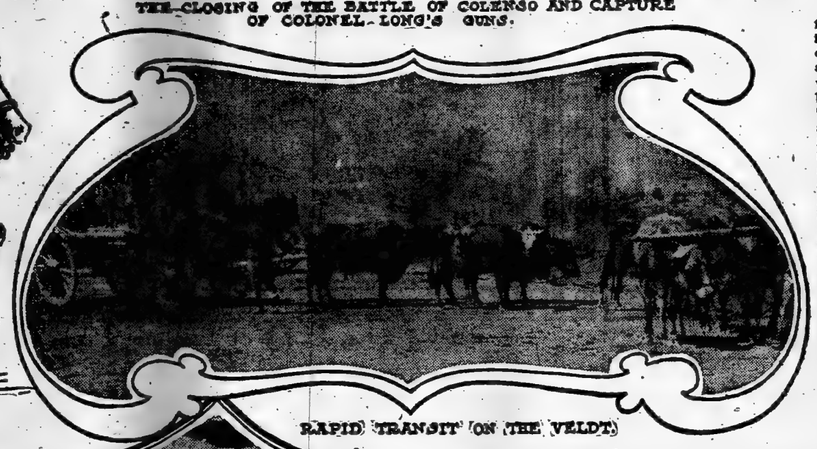
Boer War Spectacle, Coney Island's Newest Show



GEN. PIET CRONJE.

THE CLOSING OF THE BATTLE OF COLENSO AND CAPTURE OF COLONEL LONG'S GUNS.



RAPID TRANSIT ON THE VELDT.

HIGH SCHOOL RIDING BY FRANK L. ELLIS ON POVERO, SHOWING THE CANTER ON THREE LEGS.

The Burghers Fight Their Battles Over Again for Summer New York to See---Gen. Cronje and Other Famous South African Veterans Face This Time Both Stage Britons and the American Public

WITH the opening of the largest park on the Atlantic Coast next Saturday the Brighton Beach Development Company will reveal the Boer war spectacle and 150 minor amusement features. A big pike fashioned after the famous pike at the St. Louis Exposition will be free to the public. A scenic railway will occupy one mile of beach front. In addition one mile of boardwalk and seventy-five acres of ground comprise the territory in which the Brighton Beach Development Company is expending two and one-quarter million dollars to satisfy the demand of the American public for novelty and sensation.

The Boer War Company is the same organization that appeared in St. Louis, with the addition of 400 men and 300 horses, besides extra equipment, making 1,000 men, including 200 Kafirs, Zulus, Matabeles, and representatives of other South African tribes, and 600 horses. Capt. A. W. Lewis, the general manager, twice chartered the Doune Castle at a cost of $35,000 each trip in order to transport these men from South Africa to present the spectacle, which will be given in New York on an even greater scale than in St. Louis.

Near the Boer-British battleground the rival armies will go into camp, both camps being under strict military discipline. Free exhibitions by the United States Life Saving Station will be given hourly, and may be viewed from the 20,000 free seats provided by the management.

The Boer war spectacle is a reproduction of the late South African campaign done in miniature by men who actually fought in the recent war of the Transvaal. They are led on the Boer side by Gen. Piet Cronje, whose fame ranked next to that of Oom Paul Kruger. The aggregation which presents this spectacle numbers 1,000 men.

On the Boer side, in addition to Gen. Cronje, are some of the most noted men of the Transvaal, conspicuous among them being Col. Blake, commanding the Irish Brigade. He will lead again in this reproduction the men who served under him in the Transvaal. Capt. Jack Hindon, Gen. Cronje's aide, also participates in the spectacle. Commandant J. N. Boshoff and Field Cornet Nick Van Gass, whose left sleeve swings loose in silent testimony to his service at Spion Kop Hill; Wolmarans, Fischer, Mare, Moll, and a score of other Commandants all take part in the spectacle.

There are officers on the British side who bear the D. S. O. medals. Capt. F. Franklin leads the British contingent. He served under Lord Roberts, and wears the King's and Queen's medals. Capt. A. J. Roser and Capt. J. Albert Fish also serve with a detachment of Gordon Highlanders. One of the bagpipers in this detachment, it is said, was among the six men who escaped from the slaughter of the 6,000 Scotchmen who were in the famous Gordon Highlander charge. Then there are English Lancers, Life Guards, and the Blue Jackets who defended Ladysmith, with the "Long Tom" gun that was used in the siege; Imperial Yeomanry, and other noted English, Australian, and Canadian regiments.

The spectacle opens with a series of interesting features, chief among them being the artillery and cavalry drills.

Then the great Boer war spectacle is presented. Fifty-eight artists were required to paint the hundreds of yards of canvas. The lot proper on which the Boer war is to be given is fourteen acres in area, and huge basins, zinc lined and installed at an enormous cost, with running water, and made to produce the Tugela and Modder Rivers, show up distinctly as they flow under the shadows of the kopjes on which are stationed the blockhouses and the defense lines. Colenso and Paardeburg are faithfully reproduced in the huge stretch of canvas.

The first scene is laid at Colenso, where the British begun to realize the fighting strength which had lain dormant in the Transvaal. The Boers can be seen digging their trenches and preparing for attack. In the distance are four scouts who approach on horseback just as the bugle call of the English troops is heard. The Boers hastily conceal themselves awaiting the approach of the reconnoitering party, four of whom are picked off by Boer bullets and fall dead. One of the horses falls with his rider, and the other dashes madly into the animal behind him and drags the line from the cold hand of the brave scout who has fallen from the saddle. The two remaining scouts return and report the discovery of the Boer stronghold. Then the English charge on the field and prepare to shell the defense. All this time the black horse lies dead under the very mouth of the cannon, which booms insistently over his head. Reserve troops are called up and more cannon placed in position. The rattle of the deadly Maxim guns begins and the storm of battle is waged in the furious fight for supremacy. In this battle the Boers capture the British guns and make way across the veldt, followed by a fighting horde. Hand-to-hand conflicts follow, and then, at last, the Boer flag waves from the blockhouse and the battle of Colenso is at an end. The big black horse takes a sly look around, for he is trained to lie still until the signal is given for life to return to the dead horses and men, who are scattered promiscuously over the field, many of them with their faces upturned and lying across the necks of their horses.

The town of Paardeburg and the Modder River, the next scenes of the war in which Gen. Cronje made such a gallant stand, are reproduced. The fighting is a great deal more exciting and the siege of Paardeburg even more realistic than the battle of Colenso. The famous Gordon Highlander charge is made here on the Modder River. The finale of this scene is Gen. Cronje's meeting with Lord Roberts after the white flag of truce had been raised. Then the surrender of the Boers to the Britons follows and a sad procession of men and women files after the conquerors.

The final scene is a realistic presentation of De Wet's famous escape over the cliffs of the Modder River, where his horse plunges headlong, swims to the opposite bank and is off on a gallop just as the British appear in pursuit.

The Lesson of One Dramatic Season---This Week's Attractions

flying out and the stage was no longer the field of glory it formerly was. So present excoriators of the stage are not alone in their kicking.

Altogether last season offered some very good plays. Of the thirty productions made by Charles Frohman only three could be classed as failures, and two of these had to be presented to fill contracts with the authors, and their fate was known in advance. A record of twenty-seven successes within a period of eight months, and some of them important successes that will last over into several seasons, is something to be exceedingly proud of. In this list the American dramatist has made an almost even break with his foreign confrères, so it cannot be said that home talent was neglected during the year. The supply of plays from both the native and Old World sources has fallen somewhat short of the managerial needs with the result that several important stars had to be satisfied with revivals of old successes, there being no plays for them.

One thing is evident, as the seasons pass, that it is becoming harder and harder to meet the public's ideas in regard to staging plays. The expensiveness of productions grows greater and greater every year, the cost of putting any sort of a play on the stage now running into five figures. What could formerly be done for $1,500 now requires an expenditure of $15,000, and this is a small figure. The musical play costs four times this amount. Mr. Frohman, foreseeing the growing tendency of amusement seekers toward this line of production, has gone into musical plays extensively, and may be said to-day, to be the leading producer of such works, as he has long been the leading producer in the comedy and drama fields. His last and most important production, "The Rollicking Girl," in which he is now presenting Sam Bernard so successfully at the Herald Square Theatre, may be taken as an example of this expensive class. It cost nearly $70,000. The dresses alone for one feature cost $6,000. The swing song, with its 4,000 electric lights, cost $4,500. A specialty that was discarded after the first dress rehearsal had $3,200 spent on its dresses, and it was replaced by another that cost the same amount.

When an army of chorus girls and dancers nearly one hundred strong goes through half a dozen changes of costume during a performance, the draught made on the managerial pocketbook is tremendous. The march of the cuirassiers preluding Hattie Williams's song hit cost about $5,000. So, you see, it is no mere fly-by-night enterprise that must be behind an offering of this kind. Mr. Frohman started out, however, to make "The Rollicking Girl" an immense Summer evening show for New York, big as two or three Broadway music halls rolled into one, and to do this he had to spend money freely. It is a tendency of the times to spend money freely—and nowhere is it so convincingly in evidence as in the theatrical business.

This Week's New Offerings.

BERTHA KALICH IN "FEDORA," a drama by Victorien Sardou, to-morrow evening at the American Theatre.

ADELAIDE KEIM STOCK COMPANY IN "CAMILLE" to-morrow evening at the Harlem Opera House.

The engagement of Bertha Kalich this week as the star of the George Fawcett Company at the American promises to be a notable event in the history of that company, for with to-morrow night's production Mme. Kalich makes her début as an English-speaking actress. The actress is a Polish woman, of the same country that produced the distinguished artiste Modjeska.

The vehicle for Mme. Kalich's first appearance will be "Fedora," the successful drama of Victorien Sardou. Edwin Arden will give support as Loris Ipanoff, while the other members of the stock company will appear in the remaining characters.

Bertha Kalich was born at Lemberg, in Galicia, also the birthplace of Marcella Sembrich, in 1874.

After a successful career as a singer she was ambitious to do more serious work, and finally the opportunity came to appear in Yiddish versions of "Honor," "Madame Sans Gene," "A Doll's House," "Magda," and "Fedora." But even this was not enough. During the last few years the actress has been working diligently to master the intricacies of the English language.

Adelaide Keim will open her stock company season at the Harlem Opera House to-morrow evening with a revival of "Camille," which part Miss Keim will herself essay. The Armand of the production will be Martin A. Alsop, who appeared with Miss Keim in Baltimore and has recently been leading man with Blanche Walsh.

Miss Keim's first professional experience was under Daniel Frohman, in many of whose productions she appeared. Later she was leading woman of the De Witt Stock Company in Baltimore. During her several seasons at Proctor's Uptown Theatre she gained many admirers, who will doubtless be glad to know of her reappearance in Harlem.

Matinées will be given on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday.

PLAYS THAT HOLD.

The revival of "Trilby," with the original cast in the principal rôles, has attracted much attention at the New Amsterdam. It begins its last week at that house to-morrow evening.

Marie Tempest, who is still filling the Empire with fashionable and enthusiastic audiences, will continue to present "The Freedom of Suzanne" for two weeks longer. An extra matinée will be given Decoration Day.

"The Heir to the Hoorah" enters upon the seventh week of its successful run at the Hudson Theatre to-morrow evening. Crowded houses have been the rule, and there is no indication of closing the season.

David Warfield has at present but two weeks more to appear in "The Music Master" at the Bijou. Next season Mr. Warfield will again appear in the same play at the Bijou.

MUSICAL ATTRACTIONS.

George M. Cohan and his company in his musical play, "Little Johnny Jones," will begin their last week at the New York Theatre to-morrow night. This is the fifth engagement in the city.

"Fantana" gives such indication of prolonged success at the Lyric that the management already announces special matinées for Decoration and Independence Days.

The crowds keep on going to the Herald Square to see Sam Bernard and "The Rollicking Girl," where the two will this week round out their first month.

The second month of Frank Daniels's engagement in "Sergeant Brue" at the Knickerbocker is to be inaugurated to-morrow night. The musical play has all the ingredients of a Summer show.

COMBINATION HOUSES.

The Yorkville Theatre Stock Company will this week give a revival of "The School for Scandal," with Anne Sutherland in the rôle of Lady Teasle. Maurice Freeman, the new leading man of the company, will be cast as Charles.

+ + +

Eugenie Blair appears for the first time to-morrow evening at the West End in A. W. Pinero's "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray." The management promises an elaborate production.

+ + +

Williams and Walker, who have made a great hit in "In Dahomey" at the Grand Opera House, will remain at that house for some time to come, instead of closing this week, as advertised.

+ + +

"The Errand Boy," a musical comedy, will be the attraction at the Metropolis this week. The piece is said to be replete with melody and fun.

+ + +

Anna Blanke returns to the New Star this week in her production of "A Little Outcast." Miss Blanke has won much commendation of her work in children's parts.

+ + +

To-morrow night ushers in the second week of Lottie Williams's engagement at the Fourteenth Street Theatre in "My Tomboy Girl." The piece played to packed houses all last week.

+ + +

"Quincy Adams Sawyer" begins its third week at the Academy to-morrow evening. The big production is meeting with favor. On Thursday night packs of the popular game "Stage" will be distributed.

+ + +

Leah Lessi, in "East Lynne," will be the offering at the Windsor. The engagement will mark the first presentation on the Bowery in years of this drama.

+ + +

Frankiyn Fyles's romantic drama, "The Governor of Kentucky," will be given this week by the stock company at Proctor's Fifth Avenue Theatre. Henry Woodruff will assume the part of the young Kentuckian, and Katharine Grey, who makes her first appearance with the forces to-morrow, will play the heroine.

+ + +

Charles T. Dazey's spectacular melodrama, "The Suburban," will be the offering this week of the stock company at Proctor's One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street Theatre. The management announces a cast of 150 people, together with sixteen horses. William J. Kelley and Beatrice Morgan head the cast.

+ + +

At Proctor's Fifty-eighth Street Theatre, commencing Monday matinée, the melodrama, "The Ensign," will be presented with specially painted and constructed scenery, new costumes, and a cast which includes James Durkin, Grace Reals, Harold Hartsell, and others.

VAUDEVILLE.

At Hammerstein's Victoria the bill for the ensuing week will have as special features the Russell Brothers in a new comedy skit, and also May Robson, the comedienne, who will appear in a new sketch. Among the other performers and entertainers who are on the programme are Snyder and Buckley, Ryan and Richfield, Harrigan, the tramp juggler; Techow's cats, Violet Dale, Searle and Violet Allen, Young Brothers, and the vitagraph. The opening of the Paradise Roof Garden will occur on June 5.

+ + +

Die Obersteirer, a troupe of Tyrolean singers, head the bill this week at Keith's. As a second feature O Han San and her company will present "Scenes from Old Japan." The remainder of the acts will be given by Harper, Desmond and Bailey, George M. Day, the Holdsworths, Willard Hutchinson and company in "Advice," in which sketch Mrs. John Fox, Jr., will make her first stage appearance; Foy and Clark in "The Old Curiosity Shop," Howard and North, Morton, Temple and Morton, and the biograph.

+ + +

Jacob P. Adler makes his début in vaudeville at Proctor's Twenty-third Street Theatre to-morrow afternoon, appearing in the trial scene from "The Merchant of Venice." The Globe of Death is also on the attractive bill, together with Mary Norman, who will offer her new monologue called "Masks and Faces." Others who will complete the programme are Mr. and Mrs. Edward Esmonde in "The Soldier of Propville"; Walter C. Kelly, Dan Quinlan, and Kellar Mack, in "Just Fun"; Coln's Comedy Dogs, Clark and Florette, Kelly and Violette, and the moving pictures.

+ + +

At Huber's Fourteenth Street Museum, Aola Doma, a Filipino Igorrote, is the main attraction for the week. Abbott Parker remains on the bill.

+ + +

Hiram Cronk, the last surviving hero of the 1812 war, is the latest addition to the group "People talked about" in the world in wax at the Eden Musée. He represents an epoch in American history that will never fail to interest the general public not only on account of his being the last survivor of the heroes of that war, but an account of his remarkable age—105 years. That the people are interested in the wonderful old man is shown by the large crowd of persons that have viewed his figure during the past few days.

+ + +

The Colonial Theatre for the ensuing week offers one of the strong bills for which that house is noted. Holding stellar honors will be Albert Chevalier, who announces his farewell appearance. Other features will be the Hengler Sisters, the Union Gatling Guards, Gardner and Vincent in "Winning a Queen;" Melville and Stetson, Charles F. Seamon, Sydney Grant, Vernon, Lavelle and Grant, and the vitagraph.

+ + +

Rose Stahl and company in "The Chorus Lady" will be the feature act at Hurtig & Seamon's Music Hall during the coming week. In the headline honors will also share the marvelous Four Lukens in their gymnastic evolutions. Others are the Four Hantings in the original comedy, "A Night in the Fool House"; May Belfort, the eminent English comedienne; Hoey and Lee, Jewish parodists; the four American trumpeters, Mosher, Houghton and Mosher, and Collins and Hawley in a dancing medley.

+ + +

The success attained by Manager Percy G. Williams with his new Alhambra, in Harlem, shows no signs of diminishing as that house has been packed to the doors at every performance during the past week, and present indications point to the same condition of affairs for the coming. Leading the list of artists for next week will be Cecilia Loftus, who will make her first Harlem appearance after a most successful run of four weeks at the Colonial Theatre. The next feature is the Four Mortons, who have just as important a position on the bill. The third feature will be Will M. Cressy and Blanche Dayne in their newest and latest one-act play called "Town Hall To-Night." The balance of the cast which is announced to fill the bill will be John Ford and Mayme Gehrue, assisted by the ten Daisy Girls, a new dancing novelty; Yorke and Adams, Hebrew comedians; Delmore and Lee in a "Study in Black and White"; the Melani Trio, Parisian singers and musicians; the Macbans, club jugglers, and the vitagraph.

SOUSA AT THE METROPOLITAN

Sousa will direct the concert at the Metropolitan this evening, and the full band will be on hand. A Sousa programme is prepared—all Sousa. The soloists are Miss Estelle Liebling, soprano; Miss Jessie Straus, violin, and Mr. Herbert L. Clarke, cornet. The programme follows:

1. "Mars and Venus," from Suite "Looking Upward" 1902
2. Solo for cornet, "O Warrior Grim," ("El Capitan") 1896
   Mr. Herbert L. Clarke.
3. Suite, "At the King's Court" 1904
   (a) Her Ladyship the Countess.
   (b) Her Grace the Duchess.
   (c) Her Majesty the Queen.
4. Song for soprano, "What Is Love?" ... 1900
   Miss Estelle Liebling.
5. Scenes Historical, "Sheridan's Ride" ... 1888
6. Airs from "The Bride-Elect" 1898
7. (a) "Nydia," from Suite "Last Days of Pompeii" 1890
   (b) "The Diplomat" 1904
8. Solo for violin, "Nymphalin" 1898
   Miss Jessie Straus.
9. "The Dancing Girl," from Suite "Maidens Three" 1901

THE HIPPODROME.

While the majority of the theatres are closing their doors to make way for the roof gardens, the Hippodrome's patronage is daily increasing, and the matinée performances are coming more and more to look like the night shows when "standing room only" is the order. Fine weather, instead of driving the people out of the big playhouse, seems to fill it up. The majority of the afternoon visitors seem to be from out of town.

More new acts will find their places in the circus part of the programme. This week the Telms troupe of acrobats from Germany will do their full act, while Col. Bordeverry will perform other startling feats with his rifle. Marceline, the English clown, promises to vary his performance with each show next week, and Ferry Corwey has announced his first appearance with a new instrument of his own invention.

From Europe will come next week and every week thereafter new acts, which will find place on the bill, while Frederic Thompson of the firm is only waiting to open the big new shows at Luna Park before sailing for Europe, where he will book many other acts for the chain of Hippodromes, for the building of which plans are practically completed.

DAMROSCH CONCERT ON ROOF.

The programmes of the concerts on the New York Theatre Roof Garden by the New York Symphony Orchestra, under Walter Damrosch, will be as follows for to-night and to-morrow night:

SUNDAY EVENING.

Overture, "Mignon" ..... Thomas
Adagio, "Scotch Symphony" ..... Mendelssohn
Waltz, "The Beautiful Blue Danube" ..... Strauss
(a) "Dreams" (study from "Tristan") .. Wagner
   Violin solo, Mr. Mannes.
(b) "Song to the Evening Star" .... Wagner
   Trombone solo, Mr. Tilkin.
Petite Suite d'Orchestre ..... Biset
"Les Préludes," symphonic poem ..... Liszt
Flute solo ..... Chopin-Taffanel
   M. George Barrere.
   (a) Nocturne. (b) Waltz.
"Last Slumber of the Virgin" ..... Massenet
(a) Mazurka ..... Wieniawski
(b) Cavalry Ride ..... Rubinstein
Waltz, "The Skaters" ..... Waldteufel

BROOKLYN ATTRACTIONS.

Holding the stellar honors this week at the Orpheum is Louise Gunning, who has just left the Schumann-Heink Opera Company. Others on the bill are Clayton White and Marie Stuart in their sketch "Dickie," Chevalier De Loris, expert marksman; Ye Colonial Septet, Le Roy and Woodford, Potter and Hartwell, Gillette's Dogs, and the vitagraph.

LUNA PARK.

Of the new attractions at Luna Park "the Fall of Port Arthur" will take rank as the most popular. The "Igerotte Village" has many visitors.

DREAMLAND.

Prominent among the interesting figures at Dreamland is the one-armed lion tamer, Bonavita, who is appearing with his lions daily at Frank C. Bostock's Wild Animal Arena. Among other attractions, "Fighting the Flames" still retains its popularity.

SUNDAY CONCERTS.

COLONIAL.—Concert to-night with full programme of week's bill.

EDEN MUSEE.—Afternoon and evening concerts and "World in Wax."

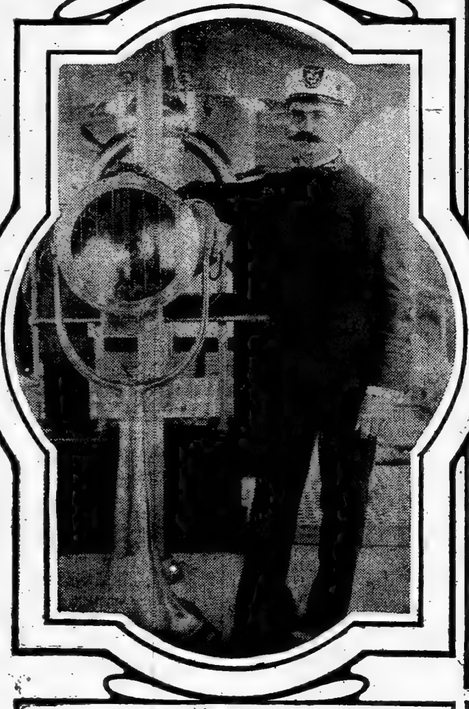
Panama's Navy Dedicated---Will Soon Be Ready for Business



(Photos by Louis Stern.)

Capt. T. T. Lovelace "El Almirante."

Raising the Flag of Panama on the Orienta, the only vessel of the Panama Navy.

Carlos Arosemena, Secretary and Chargé d'Affairs of the Panamanian Legation.

A UNIQUE ceremony occurred in New York Harbor on Tuesday last, when the Orienta, representing the navy of the smallest American Republic, Panama, was formally dedicated to the service of that country, and Capt. T. T. Lovelace, already hailed at Colon and Panama as "El Almirante," took formal command under a commission from the Panama Government.

In the absence of the Panamanian Minister the task of raising the flag of the republic on the taffrail standard of the little vessel fell to Carlos Arosemena, Secretary of the Legation in Washington and Chargé d'Affaires. At the same time the Union Jack, designed by Capt. Lovelace, consisting of seven stars on a field of blue, was hoisted to the forepeak, and the internal revenue flag, also designed by the Captain, was hoisted to the mizzen peak, Mrs. J. X. Arosemena being the sponsor in one case and Miss Victoria Guardia in the other.

The ceremony was to have been performed at sea after the yachts competing for the Kaiser's Cup had started on their journey across the ocean, but the postponement of the start and the thick weather altered the plans. Capt. Lovelace did not care to risk the Panamanian Navy in the heavy fog, so the dedication ceremonies were performed at the dock of the Morse Iron Works in Bay Ridge, where the trim little vessel has been lying.

The members of the dedication party besides Secretary Arosemena, consisted of Miss Victoria Guardia, niece of the Secretary of State of the republic; the Misses Arias, nieces of the Minister of Foreign Affairs; Francisco Arias, son of the Special Financial Envoy of Panama; Miss Stimson, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Hart, and Mr. and Mrs. J. X. Arosemena of this city.

The ceremony was impressive, and as the little republic's standard was raised aloft for the first time in these waters, the tugs and the big government transports lying at the yard sent forth a shrill and noisy salute.

The Orienta, one of the trimmest little vessels that ever went out of this harbor, was originally designed for E. R. Ladew, and her contract called for her to make 18 knots on her trial trip. This she failed to do, and she was thrown back on the hands of her builder, Lewis Nixon. When Capt. Lovelace first saw her he was surprised that she failed to come up to the requirements, as her equipment showed that she ought to be fully equal to the task. She was built during the machinists' strike of 1901, and when Capt. Lovelace overhauled her he says he found that 350 of the 785 tubes in her condenser were plugged up with wooden plugs driven into the tubes with a mallet, and sixteen of the tubes in her 800-horse-power Mosher water tube boiler were plugged with ¾ boiler punchings. When Capt. Lovelace purchased the boat and overhauled her she made 18 knots easily on her first trial trip. Before she leaves for Colon her Captain will replace her present 53-inch propellor with one measuring 72 inches, and he says she will then make 22 knots with ease.

The Orienta is 105 feet long, 12 feet beam, and has a draught of 7½ feet. On her arrival at Colon she will be equipped with two three-pounder Hotchkiss guns; one mounted forward and the other aft, and two automatic Maxim rapid-firers, mounted amidships. She will be fitted with a De Forest wireless apparatus, by which she will be enabled at all times to communicate with Colon and Bocas del Toro. She has also a military mast and a 2,000-candle power searchlight. Her armament will transform her into a formidable little gunboat, and the Panama Government expects her to do a great service along the coast in breaking up the wholesale smuggling that has been going on there for years.

The bite of an old sea dog isn't as bad as the barque of his spun yarn.

The Birth of the New York Skyscraper---A Romance of Architecture

THERE is no limit to the skyscraper, as it is called. I am now at work on a thirty-story building for the Wall Street district, that will be as original a departure from the present type of steel skeleton structure as the first one of that type was from the old style of office building when I put it up. There will not be an inside room in the edifice. It will cover a much greater floor area than any office building of its size in the world. I am not at liberty to give details. Just as a photographer who wants to get a composite type of a race of people places negative upon negative until he attains the desired result, I have amalgamated one plan with another until I believe I have evolved the most perfect office building yet in existence. But it will in many respects be essentially different from what is now commonly known as the skyscraper."

So declared Bradford Lee Gilbert, architect of the first steel skeleton building in New York, or in the world, for that matter, when he was asked how he came to construct the first skyscraper nearly a generation ago, one soon to be torn down to make way for a larger building. "It was a case of the boy, the chipmunk, and the minister coming for dinner," said Mr. Gilbert. "During the Spring of 1887 John L. Stearns, who owned the first skyscraper in New York, found himself in possession of a double plot in New Street, just south of Exchange Place, with a Broadway frontage of only twenty-one feet. He was unable to dispose of this non-income property except at a considerable loss. He came to me to devise a plan that would enable him to build upon this property on a paying basis. I puzzled over the matter for six months or more. The building laws were explicit as to the required thickness of the walls for superstructure. Anything higher than the existing buildings on the plot could only be built at an actual loss. It would not pay to erect a high building on the Broadway plot to reach the larger rear building, when the thickness of the walls required would leave a passageway only on the three main Broadway floors a little over ten feet in width. A low entrance building on Broadway for a higher office building in New Street would benefit only the abutting property. The problem grew perplexing and interesting in proportion.

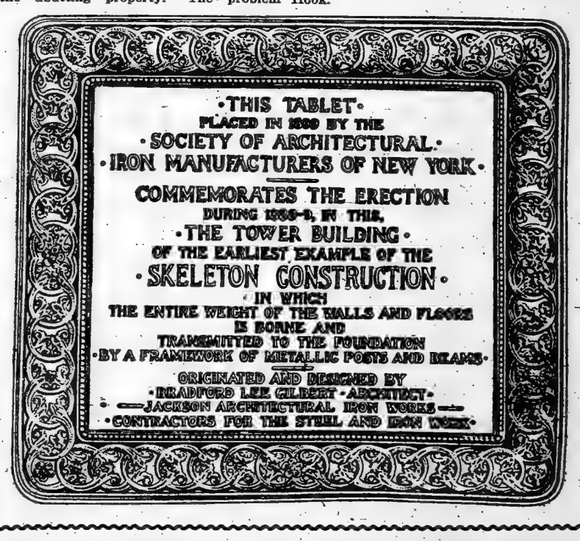
"One day the idea came upon me like a flash that an iron bridge truss stood on end was the solution of the problem. The building laws did not limit the height of the foundations of a building either below or above the curb line. This was evident from the first floor level of the prevailing high stoop, or English basement. I saw no reason why it was not feasible to carry the foundations up seven or eight stories, or even to the roof itself, in order to obtain floor space where it was most desirable. There was no reason why I should not begin the superstructure six stories above the curb. Having demonstrated to my own satisfaction the safety and practicability of such a construction I went to Superintendent D'Oench, who was then at the head of the Building Department in New York. While he agreed that my plan was feasible, he said, frankly, that no law existed under which the construction could be approved. It required the tedious negotiations with a Board of Examiners before the plans were approved in April, 1888. Meanwhile the newspapers had made my 'idiotic building,' as some of them called it, talked about all over the United States. Architects came from as far away as Portland, Oregon, first to examine my plans, and then to denounce them as unsafe and impracticable. I was told, time and time again, that the building would blow over with the first stiff gale that came up the bay from Sandy Hook.



"The construction throughout the narrow portion of the building, as filed and erected, called for a twelve-inch curtain, or non-bearing inclosing walls between the foundation columns below the eighth story, and in some sections the entire height of the thirteen stories in the building, or about 160 feet, the weight of the curtain walls and floors being transmitted by girders to the wall columns at initial points, and there cared for by cement pile footings. Thus, out of a total available width of 21 feet 6 inches 20 clear feet was obtained (on account of the party wall on the south) through the most valuable and rentable of the Broadway floors and offices. In fact, this wall space as saved and rentable, over the previous style of construction, proved worth upward of $10,000 a year.

"When the actual construction of the building began my troubles increased tenfold. The mere suggestion of a building 21½ feet wide, rising to a height of 160 feet above its footings, filled everybody who had no particular concern in the matter with alarm. Finally an engineer with whom I had worked for many years, came to me with a protest. When I paid no attention to him he wrote to the owner. The owner came to me with the letter. He was afraid the building would blow over, and that he would be subject to heavy damages. My personal position in the matter, and that of the Building Department that had given me the permit, never seemed to strike him at all. Finally I drew out my strain sheets, showing the wind bracings from cellar to roof, and demonstrated by analysis that the harder the wind blew the safer the building would be; as, under 100 tons under hurricane pressure, while the wind was blowing seventy miles an hour, the structure was cared for by its footings, and was safest. And that is as true of the twenty-story skyscraper of to-day as it was of the thirteen-story skyscraper then. You must trust somebody," I said, "and you would better trust your architect for the sake of your peace of mind. To show my faith in the building I will make my offices in the two upper floors of the Broadway end. If the building falls, I will fall with it.

"This seemed to satisfy him, and we went ahead. One Sunday morning, when the walls of the building were ready for the roof, I awoke to find the wind blowing a hurricane. That gale is a matter of record in the Weather Bureau. With a friend who had implicit faith in my plans I went downtown to the skyscraper. A crowd of persons who expected it to blow over stood at a respectful distance to watch the crash. Janitors and watchmen in adjoining buildings and structures across the street moved out. They were afraid of being crushed to death, and said unpleasant things about my steel frame building. I secured a plumb line and began to climb the ladders that the workmen had left in place when they quit work the previous evening. My friend went with me as far as the tenth story. The persons who looked at us from below called us fools.

"When I reached the thirteenth story the gale was so fierce I could not stand upright. I crawled on my hands and knees along the scaffolding and dropped the plumb line. There was not the slightest vibration. The building stood as steady as a rock in the sea. In my enthusiasm I was rash enough to stand erect and wave my hat. The wind caught me and carried me toward the end of that scaffolding. It is in emergencies like that that a man prays, if he ever prays. I prayed, not only giving thanks to God that my building was weathering that awful strain, but I prayed for safety. Just as I reached the end of the platform a rope that was swaying in the wind from an upright beam of the tower was swept within my reach. I grasped it, held on, dropped to my knees, and crawled back to the ladder. My friend and I descended to the street and walked arm in arm up Broadway singing the Doxology.

"There is nothing to fear about the safety of the skyscraper. The Baltimore fire has put them to the severest test. I went there to watch them. They were not found wanting when weighed in the balance. Some attempt has been made to confound the steel-frame building with the cage-constructed building, like the Pulitzer Building and the Home Insurance Company Building. There is a radical difference. While steel was used in construction of these buildings, and the inner weight supported by the columns, the outer walls were thick enough to be self-sustaining. In the Tower Building, the first skyscraper, everything depended on the steel framework, outer walls and all.

"It has been demonstrated over and over again that the longer iron or steel is buried in cement the stronger it is. The men who tear down the first skyscraper ever built in New York are going to have a run for their money, long as the building has been standing. The Pabst steel-frame building, which was torn down to make way for the new home of THE NEW YORK TIMES, was a new structure. This one has stood the wear of years. It cost only $250,000, as against the two-million-five-hundred-thousand-dollar skyscrapers of to-day. The skyscraper idea brought in $90,000 a year in increased rental. I am sorry I did not copyright it. The royalties would have amounted to millions. I should have done so, but I was scared off by lawyers who said lawsuits about infringements would outweigh the possible advantages."

THE PUNNING YACHTSMAN

Yes, Miss, when a ship is broached, her flew-garnets are set thereon close to the jewel-blocks.

It is not customary to dress ships in foul weather; they may have to scud under bare poles.

Because he's a seasoned seeman, a blind sailor can point out a "fly" on a masthead flag. Fact! Commodore Totten says so.

Ships are always of the feminine gender. Sometimes when a ship is going about, she misses stays and is immediately put in irons. But when wearing and in all her cloths, a ship never misses stays; even a sheet-anchor "Jack" would know no such stock or fluke.

Though the skipper exclaims, "Hard-a-lee!" nevertheless it is ever true that a ship properly decked, always braces up and will go about in stays in the teeth of the wind, with all her cloths shivering in the wind, and never a belaying pin or a thole pin to hold them on with.

No, Sir, the jaws of the gaff do not hold the teeth of the wind; the hold is for freight.

Jack is not a thrifty gardener, although much of his time is spent in working about the yards and halyards.

Finally, we wish all our nautical guests good luck and Wil-helm our yachts in his honor to show them the way over. (?)

The martingal stays under the bowsprit. Many other stays stay about a ship, but none gird her waist.

A ship's bow is always graceful, and no wonder, for the ship's best bower is ever "on the bow." (Pardon the slang.)

The only vegetables about a ship are the occasional leek, with frequent beets when the wind is ahead. Although she lives on water her mainstay was formerly Manila hemp, but of late years she has been lead up to steal; the lignum vitae masthead truck is unfortunately not of the garden truck variety, nor as succulent.

The crew of a lumber ship, however, needs no provisions. The officers and all hands live on board.

Landlubbers might presume the sailor to be a hen when the mate sings out to him "Lay aft there!"

A ship that lays to might suggest a thought of the hatchway, and hence, perhaps, of a booby hatch.

A ship's deck seams seem a part of her deck and wouldn't be seemly if not kept tight on water. How seamingly inconsistent.

Jack on his ship's deck is more loyal to the flag than city landsmen, for he walks overboard rather than on the flags.

To learn what a whaleback is, just term an old sailor a nauticus and you'll realize it.

Sergeant Sheridan---The Man with the Camera Eyes

They Keep Him on File at Police Headquarters and He Knows You Whoever You Are--Especially if You're a Lawbreaker---So Don't Give Him a False Name.

CLANG! clang! clang! sounded the big Central Office gong in Mulberry Street as a prelude to the appearance of a motley procession of men and women who, for one reason or another, had awakened and found themselves in the meshes of the law a few mornings ago. They had been haled from their overnight lodgings in Police Headquarters, and were being aligned for a preliminary examination and identification.

Despair, anger, defiance, nervousness, fear, the gamut, in short, of human emotions was mutely evident in the face of the company as the examining official took them in hand one by one. Near the head of the line were two men and two women who had been arrested the evening before on a swindling charge. One of the men gave his name as George Simpson and the other averred that he was Joseph Edwards.

"Are you sure of those names?" queried the examiner skeptically.

"Sure," replied the two men in unison.

"Because," continued the examiner, "if you are giving me fictitious names you know what the penalty is." Both prisoners stoutly championed their veracity, until the examiner motioned to a man who, although in civilian garb, is one of the most valued and unique attachés of the Detective Bureau. His name is William Sheridan, and he is a Detective Sergeant in charge of the Bureau of Identification—the Bertillon Bureau, they call it—at Police Headquarters.

If Sergt. Sheridan knows you, whoever you are, you may be sure it is for better or worse. Fifty or sixty thousand men and women are known to him—acquaintances made during his nineteen years in the detective service—and he remembers the faces and facts concerning every one of them. Needless to say, they are law-infringers who have come within his visual and mental scope since 1895, when he took charge of the Bureau of Identification.

Among both the makers and breakers of law in this city and country Sergt. Sheridan is known as the man with the camera eyes. For his eyes—blue and as piercing as augers—are as lenses through which impressions are made on a brain—a memory—as sensitive and tenacious as the most perfect photographic film.

Asked by the examiner if he recognized either of the prisoners, Sergt. Sheridan glanced at the smaller man and replied instantly, addressing the prisoner: "Your name is William Nelson. You were arrested in such and such a year at such and such a place and you served three years. Who is your partner?"

"Well," replied the culprit, "I might as well confess that you are right about me. But you have nothing on him."

"Yes, we have," was the instant reply. Turning then to the second man he continued: "Herman, you've lost twenty pounds and most of your hair since 1888 when you and Meredith inveigled and shot Phil Daly at Fourth Avenue and Twenty-eighth Street. This man," turning to the examiner, "is Henry Herman. We have his record and photographs on file. His aliases are so and so and so and so."

Sergt. Sheridan, it may be explained, had never laid eyes on the man Herman, but had seen his photograph seventeen years previously when he was caught and convicted in the daring and celebrated attempt to hold up Phil Daly in this city.

During his incumbency Sergt. Sheridan has never made a mistake in identification, and very rarely does he forget any vital facts concerning any important arrest made in this country or Europe during the past decade or more. His smiling, oval face, broad about the brow and strong of chin, is more feared by evil-doers who are brought to him for identification than anything that exists between prime and captivity for them. All the malefactors of the country who have been in the hands of the authorities here or elsewhere are accurately tabulated in his memory, although he has not personally seen a tithe of them. Seated day after day at his desk adjoining the great vaults in which a hundred thousand criminal records are kept, he is the secret, invisible, implacable foe of those who people the shadow world.

Gifted, as he is, with a photographic eye and memory, Sergt. Sheridan accepts and recognizes his remarkable powers as merely a matter of nature and training. About him there is nothing occult or mysterious—nothing complex, in a day and department which fosters complexity and mystery as so much stock in trade. Your average detective is prone to half reveal and half conceal himself and his methods in a no less provoking than alluring veil. But, so far as mystery is concerned, this modern investigator of human vagaries impatiently waves it aside. He only wonders that other people cannot see through a sham the same as himself.

As another example of his extraordinary faculty: Not long ago—to be exact, in 1902—a photograph was sent over from Brooklyn to be recorded and filed in the Bureau of Identification. According to the Bertillon custom, the name of the prisoner was written William Murphy on the back of the photograph. Inspector McClusky happened to be talking with Sergt. Sheridan when the picture arrived, and to him the man of memory remarked off-hand that it was a picture of one Bob Suffrage, a notorious bank burglar, who had been arrested and convicted in 1882. He added that the arrest twenty years previously had been made by Detective Mulvey in Brooklyn.

Word to that effect was sent to the Brooklyn police, and Mulvey, being still on the force, was sent to Raymond Street Jail to look the prisoner over. After a careful examination of the self-named Murphy, Detective Mulvey reported that he had never before seen the man, and the Manhattan Detective Bureau was so notified.

Arraigned before a Magistrate, the prisoner was informed that he had been identified as Bob Suffrage by the Central Office authorities. A lenient sentence was promised him if he would confess; otherwise, in case the identification was proved, his sentence would be doubled. Finding himself thus between Scylla and Charybdis, the prisoner confessed, saying that he had recognized Detective Mulvey as the same officer who had arrested him twenty years before.

Producing first the photograph taken in 1883—as shown on this page—and then the 1902 picture, Sergt. Sheridan indicated the peculiar droop of the eyelids in the later picture, and pointed out that the droop was missing in the first one.

"While I would have otherwise recognized the pictures as being of the same person," he continued, "my attention was first attracted by those drooping eyelids—a droop such as long and continued confinement in prison is sure to occasion. I remembered that the man Suffarge had received a long sentence, hence the droop. I saw through the beard easily enough," he concluded.

+ + +

While he was talking an officer entered with six men of various ages and degrees of sartorial probity. They had been arrested the day before in Elizabeth and had individually declared it to be the first time they were ever in the colloquial toils.

"What's your name?" demanded Sergt. Sheridan of the first victim. "Paul Milligan," was the sullen reply.

"No, it isn't," was the prompt rejoinder. "Your name is James McCafferty, and you were arrested three years ago in Chicago for tapping a till."

"What name have you invented since you were Harry Schindler out in Pittsburg in 1900?" addressing the second man. "You have a scar on your right arm which you received in resisting arrest that time." The man, who had given the name of Charles Jacobs, confessed without further ado, as did two worthies named Shine and Rice, who had given fanciful nomenclatures to the Elizabeth officials.

Compare the two accompanying photographs of John Tracy and the amazing legerdemain of Sergt. Sheridan may be further appreciated. The first picture was taken in 1889, when Tracy was arrested and sentenced to a term in the Kings County Penitentiary. Since then Sheridan had never set eyes on him, until his picture drifted into the office a few days ago as of John Jones, arrested for picking pockets at a spiritualistic gathering in Brooklyn. Tracy was identified as having broken the law under a dozen assumed names since serving his last term, and was sentenced to sixteen years in Sing Sing. But for the Argus eyes overlooking the Bureau of Identification he would have escaped with a nominal sentence.

Equally remarkable was the identification of a notorious hotel rifler named Eddie McLean, whose alias was George Hamilton. McLean, remarked Sergeant Sheridan, has been arrested and pictured six different times. Each time he was careful to place his head in a different pose, besides being on one occasion full bearded, again with only a mustache, or again clean shaven. His attempts to disguise himself, though admittedly clever, availed him nothing in any instance.

Here it may be stated that in cases of first offense a prisoner is seldom measured or photographed if the charge be a minor one. But if, in the judgment of Acting Inspector O'Brien, the importance of the case so warrants, he or she is taken to the top of the building, where not only his or her cephalic index is computed, but as much care is exercised in measuring a mole or scar on a person as is taken in an astronomical calculation.

+ + +

But, as sometimes happens, the Bertillon measurements are not carefully made, or maybe an identification may depend upon an imperfect description or photograph forwarded from one of the smaller towns or cities. Day after day scores of such photographs are received at the Central Office, and it becomes the duty of Sergeant Sheridan to supply the missing links. Picking them up one by one, without referring to the memoranda accompanying each picture, he repeats the names and numbers under which the pictures are classified in his department, recounts the most recent crimes, sentences, cities, and prisons, and tells just how long each particular person has been a free and equal citizen of the Republic.

"And how do you do it?' was asked him.

"I hardly know, myself," was his reply, as he continued sorting some hundred clippings from all parts of the country. "I look at a face and think of a name, and somehow or other they glue themselves to my mind. If I were not to see you for ten years I could, at the end of that time, tell you exactly when we met and where, and also the circumstances of the meeting. Of course, there are hundreds of faces that one sees casually and soon forgets. But when my attention is concentrated on a face or the facts concerning it, nothing seems to leak from my memory."

Sergt. Sheridan is not fond of talking about his accomplishments, having a natural aversion to being considered a freak. It was only by special permission of the powers above that he was prevailed upon to discuss himself and his work. Nor was it he who furnished most of the information accompanying the pictures here reproduced.

They are actual portraits, and were in no instance gotten up for the occasion. In fact, there are stories current around Police Headquarters which eclipse in novelty the cases instanced. Rare as are the difficult indentifications made by others than the unassuming head of the bureau, if is rarer still that his name ever appears in connection with them.

Others in the eighty-six metropolitan precincts obtain the printed credit, in nine out of a dozen puzzling identifications, which, were the truth known, belongs to Sergt. Sheridan. But were you to question the dwellers of the under world—those whose ways have led them away from toil and toward trouble—they all tell the truth when they avow an undying fear and hatred of this one man who is to them an encyclopaedia of faces and facts, an unerring court of appeals.

For every professional worthy has a mature distaste for discovery. So long as he evades the camera he is contented, if not prosperous, since he is practically immune from drag-net arrest. But once his measure has been taken by the Bertillon system he or she becomes a member of the phantom army of evildoers who match their wits against Sergt. Sheridan and his colleagues in Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago, New Orleans, San Francisco, and elsewhere.

When a culprit is taken to the police gallery to be snap-shotted he invariably tries, if he is a man of mentality, however errant, to remember every detail of the pose. If he can change his natural expression without exciting attention he will do so. In any event he endeavors to memorize anything and everything that may be of future use to him. He recalls how he combed his hair the last time, whether or no he wore a mustache or how it was arranged, whether he was wearing a hat or glasses, or again if he repressed his lips, and whether he expanded or contracted his nostrils and eyelids.

All these are parts of his stock in trade. Knowing that Sergt. Sheridan is almost infallible, the victim yet hopes against hope that he or she may be the one exception to a yet unbroken rule.

Despite his nineteen years of experience in the ways and woes of the wily brotherhood, Sergt. Sheridan is only forty-four years old. Graduating from De La Salle Institute, and then the City College in New York, he entered the Western Union telegraph service, and promptly proceeded to memorize 1,800 branch offices in his department.

Soon Inspector Byrnes heard of and sent for him. His laconic verdict was the offer of a place in the great house of detection. Since then Sheridan has been over both hemispheres trekking and tracking criminals as a prologue to his present position. Next year he will round out his twentieth anniversary in the department and will be eligible for retirement. But if there is any man living who can satisfactorily fill his place and chair, he has not as yet come forward, say those who know.

The First Railroad Telegraph

A Milestone in Railway Equipment

THE running of trains by telegraph was first practically accomplished in 1851, by the Erie Railroad. Notwithstanding much skepticism, the new system was quickly developed, and by 1854 became thoroughly efficient, remaining in force with but little change until the installation of the block system in 1888. It was the Erie's success with the telegraph that led to its adoption by all railroads.

Erie trains are protected by a complete system of block signals.

From Sand Bank to Stained-Glass Window

Story of an Art Industry That Thrives in This City Yet Is Little Known to the Layman---Vagaries and Losses in the Manufacture of the Glass Which Gives the "Dim Religious Light."

THRILLING as was the ordeal of Shadrach and his companions in the roaring furnaces of Nebuchadnezzar, the adventures of an ordinary carload of Massachusetts sand, such as goes daily into the greater Brooklyn glass furnaces and eventually turns up in a dome or memorial window, are not without interest or novelty. Few persons are aware that most of the colored or cathedral glass used in decorative windows over this country is manufactured in Brooklyn—prepared for John La Farge, Gabriel Chenes, and other master workers in glass. So much reformed sand comes from across the river, in fact, as to earn Brooklyn the distinction of being a city of glass houses.

To follow a ton of white sand into a furnace, to watch it transformed into a molten mass resembling red-hot taffy, and then to pursue it visually under huge steel rollers, operated by steam or hand, until eventually it comes forth and is delivered at a ramshackle building on Washington Square as material for the artists, cutters, and joiners, is to gain a knowledge of a unique and very little known art industry of the metropolis.

Only within the past few years has the making of memorial windows taken an important place among the fine arts. Practically the first hand-rolled glass made in the United States was produced in Brooklyn in 1880, since which time the popularity of and demand for stained-glass windows has increased by leaps and bounds.

Scattered over the country are approximately a million domes and windows, a majority of which were designed, if not by, after designs of, a few artists whose studios are in the neighborhood of Washington Square.

Alice discovered nothing more entertaining in Wonderland than one may find in the glass house across the bridge. But they who weave magic in them are a secretive folk—ever coming and going in whispers and taking a sort of blue-stocking care about admitting visitors. Why? Each factory has its own secret processes of making glass, its special ovens as carefully watched and warded as a thoroughbred on the eve of a Suburban, its workmen and apprentices who form of themselves a close corporation. Admission is always a special privilege.

Arriving, for instance, at one factory, the writer was met and dubiously surveyed by Manager John Dannenhoffer. Being satisfied that no verbal stones were to be thrown at the house, the entertainment committee of one cautiously led the way through the rambling premises.

Were Brooklyn Grenada, Manager Dannenhoffer would be known as an alchemist. He and his brother have inherited many secrets, along with the business, from their father—a pioneer of pioneers in glassmaking.

Sometimes a Dannenhoffer speaks English, the rest of the time German. The manager was speaking German when he approached a huge bin and directed a number of workmen about the respective quantities of sand, soda ash, alkali, metallic oxide, and twenty-four-carat gold to use in mixing a batch of ruby glass.

Twenty-four-carat gold? Nearly $200 worth of pure gold was being sprinkled recklessly on the sand heap before the protesting eyes of the visitor.

Directly sand, soda, alkali, oxide, and gold were being twirled and whirled round and round in a sort of exaggerated hogshead. Then the precious batch was shoveled into the fining pots, of which twelve were in commission in a temperature of 3,500 degrees.

"You never can tell," explained the alchemist, "what is going to happen in there," pointing toward the crimson glare of the nearest furnace. "Just now we are making ruby glass on a special rush order, the pure gold you saw giving the batch a shade of ruby, unless one of several things happen before the glass is ready for rolling."

"For example," stepping aside as one of the furnaces was opened, "it frequently happens that every particle of gold in a batch is burned out, leaving a drabbish gray glass, worth hardly one-half as much as the opalescent ruby. Let us see how this batch is coming along."

Wielding a long-armed ladle, an assistant had advanced and dished out enough of the raw, molten mixture to make a sheet of regulation size. Walking over to a heavy, steel-based machine, he poured the writhing contents on the chilled metal. Immediately two supernumeraries with iron forks began working—pulling—the red-hot lump, much as home-made candy is pulled. Shoving it close under the roller, the molten mass was flattened out and deftly transferred to the annealing ovens, where it was subjected to a gradual cooling process. On from chamber to chamber in the great oven coolers the sheet passed, until it was finally served up like a German pancake—a perfect sheet of ruby glass, worth 30 cents a pound.

The original batch of sand and other material, sufficient for 1,000 pounds of glass, was worth $300 in the finished state.

"One curious thing about the manufacture of stained or colored glass," resumed Manager Dannenhoffer, "is the uncertainty of results. As one might say in a whisper, there are only two things more uncertain—the mood of a woman and the heels of a mule. We, for instance, never know exactly how the shades will be in the finished product. If we did, if we could foreshade the glass accurately, we could save hundreds of thousands of dollars both to ourselves and to the consumers, the purchasing public.

"Again," passing into the barn-like storerooms, with their tons and tons of precious glass boxed and ready for shipment, and leading the way up stairs to a room such as Omar Khayyam may have minded in writing his rubaiyat, the guide continued, "there is the constant likelihood of the fining pots cracking or proving defective—and each pot is worth from $50 to $80."

Ranged along the walls were a dozen pots in process of making. Over in one corner a workman was breaking up a quantity of Hessen clay—combing and kneading it of hairs and stray straws. The presence of a foreign particle in a pot subjected to a temperature of 2,000 or 3,000 degrees occasions a costly leakage even when it does not result in the pot cracking and spilling gold, glass, and all, it was explained.

Emerging and descending again to the nether furnaces, the guide directed attention to a number of workmen making what is called hand-rolled and drapery glass. Drapery glass, used, as the name designates, in securing drapery effects on window figures of such as saints and women, taxes the skill and ingenuity of the glassmakers to the utmost, explained the guide.

Two men were rolling a red-hot lump of raw glass into a sheet about a quarter of an inch thick. No sooner was the flattening process completed than another workman, with an eye to millinery effects, caught the cooling, but still pliable, glass with the prong of an iron spear, and with a deft turn of the wrist, looped it at one end so that in a trice several graceful folds rippled and radiated over the surface in much the same manner as a Roman toga falling from a Senatorial shoulder.

"We have a good many tricks at our end of the trade," concluded the manufacturer, "but we are not in the same class, with the artists, such as La Farge and Chenes. They begin, you know, where we leave off."

Gabriel Chenes was busy on a design for a forthcoming window of heroic dimensions when seen in his Washington Square studio-workshop. During many years of association with John La Farge—the great French master—his name has been affixed to some of the most celebrated work and windows done in this country.

While hardly of middle age himself, there is much of Middle Ages and mystery about the roomy studio near the home of Mayor McClellan. Here and there were boldly executed drawings of Biblical or saintly characters, St. Luke gazing down from one wall, while Peter the Hermit preaches the first crusade to a rapt mediæval assemblage grouped about him on another wall.

Mythology and the Scriptures, in both of which the maker of memorial windows must be versed, were generously represented in the well-selected library, contributing further to the dimly devout atmosphere.

Adding a touch to a No. 8 halo and buckling on a No. 9 sandal with two successive strokes of the pencil, the artist stepped back and surveyed his handiwork. Smiling abstractedly, he remarked that the halo was a failure, as, tilted to one side of the head, it conveyed an impression of rakishness quite out of seeming with the apostolic wearer.

"We have to be very careful and conservative in reproducing the revered and reverend figures of Biblical history," pursued the artist. "For the world has made up its mind, rightly or wrongly, regarding the personal appearance of this or that saint or character. As a matter of fact, there is no positive clue to the minute appearance of any of the great Scriptural figures. We are—and it is a curious coincidence—as much in the dark as to the positive features and figure of the Christ as we are of Shakespeare. Nevertheless, everybody has a photographic idea of how both of them looked, and hence—in the case of the great figures of the New Testament—the memorial window artist has small scope for originality, even though his reading may have convinced him that such and such a character was really very dissimilar from the general notion.

"At the same time, the mission of the memorial window is a responsible one and demands conscientious thought and deliberation on the part of the artist, in so far as a vast number of persons, in Sunday schools and churches, get indelible mental impressions from it.

"Again," with a despairing expression, "our work lasts forever, under ordinary conditions. Nothing save lightning or an earthquake or contact with a destructive object ever destroys a glass canvas, so to say, and for that reason, when a church or cathedral is provided with windows, no matter how ugly or inappropriate, there is small chance of replacing them. Sentiment also has considerable to do with it, it being contrary to sentiment to disturb a window which a congregation has gazed on for years.

"Frequently," he continued, "the graver nature of the work of communing with saints, so to say, is violently disturbed by a client wanting the impossible done. For instance, a woman recently ordered from me a memorial window to commemorate her late husband. She thought Saint Paul preaching at Athens would be appropriate. But on receiving the preliminary drawing she decided that her husband should be shown in the Athenian audience, listening to the preacher. It took considerable tact and reasoning to persuade her otherwise.

"On another occasion a New England congregation, composed of practical, hard-working folk, strenuously objected to the use of Greek characters under a trinity of Faith, Hope, and Charity. The Elders wanted no hifalutin' dead language used, and so the English terms were adopted.

"I suppose the average person," continued Mr. Chenes, "is like the average vestryman who cannot reconcile results with the expense of making a set of handsome memorial windows, say, those costing from $1,000 to $5,000 a window. But when it is remembered that the glass alone in such a window costs several hundred dollars, besides time and thought spent on the original color drawing and the work of transferring the drawing to glass, the expense is explained. As an instance, Mr. La Farge and I once worked up a window of forty or fifty figures, in which there were so many thousand pieces of glass that they could not be counted. Windows like that may require a year or more in the making."

Rising and crossing from his studio to a tottering old building on the south side of Washington Square, the artist continued: "My saying that several hundred dollars' worth of glass may go into a window was figurative rather than literal. Twenty times as much glass as actually used is broken in making a window. There," pointing to an immense pile of broken glass, "is material which cost thousands of dollars—gone to waste. It costs $5 a load to cart it away."

On every floor of the building men were turning out windows, domes, candelabra, gorgeous lampshades, nearly everything possible to colored glass save eyes and baseball arms.

How, it may be asked, are the workmen guided in selecting the hundreds of shades and shades that go into a window? One large room was plastered with dummy drawings, on each of which was pinned bewildering bits of paper bearing numbers. Each number meant a shape and shade, and, the foreman volunteered, the workmen follow copy, even though it be out of the window.

Now and then, as was the case with a window for the William K. Vanderbilt house, a client is not satisfied with mere glass, but will have a window studded with rubies, amethysts, opals, and other precious stones, running the cost into tens of thousands of dollars. Daily experiments in securing color effects are producing results which are a revelation to the layman. Ask them on Washington Square, and they will tell you that red and blue make purple; that violet placed over ruby and opal softens the tone and pulls a window together; that certain colors must be used in fighting the three lights known as warm, cool, and firelight, and many other mysteries to the uninitiated. Without being art nouveau, memorial window making to the man in the street is a new art, as yet comparatively unexplored.

EX-MAYOR SETH LOW has quite a reputation as a story teller, and the following is one of his:

A German and a Frenchman were once sitting in a café, and each was extolling the celebrity of the great men from his own country. The Frenchman was just in the midst of a long speech about Napoleon when his friend, who had been greatly absorbed in his own thoughts, suddenly interrupted him by saying: "But in France you have no such men as Goethe!"

"Goethe," said the Frenchman; "who is Goethe?"

"What, you don't know who Goethe is?"

"Never heard of him."

"Do you mean to say that you don't know the man who wrote 'Faust'?"

"Oh!" was the quick rejoinder, "in French we pronounce that Gounod!"

THE Vassar girls tell a good one on an ancient and venerable instructor of paleology at that institution of learning. From time immemorial it had been his custom at recitations to call on the young ladies in alphabetical order, beginning at the beginning of the alphabet each new term, and calling on three pupils each day. It did not take the girls very long to figure out just when their turn would come and neglect or prepare the lesson accordingly. After many years of this system, the professor was shocked and grieved to find out how the young Portias were taking advantage of him. He spoke to the girls severely of the wickedness and folly of such conduct as had come to his ears.

"Since you are not to be trusted," he added solemnly, "I shall fool you by abolishing the old method. Hereafter I shall begin at the end of the alphabet and go backward."

GOV. PENNYPACKER, the unique Chief Executive of the Keystone State, seemed to know his business well while he was on the Judge's bench, (whatever may have been said of the worthy gentleman since then,) while in all matters of scholarship, however erudite or abstract, this descendant of the Pennsylvania Dutch was usually ready with the right answer. This trait of the academic was shown when a brother Judge, in the days, before the Governorship, once leaned over to the Hon. Samuel, during the tongue-lashing rangue of a particularly boresome attorney, asking him: "How can you sit so quietly and listen to such rot?"

"I'm not listening," was the Pennypacker reply; "I'm counting the split infinitives."

MRS. RORER, the cooking teacher, invariably prefaces her class lessons with a story, even if it is sometimes against herself. "I had a pupil once," she said to her New York class, "who came to me in tears. She had not long been married, and her husband had taken her from behind a cashier's desk. Before the wedding she came to me for a few cooking lessons. Afterward for a while hubby was content with everything, but pretty soon he began to miss the things that mother used to make. Nothing suited him. One day she made him a pumpkin pie. When he sat down to the table he looked at it and exclaimed:

"'What's the matter with this pie?'

"'I am not aware that anything is the matter with it,' she retorted with spirit, weary of his grumbling.

"'What is in it?' he continued.

"'It is beefsteak pie, and I made it out of Mrs. Rorer's cookbook.'

"'I see,' he grumbled, 'and this leathery part is the binding.'"

JOSEPH M. STODDART, whose acquaintance among authors and artists extends over two hemispheres and half a century of activity, tells this story of a meeting with Edgar Saltus, novelist and wit, in London a few months ago. "I had just arrived in London from Liverpool, and was hurrying down Fleet Street, when I came face to face with Saltus," said Mr. Stoddart. "He directed an inquiry as to my health, and I remarked that I was just over from New York.

"'And I—I'm just going back,' rejoined Saltus. 'I forgot my umbrella.'"

IT may be difficult in Russia," said District Attorney W. T. Jerome, "for it seems as though they were in for a real revolution over there without the third of what are called the three essentials, but [illegible] your genuine revoluter wants [illegible] three. In South America, for instance, he won't begin work without the [illegible]

"The three essentials?" queried the Philadelphia lawyer, "and what are they?"

"Money first; [illegible] goes in this age without that, [illegible] come arms and ammunition [illegible] of it is the [illegible] ally just as necessary as the other two—a way to escape."

MRS. CRAGIN, better known to novel readers under her pen name of "John Oliver Hobbes," has just come forward with a new dramatic generalization, though she frankly admits that in stating it she is but the self-appointed mouthpiece of a small girl of her acquaintance who frequently accompanies her theatre-loving parents to the play. According to this nine-year-old authority all drama is to be divided as follows:

"Tragedy is where they wear fancy dress and get murdered.

"Just plays is where they're like other people and die of measles or commit suicide.

THE BANK STATEMENT.

Surplus Reserve Cut in Half by Loss in Cash and Heavy Increase in Loans and Deposits.

A very heavy increase in loans and a large loss of cash resulted in yesterday's bank statement in a reduction of more than 50 per cent. in the surplus reserve reported the previous week. The item in the report which attracted most attention was the addition of $20,709,900 to the loan account notwithstanding continued liquidation in the stock market. Deposits increased by $14,932,000, and the holdings of cash were smaller by $4,759,600. The surplus showed a falling off of $8,492,000, and now stands at $8,219,975 as compared with $13,004,275 at this time last year. It is probable that the large increase in loans and the consequent increase in deposits reflected last week the previous week's transactions to a very large extent. The recent Pennsylvania issue of bonds is believed to have played a very large part in the increase in loans reported yesterday, as well as in the loss in surplus. It was thought in some quarters that the statement yesterday reflected preparations for the bond payments to be made next week, notably the payments due on the Japanese bonds, but in quarters where information on the subject was likely to be most accurate it was said that past rather than future transactions were responsible for the swelling of the loan account.

The National City Bank was particularly conspicuous in yesterday's statement. Its increase in deposits was practically the full amount of the increase in that item, and out of the $20,000,000 increase in loans the City Bank reported about $16,000,000.

The items of last week's bank statement, the changes from the preceding week, and the statement of May 21, 1904, follow:

STOLEN TIFFANY GEMS WERE WORTH $35,000

Usual Detective Force Not Employed on the Diamond Robbery.

STONES ARE ALL PEAR SHAPED

Not Parts of Excelsior, but Separate Stones for New York Woman's Necklace—Firm Reticent.

That Tiffany & Co.'s Union Square jewelry establishment was robbed of three very valuable diamonds on May 4, as was reported on Saturday, was learned definitely yesterday. It was also learned yesterday that the Pinkerton Detective Agency, although it has a contract to protect the members of the Jewelers' Mutual Protective Association, in which the Tiffany firm is prominent, as far as possible, had not been called into this case.

Besides this, the Pinkerton agency keeps a regular watch on the Union Square establishment. It was suggested yesterday that the firm might have deliberately made up its mind to take care of the matter in an unusual way because of the odd features of the robbery.

The value of the stolen diamonds, it is now declared, is not $90,000 in the aggregate, as at first reported, but about $35,000, wholesale price. Stones worth approximately $12,000 each are, however, not so ordinary as to be commonplace in a big jewelry place.

The three diamonds are all alike. Each is pear-shaped. That they were not parts of the famous Excelsior diamond, as first reports said, was declared positively. No fraction of that famous stone has been lost; all the parts that were not sold are still in the possession of Tiffany & Co. The three diamonds stolen were being set into a necklace for a New York woman.

The man who was working with the three valuable diamonds was not a cutter. In fact, there is only one expert cutter in the shop, and he had nothing to do with these stones. The employe who handled them is considered very skillful and very trustworthy. The work he was doing, though by no means so difficult as cutting, required a great deal of patience and caution.

On the evening of May 4, when he got through working with them, he wrapped them up in a piece of paper to turn in to the manager. The latter sits on the inside of a little wire-walled office, and to him are given the precious stones to be put into the safe and kept there over night. On this occasion the man with the three pear-shaped diamonds put them on the little glass shelf running through the window of the wire-walled office, leaving them there for the man inside to put away.

That is the last that anybody saw of them—anybody but the thief. In some mysterious manner they disappeared. A peculiar fact, though, is that the man whose duty it is to put them away did not discover the loss. He took the jewels he found on the shelf and put them away, not knowing that the pear-shaped stones ought not to be among them.

No outsider could possibly have got to the jewels. At least, this is the declaration of those who know about the office. Whoever got the jewels had twelve hours to dispose of them, for the loss was not discovered until the next morning, May 5. When the news of it went downstairs and into the office of the President, Charles T. Cook, the Superintendent of the workshop, Ralph M. Hyde, was summoned, as well as others in authority and the man who had worked on the stones.

In fact, everybody that might have the slightest connection with the affair was cross-questioned. But all to no purpose. All of them said they knew nothing about the disappearance of the three pear-shaped diamonds.

Of course, a thorough search was made—that was one of the very first steps. It did not take many minutes for the news of the affair to get around among the workers, and for the rest of the day their thoughts were occupied with the mysterious theft. Meanwhile everybody was asked to keep silent, under pain of dismissal.

Two or three men who work for the Tiffany firm, but not in the room where the robbery occurred, said yesterday that the news of the theft had been a great surprise to them.

"I never heard of it before this morning," one of them said. "I don't believe any of the other men with me did, either. Any outsider knows as much about it this minute as I do. It does seem strange that such a thing could happen without our knowing it. I can't explain it."

On the floor where the robbery was committed fifty men are working. Any one of these might have taken the stones as well as any other. One of the rules of the house—the strictest rule—is that nobody but an employe can go on this floor for any purpose whatever.

It is learned upon good authority that, although the Pinkerton men are not on the case, every man who could possibly have been connected with the affair is under careful surveillance. Every move he takes is noted. The men know they are being watched, too.

Police Inspector Stephen O'Brien, who is said to have been notified of the robbery and to be actively assisting in the search, was not accessible to reporters yesterday.

The diamond workmen got such strict secrecy orders themselves that they were unwilling to talk. No suspicion, it is said, attaches to the man who was working with the diamonds before they were lost. He has been with the firm a long time, the reporter asked of Mr. Treadwell, in the latter's home at 4 West One Hundred and Eighty-third Street.

"In what way were they wrong?"

"The figures given were preposterous. To fix it at $90,000 was absurd—$50,000 is far from correct. Another thing—some of the accounts say that parts of the Excelsior diamond were stolen. This is absolutely untrue. None of the Excelsior diamond is missing."

"How much was the loss?"

"I cannot discuss the matter at all. You'll have to see President Cook.

"President Cook refuses to make any statement."

Then Mr. Treadwell called Mr. Cook up over the telephone, and told him that a TIMES reporter wanted to get the facts of the case.

"I will make no statement to-day," replied Mr. Cook over the telephone, "but I will give out a statement to-morrow morning at Tiffany's."

Louis C. Tiffany was sought at his home in the Tiffany Apartments, 27 East Seventy-second Street, but he had gone to Cold Spring Harbor, Long Island. There he was reached by the telephone.

"I have nothing to say either in confirmation or denial of the report that diamonds have been stolen from Tiffany's," he said.

Ralph M. Hyde, the Superintendent, was not at his home, 41 East Seventy-fourth Street, at any time yesterday. His wife said he had gone out of town and would not be back until to-day. It is thought that he was at Cold Spring Harbor in consultation with Mr. Tiffany.

A Director, who did not want his name used, said the values mentioned in the newspapers were far too high. Another refused to say anything at all about the robbery, but he gave some general information about jewels and the difficulty robbers had in disposing of them.

"Keeping diamonds safe these days," he said, "is ten times as easy as it used to be. It wasn't so very long ago that the safes with precious stones inside had to be surrounded by armed guards all the time. But the safes are so much better now than they used to be.

"Why, it may surprise you, but from South Africa it is customary to send the most valuable diamonds through the registered mail. I have known of a diamond worth thousands of dollars going through the post for only the few cents it requires to register it. And they never get lost this way.

"As to disposing of a very big stone, it is well-nigh impossible. About the only safe thing for a jewel thief to do is to throw the stone into the ocean or grind it to pieces. It is so easy to spot it out no matter what part of the world it finds its way to. All the diamond-cutting establishments are on the lookout for a stone as soon as its loss is made known to them."

JAIL FOR CONEY'S HERO.

Boat from Which He Saved Men and Got for Reward Was Stolen.

There were 200,000 people at Coney Island yesterday, most of them happy, but the only hero of the day was thoroughly disheartened, disgusted, and under arrest. He had rescued twelve persons from drowning at the risk of his life, and this led the way to his apprehension by the police. They recorded him as Frederick Carlson of 300 West Twentieth Street, Coney Island.

Frederick has a record for rescuing folks from drowning, and he has no previous police record. Yesterday was the first time he was ever led to the station in his life. It happened in this way:

He was busy at his work about the pier at Dreamland when a thirty-five-foot catboat, in which were twelve men, suddenly jammed into the pier. It rebounded, with a rent on the starboard side close to the water line, and the men in the craft became panicstricken. They forgot all about the helm and cried for help. The yacht turned crazy circles, and headed for the pier again.

Carlson swam to the wreck and steered it to the pier in safety. Having made fast, he helped the frightened passengers to get out. They grasped him by the hand, fell upon his neck, and called him a splendid fellow. Then one of them said they must reward him for his bravery. He was evidently a seaman and would know what to do with a boat. It was his as the reward of gallantry. He received what he presumed to be a bill of sale for the craft, and the rescued departed.

Carlson looked the boat over with pride. After a hasty inspection he thought he could repair her at small expense and sell her. He cast off for a little spin in the fresh breeze.

About a mile and a half from shore he suddenly realized that his craft was sinking. After an exhaustive swim he reached shore. There a policeman arrested him on the charge of receiving stolen property. When he exhibited the bill of sale the police scoffed at it as a fake. He was bailed out by his employers.

The only other cases of suffering at Coney Island were due to a scarcity of provisions. The restaurant people and those who sell liquid refreshment had not expected yesterday's crowds. They had suffered by overproviding at the opening of the season, and could not believe in advance that the day would turn out as fine as it did. They were hopeless about any real Spring Sunday. The result was that many returned hungry from their holiday.

There was only one excise arrest—this in a place where the sandwich fell to pieces when it was lifted up by a famished policeman.

KILLED IN CHICAGO RIOTS; STRIKE MAY SPREAD

All Trades in Chicago Likely to be Involved.

BOTH SIDES ARE DEFIANT

Employers to Stand by the Express Companies, Which Teamsters Say Must Come to Terms.

CHICAGO, May 21.—Sunday brought no change in the attitude of either side to the labor controversy, and everything to-night points toward an extension of the teamsters' strike during the coming week.

Officers of the seven express companies, whose refusal to reinstate any of their former employes, caused the collapse of the settlement of the trouble last night, still adhere to their decision, and the other firms involved in the difficulty to-night declared that they would stand by the express companies.

The Teamsters' Union has taken just as firm a stand as the employers, and it was said by President Shea to-night that the union would not call off the strike until the express companies came to terms.

The first spread of the strike is expected to come to-morrow morning, when the Lumbermen's Association, an organization employing 2,400 teamsters, issues an order to its men to make deliveries to all business houses, regardless of whether they are involved in the strike. In anticipation of such an order, the teamsters met this afternoon and voted to go on strike should any teamster be discharged for refusing to obey the order of the Lumbermen's Association.

With non-union drivers making deliveries for the lumbermen, the strike will undoubtedly spread to affiliated industries, as the union men employed on buildings will refuse to handle material delivered by non-union labor, and there seems to be nothing that can prevent a general industrial upheaval throughout Chicago.

Levy Mayer, chief counsel for the Employers' Association, gave out a statement to-day in which he said:

"The employers propose to do business and will continue to invoke every legal avenue for the protection of their men and property. That the employers are right in the attitude they have assumed in the controversy was demonstrated by the fact that every term and condition they insisted on was agreed to by Shea and his committee.

"Notwithstanding this, however, Shea now insists that the express companies shall be boycotted by us in order to bring about a settlement of the strike. This we will never do, and, even if we were willing to comply with the demands of Shea, to take such action would be a crime which no law-abiding person would countenance. The teamsters struck against the express companies in violation of the letter of their agreement despite the fact that the men were told that if they struck they would not be re-employed.

"The Employers' Association to a man believes that the seven express companies are justified in the stand they have taken, and our organization will use every endeavor to aid the express companies in maintaining the decision they have reached. Of course this decision means that there will be no settlement of the strike unless the union withdraws its demands; but it is the only thing left for us to do."

Mayor Edward F. Dunne and Sheriff Thomas E. Barrett this afternoon held a conference that President Samuel Gompers of the American Federation of Labor was invited to attend. After talking over the situation with the Mayor and the Sheriff, Mr. Gompers withdrew, to hold a consultation with President Shea of the Teamsters' Union.

"I have been discussing the outlook with Mayor Dunne and Sheriff Barrett," said Mr. Gompers. "They asked me to use my influence and to do everything I possibly could to prevent the extension of the strike. I told them I was willing to do everything I could in an advisory capacity to bring about peace."

At the close of the conference Mayor Dunne said:

"Should there be an extension of the strike with a resumption of the rioting of two weeks ago, there is a probability that the troops will be called to maintain order."

Sheriff Barrett said to-night that he would continue swearing in deputies to-morrow and would make special efforts to increase the number.

In riots last night between white residents and negroes in the neighborhood where Enoch Carlson, a boy, was killed by a negro last week one man was shot and probably fatally wounded, many others were hurt, and six were arrested. In the same district a riot occurred to-night in which a negro was killed.

The rioting to-night began when James Gray, a negro non-union teamster, and Harry Bernstein, a bartender, quarreled about the strike and came to blows. Bernstein drew a revolver, and fried four shots. Two of the bullets took effect in Gray's body and he fell dead.

Two negroes, attracted by the noise, seized the bartender, and a fight for the revolver began. Policeman Tinsley, colored, who has been appointed as a special policeman during the strike, ran up. Bernstein swung the revolver toward him, and, it is said, discharged the weapon, wounding the policeman twice. Tinsley drew his own revolver and fired four shots, each of the bullets taking effect in Bernstein's body, and Tinsley carried him into a saloon.

A big crowd that had gathered, composed largely of negroes, cried for vengeance for the killing of Gray. Tinsley shut and barred the saloon door, and the

MISS LELAND FATALLY HURT.

Aged Woman Run Down by an Electric Cab—Skull Fractured.

Miss O. M. Leland of 692 Park Avenue, who is seventy-five years old and who lives with her brother, Amory Leland, a member of the Union League and other clubs, was run down and seriously injured by an electric cab while crossing Sixty-eighth Street, near Park Avenue, yesterday morning, while on her way to church. Her skull was fractured and she received internal injuries. Her friends were told at the Presbyterian Hospital, where she was taken, that there was little hope for her recovery.

It was Miss Leland's custom to attend services at the Collegiate Reformed Church, at Forty-eighth Street and Fifth Avenue, every Sunday morning, and to walk both ways. Her activity and good health led many to believe that she was not more than of middle age.

She was alone yesterday when she was run down. She had started to cross Sixty-eighth Street when the cab hit her. A man, who told the police that he was George Little of 234 East Seventieth Street and that he saw the accident, said that the chauffeur, seeing Miss Leland, rang his bell and shouted loudly, but that Miss Leland apparently did not hear him. The machine, according to Little, was going slowly, as the chauffeur brought it to a stop in about four feet.

The chauffeur jumped down, picked Miss Leland up, put her into the cab, and rushed to the hospital.

The home of the Lelands is only a block from the Presbyterian Hospital, and her relatives were at once notified. They hurried to the hospital. The Lelands' physician was also summoned. Miss Leland had not regained consciousness up to a late hour last night.

"My sister was seventy-five years old," said Mr. Leland yesterday, "but her friends did not know it. She was younger in appearance and very active and ambitious.

"She insisted on going to church alone, not permitting any one of the family who would not be going on their own initiative to accompany her. We saw her turn westward into Sixty-eighth Street. She usually took that way, crossing to Fifth Avenue and then taking the avenue down to the Collegiate Church.

"I am informed by the physicians that there is a very small chance of her recovery."

CAR HITS AUTO; EXPLOSION.

Machine Lands on Sidewalk Ablaze—Three Men Escape with Bruises.

A large touring car containing three men collided with a Madison Avenue car at Fifty-seventh Street late yesterday afternoon. The men were thrown out and the machine overturned. It caught fire, and then the gasoline exploded.

The automobile was owned and driven by James Runyon of 39 West Sixty-sixth Street and in it were George Ungar of 14 East Forty-seventh Street and Daniel Thompson of 172 Milton Street, Brooklyn.

Mr. Runyon was driving his machine east through Fifty-seventh Street. As he reached Madison Avenue a north-bound car was approaching. Mr. Runyon didn't understand the signal of the motorman and started to cross the tracks. The motorman continued, and when both saw that a mistake had been made it was too late to avoid a collision. The car struck the automobile near the rear wheels. The three men were thrown out and the automobile was tossed up on the sidewalk in front o the Madison Avenue Reformed Church. Then came the explosion. The fire was soon extinguished. Mr. Runyon and his companions escaped with a few bruises.

CORD A. MEYER IN AUTO SMASH

The Machine Bucked Into a Telegraph Pole—Four Hurt.

Cord A. Meyer of 208 Brooklyn Avenue, East New York, who is said to be a nephew of Cord Meyer, Chairman of the Democratic State Committee, was in an automobile smash yesterday afternoon, in which the car was wrecked without its occupants being much hurt. They were returning from Port Jefferson, and in taking a double curve on the Merrick Road, near the Jamaica pumping station, the front wheels struck a rut, throwing the machine head on into a telegraph pole.

The chauffeur, C. W. Clafton of Elmhurst, L. I., was thrown under the machine, but escaped with slight bruises. Charles Brooks of 84 Ninth Avenue and E. Paul of 211 Brooklyn Avenue were slightly bruised, as was Mr. Meyer, who owned the machine. The wreck was left in care of a farmer, and the party went home by trolley.

KILLED BY A BASEBALL.

It Struck James Miles of Brooklyn While He Was Watching a Game.

James Miles of 332 Gold Street, Brooklyn, died yesterday afternoon of concussion of the brain, caused by being struck on the head by a batted baseball while he was watching a game at the Prospect Park Parade Ground on Saturday afternoon.

Miles was a devotee of baseball and was a member of a crack amateur club. The club was booked to play a match at the Parade Grounds, but when it reached the appointed place its members found the field already occupied. There was a great crowd of spectators. While waiting for the game under way to come to an end a ball came sizzing toward Miles and struck him on the temple.

Instead of asking a policeman to send for an ambulance, Miles's companions lifted him on his feet and carried him to a Smith Street car. He did not recover consciousness.

The police have made every effort to discover the identity of the batsman who struck the ball which killed Miles, but no avail. His companions were so frightened when he sank at their feet that they

PRESIDENT BLOCKED MOVE OF OPPONENTS

Change of Front on Canal Supplies Saves Rate Issue.

WAS PLAN TO SIDETRACK IT

Political Stand Patters Saw Chance to Delay Railroad Legislation by Long Discussion on Panama Supplies.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 21.—President Roosevelt's sudden change of base on the question of the purchase of canal supplies is still the topic of discussion here, and little by little the reasons back of it are beginning to leak out. It is an interesting game of politics that has been played here in the last week, although the full facts are not likely to become public for a good while.

The situation is not fully covered or explained by the simple theory that the President backed down before the power of the protected trusts. As nearly as can be learned, the position of affairs is as follows:

The protected interests were genuinely alarmed by the President's threat to buy supplies in the cheapest market. There was no element of politics in their panic. But the political stand-patters of Congress were not so much frightened as the commercial stand-patters, for they immediately saw an opportunity to turn the situation to good account.

All the political stand-patters promised to make a fight as soon as Congress began its extra session in October, and it was predicted by them that a bill on the subject would be introduced before Congress had been in session five minutes.

They saw in the President's new move an opportunity to side-track the railroad rate question by a prolonged discussion on the Panama Canal supplies issue. In spite of the determination of the President's opponents in the Republican Party to kill his railroad rate policy, they have been a good deal perturbed about it. There have been many misgivings, based on his well-known ability to arouse and interest the public on his side of any controversy.

Their discomfort was materially increased by the President's announcement of his intention to make a speech-making trip in the South during the two weeks immediately preceding the convening of the extra session. There is not a man of them who is not thoroughly convinced that the President will devote himself in these two weeks to arousing a sentiment for railroad rate regulation which will make the position of his Congressional opponents hot and painful.

In this emergency Mr. Roosevelt's Panama supplies pronunciamento came out. His opponents saw in a discussion of that question a chance to sidetrack the rate regulation problem for a large share of the extra session.

The President became aware of this as soon as they did, and promptly cut off their opportunity by amending his announcement to the effect that he would buy only a few supplies, and put it up to Congress to decide how he should buy the rest. On the railroad rate they are now back where they were before.

This is not the first time that the tariff question has been used as a pawn in the railroad rate game. Last Winter the President held tariff revision as a club over the heads of the "stand-patters" until he had made Speaker Cannon and the rest enthusiastic supporters of his railroad rate policy. When Speaker Cannon rounded up the House Republicans in caucus and dragooned the Esch-Townsend bill through as a party measure, his speech was in substance this:

"There is no use objecting. You've got to take it. It you don't there will be tariff revision."

BARGES FOR CANAL SUPPLIES.

Philadelphia Company Offers to Take Them to Panama.

PHILADELPHIA, May 21.—In view of the possibio difficulty of the National Government in obtaining vessels to carry supplies and machinery to Panama to be used in the building of the canal there, barge owners of this city will make an effort to get the business. One barge company has already sent proposals to the Secretary of War offering to carry the Government's freight to Colon.

Shipping men say that the scheme is practicable, although no cargoes have ever been sent to Colon in barges. The company that has made the offer owns a fleet of ocean-going tugs and barges which is regularly engaged in the Southern lumber trade. After discharging the Government freight at Colon, it is claimed, they could get a return cargo by stopping at Florida ports for the lumber for the Northern market.

This would dispose of the objections raised to carrying canal supplies in foreign boats.

DEAD IN HOTEL AIRSHAFT.

Magazine Printer Falls Five Stories at the Aulic.

Peter J. Murray, manager of the printing department of McClure's Magazine, fell five stories down an airshaft of the Hotel Aulic, at 154 West Thirty-fifth Street, yesterday morning and was instantly killed. He was a New Englander, married, and lived with his wife at the Hotel Horton, Bay Fifteenth Street and Cropsey Avenue, Bath Beach.

Murray and a small blonde woman dressed in black went to the hotel about 3 o'clock yesterday morning. They left almost immediatery, but in about ten minutes he returned alone and went to his room on the top floor. He had been up

BOSTON, May 21.—A telegram has been received at the Harvard College Observatory from Prof. Lowell at Flagstaff, Arizona, stating that the first Winter snow appeared in the arctic region of Mars between May 18 and 19.

It covered a vast area surrounding the old polar cap, in longitude 230.

SCHOONER HAS WHALE IN TOW

Liner Passes Her and Reports the News by Wireless.

With a huge whale lashed to her side, the whaling schooner William A. Crozier of Provincetown, Mass., was sighted Saturday by the in-bound Porto Rico liner Ponce, which reported by wireless yesterday, when 180 miles south of Sandy Hook.

The message from the Ponce said that the schooner, with the whale alongside, was in latitude 37.12 and longitude 72.34 when seen. The Ponce is due at her pier in Brooklyn early this morning.

BURGLARS RUN FROM $600,000

Spied by Watchman Drilling San Francisco Post Office Safe.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 21.—An attempt to rob the stamp safe at the San Francisco Post Office early to-day was frustrated by William O'Connell, a watchman, who discovered the burglars drilling the safe.

They took alarm and escaped with only $1,400 worth of stamps found outside the safe. The safe contained $14,000 in stamps and much money, while in the cashier's room adjoining was a large safe, which contained nearly $600,000.

WANT STUDENTS FOR HARVEST

Kansans Again Applying for College Men to Enter Wheatfields.

Special to The New York Times.

TOPEKA, May 21.—The farmers of Kansas want Eastern college students to come here this Summer and help them harvest the great wheat crop. Letters are pouring in to employment bureaus asking for college boys.

Last year the best harvesters came from New York and New England. The wheat farmers say these young men come to Kansas to develop their muscle. They want to show the Western boys how to work. They simply will not be outdone, and make the best harvest hands.

COLLISION SINKS STEAMER.

Crew of the Vauxhall Saved—Another Vessel Badly Damaged.

TYNEMOUTH, May 21.—The British steamer Vauxhall has been sunk by a collision with the British steamer Broadmayne.

The Broadmayne, which is from Port Arthur, Texas, via Antwerp, has arrived here with her stem badly damaged.

The Vauxhall's crew were rescued.

BURBANK'S NEW FLOWER.

Santa Rosa Horticulturist Develops a Yellow Calla Lily.

Special to The New York Times.

SANTA ROSA, Cal., May 21.—One of the prettiest of Luther Burbank's creations which is just attaining perfection, is a yellow calla lily. At present it is engrossing the attention of flower lovers as nothing else has done. A large bed of these beautiful lilies is blooming near Burbank's pretty home in this city. In coloring they range from light lemon to a deep orange shade of yellow.

Burbank first obtained from Africa specimens of Richardia Pentlandi and Richardia Elliottana, which have a slight yellow coloring. These he crossed with a hardy dwarf calla and increased the richness of the yellow coloring until he has produced wonderful results.

No Breach of Neutrality Will Be Allowed—Part of Rojestvensky's Squadron Returns to Annam.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES.
Special Cable. Copyright, 1905.

PARIS, May 21.—I hear from a well-informed Russian source that the rendezvous of Admiral Rojestvensky's coaling fleet is an island in Balintang Channel, probably Babuyan Claro. This island is north of Luzon.

A Russian coaling fleet, consisting of twenty-seven colliers and three other ships, supposed to be carrying ammunition, with sailing orders from Hamburg, received instructions at Singapore that the island in Balintang Channel would merely be a point of rendezvous where the coaling fleet might receive further instructions from Rojestvensky.

As to the particular harbor or bay where Rojestvensky's fleet will coal, it will in all probability be somewhere on the coast of the Island of Luzon, that is to say, in American waters.

From this information it would seem that Rojestvensky's intention is to continue his route to Southeast Formosa instead of taking Formosa Strait.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 21.—The State Department has no knowledge of the reported intention of the Russian fleet to coal in American waters.

No infraction of the laws of neutrality will be permitted. The Russians have a perfect right to coal at an American port, but they must not take more than enough to get them to their nearest port, which in this case would be Vladivostok.

The United States has a strong fleet in the neighborhood. Rear Admiral Train, Commander in Chief of the Asiatic fleet, is at Cavite with his entire battleship squadron, consisting of the flagship Wisconsin, the Monadnock, the Ohio, and the Oregon. The Wilmington and El Cano, attached to this squadron, are also at Cavite.

At Cavite, too, is most of the torpedo flotilla division, consisting of the flagboat Barry, the Bainbridge, and the Chauncey, while the Dale and the Decatur are off the Island of Palawan.

The Cincinnati, of the cruiser squadron, is at Cavite, and so is the whole of Commander Cowles's Philippine squadron except the Quiros, which is at Shanghai. The vessels of Cowles's squadron at Cavite are the flagship Rainbow, the Arayat, the Frolic, the Mindoro, the Pampanga, and the Paraguа.

There is a full supply of colliers, dispatch boats, and other auxiliaries. At Shanghai are the Villalobos, attached to the battleship squadron, and the Raleigh, of the cruiser squadron. At Woo-Sung is the flagship Baltimore of the cruiser squadron.

PARIS, May 21.—The Petit Journal's Saigon correspondent, telegraphing last evening, says he has information from an authoritative source that the entire Russian fleet, after leaving Port Dayot, made for the Island of Hai-Nan, where it anchored, taking on coal, and that on the night of May 19-20 a portion of the Russian fleet, comprising eleven ships, returned to the Annam coast, anchoring at Port Dayot, but outside territorial waters.

The Petit Journal says that fact was immediately telegraphed to Saigon, and Admiral de Jonquières decided to proceed immediately to Port Dayot to enforce the observance of neutrality. Admiral de Jonquières carried precise and severe instructions to that effect.

The Petit Journal says it is believed that the returned portion of the Russian fleet is composed of the less rapid of the vessels and that it is a ruse of Rojestvensky, who hopes to mislead Togo by making him believe that the entire Russian fleet has returned to Indo-Chinese waters, thus permitting Rojestvensky, with his faster ships, to slip at full speed to Vladivostok.

The officials, the paper concludes, do not fear complications because of the return of the Russians, as the ships are outside territorial waters.

Advices from Hongkong report that an enormous fleet of colliers for the Russian Pacific fleet is off the Mekong Delta and along the whole coast as far as Cape St. James. Forty of the colliers are flying the German flag, and a score of others show British, Norwegian, Russian, and French flags.

POLISH SCHOOLS SACKED.

Peasants Also Loot Government Offices—Disorder in Kishineff.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 21.—Peasant riots have occurred at Siedlce, Russian Poland. Schools, Government offices, and liquor shops have been sacked and the Emperor's portrait has been destroyed.

Kishineff is reported to be terrorized by roughs. Teachers, students, and Jews are frequently assaulted in the streets.

Greatly increased activity is observable in the dispatch of troops from Poland to the Far East. Recently picked drafts from various regiments were sent from Warsaw, Lodz, and other places.

RUSSIAN CONCESSION TO US.

Question of Sugar May Be Waived in the Tariff Negotiations.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 21.—The desirability of securing the revocation of the imposition by Russia of the maximum duty on American imports, levied in retaliation for the imposition of a countervailing duty by the United States upon Russian sugar, is assuming additional importance owing to the fact that the new Russo-German tariff, which goes into effect at the end of the year, will form the basis for a most favored nation clause.

The German treaty raises the duties on machinery and other articles in which American exporters to Russia are especially interested, and the new general or maximum tariff, with corresponding increases, goes into effect simultaneously. Consequently, unless the Russo-American tariff dispute is adjusted, American imports are destined to bear still further burdens.

Russia is willing to waive the question of sugar, but insists upon the removal of maximum duties upon by-products of petroleum, which affect English vaseline and other products manufactured from Russian naphtha.

The Russian Government also demands a guarantee similar to the one in the new Russo-German treaty specifically binding each country to levy no duties on the products of the other in excess of those levied on similar products of a third power.

Ambassador Meyer has laid the matter before the State Department and is awaiting instructions.

JAPANESE STRIKE RIOT.

All the Whites on a Hawaiian Island Besieged.

HONOLULU, May 21.—Most of the white inhabitants at Lahaina, on the Island of Maui, including the military, are prisoners in the local Court House, which is surrounded by striking Japanese laborers. One Japanese was killed and two were wounded by the police in an attack on a plantation mill.

All the 2,300 Japanese laborers on the island are now on strike and are showing a violent mood. The steamer Kinau left Honolulu this afternoon, taking National Guard Company F, consisting of thirty men, commanded by Capt. Johnson, and forty armed Honolulu policemen under High Sheriff Henry, to the scene of the trouble.

The strike started a week ago on the Wailuku plantation, the other side of Maui from Lahaina. The Japanese made a long list of demands, among them being the discharge of the head overseer. All the demands were rejected. On Friday the strike spread to the Pioneer plantation.

The plantation immediately began paying off the striking Japanese, who then commenced to stone the mill and resisted all efforts of the mounted police to drive them away.

The Mauni military, which was called out, restored order temporarily. Everything was peaceful late Saturday when the island steamer Claudine left, but soon after the steamer's departure a clash between Japanese and plantation policemen occurred, in which shooting took place. A general outbreak followed, ending in the imprisonment of the whites and the militia in the Court House.

Wireless messages were sent to Honolulu asking for aid. A tug also was sent for fear that the wireless telegraphy was not working correctly. The Secretary of the Japanese Consul accompanied the force on the steamer Kinau. He will try to pacify the strikers.

The entire remaining police force of Honolulu is on duty at the police stations to-night under Deputy Sheriff Rawlins, although there are no signs of trouble on this island.

GREET SOUSA AND HIS BAND.

"March King" Gives Some New Airs and Many of the Old Favorites.

At his only concert to be given in this city this season, last night at the Metropolitan Opera House, John Philip Sousa, the "March King," and his band rendered a programme exclusively made up of the bandmaster's own compositions. An interesting review of the work done during a period of seventeen years, between 1888 and 1904, was thus furnished.

The oldest composition on the programme was "Sheridan's Ride," a sort of historical music-painting, the nature of which may be judged by the titles given to its subdivisions—"Waiting for the Bugle," "The Attack," "The Death of Thoburn," "The Coming of Sheridan," and "The Apotheosis." It was dashingly rendered by the band. The two newest pieces were a new march, full of verve as is all that Sousa writes, entitled "The Diplomat," and a very picturesque suite called "At the King's Court." Both were finished last year, and have not been heard before. The other orchestral numbers included selections from Sousa's operas.

The soloists of the occasion were Miss Estelle Liebling, soprano; Miss Jessie Straus, violinist, and Herbert L. Clarke, cornetist. Miss Liebling sang "What Is Love?" an air written by Sousa in 1900 and giving full chance for the singer to display both the quality of her voice and her technique. Miss Straus played a solo for violin entitled "Nymphalin," which is among the composer's earlier works, and Mr. Clarke rendered "O Warrior Grim," from the opera "El Capitan." There was the usual large number of encores, which brought out the old Sousa marches, of which the public never grow tired.

CAMBRIDGE, Md., May 21.—Despondent over her parents' opposition to her marriage, the nineteen-year-old wife of Dorsey Horseman committed suicide yesterday at her home on Taylor's Island by shooting herself through the heart with a revolver.

Mrs. Horseman was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin North. Her parents not only opposed the marriage, but it is said utterly ignored the [illegible]

CZAR TO ESTABLISH A DEFENSE COUNCIL

It Will Have Supreme Control Over All War Operations.

DESIGNED TO END FRICTION

Grand Duke Nicholas Heads the Commission Which Is to Draw Up Plans for the New Body.

ST. PETERSBURG, Monday, May 22.—The first step toward the institution of the long-contemplated Council of National Defense, to co-ordinate the activities of the military and naval administrations, has been taken in an imperial manifesto creating a special preliminary commission, under the Presidency of the Grand Duke Nicholas Nicholaievitch.

The manifesto is preceded by a rescript which Emperor Nicholas has addressed to the Grand Duke, in which his Majesty says:

"In order to insure the development of the empire's fighting force in a manner corresponding to the needs and resources of the State and to secure uniformity in the duties of the supreme naval and military administrations and harmonize them with those of other Government institutions in questions affecting the safety of the State, I have deemed it necessary to establish a permanent State Defense Council. I charge the special commission, consisting of members appointed by me, under the Presidency of your Imperial Highness, to draw up, according to my direct suggestion, a law relating to this institution."

The rescript concludes with the expression of the conviction that the commission will carry out the task confided to it without delay and with the care and undivided attention which the high importance of the new institution demands.

The formation of the council and the assumption by it of control of the war will, it is expected, follow shortly, as the main details have already been worked out.

The existing Council of War, which has proved unsatisfactory, will be superseded by the new body. The step is an extremely important one, for which the events of the war in the Far East have shown the necessity. The Army and Navy Departments failed to work together to the best advantage, even when actuated by the most harmonious feelings, and friction has often been manifested.

Many opportunities for helpful co-operation between the two arms of the service are constantly arising, and if Admiral Rojestvensky succeeds in reaching Vladivostok and shaking the Japanese mastery of the sea the Council will play a very weighty rôle. At the same time the Council is created, not for the present war alone, but as a permanent organism of the State, subordinating the War and Navy Departments, and even overshadowing the other Ministries.

It is understood that the formation of the new Council means the definite abandonment of the plan to send the Grand Duke Nicholas Nicholaievitch to the Far East to assume supreme command on land and sea. Gen. Linevitch and Admiral Birileff will be left unhampered except as to the grand outlines of strategy.

The commission investigating the surrender of Port Arthur has finished the first half of its labors. The investigation of the documentary evidence presented by Gen. Stoessel in his own defense tended to show that the fortress at the outbreak of the war was nearly defenseless, without supplies or cash.

JAPAN TO OPPOSE GERMANY?

Tsing-Tau Papers Say She Means to Push Trade in Shan-Tung.

TSING-TAU, May 21.—The newspapers say that Japan will establish a consulate at the Shan-Tung treaty port of Wei-Hsien and push Japanese trade in the Province of Shan-Tung.

Wei-Hsien is the most important city in Shan-Tung. It is situated on both banks of the Pei-Lang River, which empties into the Gulf of Pe-chi-Li, twenty-five miles northward.

Germany has been accused of desiring to obtain a monopoly of the trade of Shan-Tung, which province is about the size of England and Wales together. Attached to the convention by which Germany obtained a lease of Kiao-Chow, Shan-Tung in 1898, were certain additional articles, which were not disclosed at the time, but which, it has been asserted, amounted practically to the negation of the "open door" and to German absolutism over the province.

KILLED BY BRIDLE BIT.

Odd Accident in Argument in Stable Leads to Boy's Death.

Because of a blow on the head, which he had received from a horse's bit a week ago, Thomas Kennedy, fifteen years old, of 866 Atlantic Avenue, Brooklyn, died in the Seney Hospital last night.

When the accident happened Kennedy was engaged in an argument with Leonard Barker, twenty years old, of 678 Pacific Street. Barker was unharnessing a horse and had the bridle in his hand.

Some movement of his caused the bridle to fly up and strike Kennedy in the back of the head, inflicting a deep wound. It was said by the physicians at the Seney Hospital last night that poison from the bit had infected the spine, causing paralysis, and finally death. Barker, at the time of the accident, was [illegible] and afterward liberated on bail, [illegible] after Kennedy's death, he

AMERICAN WATERS WHERE RUSSIANS MAY COAL

Hai-Nan Island, where part of Rojestvensky's fleet is reported to be, is the large island south of China shown in the above map. It is Chinese territory, and the Peking authorities are said to have taken what precautions are possible to secure the observance of neutrality.

Balintang, or Balington, Channel is due east of Hai-Nan, and is one of the two channels available for navigators between the Philippines and Formosa.

It is understood that Togo has a line of scouts south of Formosa, so that whichever way Rojestvensky goes the Japanese will be able to intercept him. Should the Russians succeed in entering the Pacific they can make for Vladivostok by way of Korea Strait, or by making a detour round the Japanese islands, and attempting the passage of one of the Japanese straits.

POLICE CLUBHOUSE FURNISHED BY THEFT

Luxury Under the Boardwalk at Atlantic City.

STOLE EVEN ELECTRICITY

It Furnished the Light for Bluecoats' Den—Hotel Robbed for Liquor—Four Patrolmen Suspended.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, May 21.—The discovery of a room beneath the Board Walk, furnished with costly wares looted from the Hotel Raleigh, the suspension of four policemen, and an investigation has caused much talk here. On the floor of the room were two rugs worth $1,000 each, while a stock of wines, liquors, and cigars was found estimated to be worth many hundred dollars. It is estimated that the loss to the hotel in liquid refreshments in the year in which the robberies have been going on has amounted to $2,000.

The four men who have been suspended are Patrolmen Omsetter, Barnshaw, Maxwell, and Braidwood, who constituted the night relief on the beat in which the Raleigh is located. Although there is no charge that they had anything to do with the stealing, they will be put on trial for dereliction of duty in not catching the thieves and for spending their time in the room in secret.

The room had all the comforts of a club, with running water and electric lights. Some one had tapped the water pipe and the electric light wires running into Dentzell's merry-go-round at States Avenue and run the light and water into the room.

Superintendent Allen of the Water Department and Superintendent Beyer of the electric plant, as well as the city electrician, have said that they never gave any permits for the connection. Dentzell paid the bills for the light and water consumed.

The manager of the Raleigh café and the barkeeper knew for a long time that thefts were going on, but could not trace them, though many traps were set. Sand was placed on window sills and at doors; cigar ashes were put in the window catches, and guards were set on the café, but without result. The thieves were too wary. The suspended officers had been taken into the confidence of the hotel employes who were trying to catch the pilferers. As the watches were ended, however, the robberies were resumed.

AGAINST THREE TRACKS.

Menace to Homes Under Elevated, Consumers' League Says.

The National Consumers' League, through its Executive Secretary, Mrs. Florence Kelley, has sent a letter to Alexander E. Orr, President of the Rapid Transit Commission, protesting against the proposal of the Interborough Rapid Transit Company to put a third track upon the Second and Third Avenue elevated lines.

The protest of the League is on the ground that any increase in the number of tracks on these lines will only add to the din and darkness already inflicted upon the many thousands of workingmen engaged in the manufacture of clothing, as well as those in many other industries, whose homes adjoin the elevated structures.

The noise of trains constitutes already a serious drawback to the health and comfort of these people, the letter adds, and the addition of another track will render the living quarters below the elevated structures as dark as the lower floors of the houses in Allen Street.

Air Tank on Trolley Explodes.

The compressed air tank operating the brakes of a turnpike trolley car exploded yesterday morning as the car was passing Police Headquarters in Jersey City. The roar was heard for several blocks. HURLED UNDER CAR IN FIGHT NEAR BRIDGE

Man Dying, Fearfully Injured, in the Hospital.

FLEET ASSAILANT ESCAPES

Motorman Thought It Friendly Wrestling, and Couldn't Stop In Time to Save the Victim.

Two men were struggling beside the car tracks on the Williamsburg Plaza last night when a Broadway car for East New York came along. Just as the car was abreast of them one of the men was thrown, or fell, beneath the wheels, sustaining mortal injuries. The other man took to his heels.

The car was crowded. Many of the passengers had seen the struggle, and they jumped out and started after the fugitive. The number of the pursuers was constantly augmented by men and boys from the street as the chase proceeded. But the pursued was fleet of foot, and, gaining at every jump, sped up South Fifth Street and into Marcy Avenue. There he had such a lead that he succeeded in losing himself.

It required hard work to get the injured man out from under the car. Before the task was complete the police arrived and an ambulance had been sent for. The man was unconscious when finally rescued.

At the Williamsburg Hospital it was found that his right arm, left leg, and five ribs were broken and his skull fractured. The surgeon who dressed his injuries said that he had no chance for recovery. The chances were, the surgeon prophecied, that the man would die before morning.

There was nothing about the dying man to tell his identity. He is about 5 feet 7 inches tall, weighs 145 pounds, is of dark complexion, and has blue eyes. He wore a new suit of dark clothes, and about $20 was found in his possession.

George Miller, the motorman of the car which ran over the unknown, was arrested, charged with criminal carelessness. He protested, saying that there was no way in which he could have stopped the car before the man was beneath its wheels.

"I don't know whether it was murder or accident," Miller told the police. "I was not running very fast, and some little time before I reached the spot I saw the two men were wrestling. They were not very close to the track, and, taking it for granted that it was merely a playful scuffle, I did not stop.

"Just as the car was upon them the struggle grew fiercer, and the poor fellow who is dying in the hospital whirled right under the front platform. It seemed to me that he had been thrown there by his opponent, but he may have slipped or fallen.

"At any rate, the other fellow did not act as if it was a friendly affair, for he began to run just as soon as he was free. If it had been just a scuffle and an accident, it seems to me that he would have waited to find out whether his companion was hurt."

The Williamsburg police, while admitting the probability of the murder theory, thought it best to hold Miller, at the same time redoubling their efforts to capture the fugitive. Just before midnight a general alarm was sent out for him.

Baby Found Almost Suffocated.

A child, which a physician said was only a few hours old, was found in Warren Street, Jersey City, last night. Its mouth was covered with a linen bandage, which was also wrapped around its neck, as if to suffocate it. Peter Mackin, who found it, at once cut the bandage, and the child was sent to the City Hospital. It was almost suffocated, but will live.

BLUE IN SECRET HONOR THE CONFEDERATE DEAD

For Two Years They Placed Wreath on Mt. Hope Monument.

ABASHED WHEN CAUGHT AT IT

Southern Women Return the Compliment by Banking High with Flowers Graves of Union Dead.

Memorial services were held yesterday in Mount Hope Cemetery ostensibly over the Confederate dead. In reality the services were for the departed of both sides, for those who went to Mount Hope yesterday left behind all sectional feeling. And something that affected the participants most was not down on the programme. It was the unraveling of a little mystery of two years' standing.

For two years the tall granite shaft erected by the late Charles Broadway Rouss on the plot where the men who fought on the Confederate side are buried has been decorated each year by a wreath. The Daughters of the Confederacy who have taken it upon themselves to keep the graves of the Confederate soldiers decorated have wondered where the wreath came from. Yesterday the truth came out.

There are two Union graves in the cemetery. Each year Lafayette Post and Alexander Hamilton Post of the Grand Army of the Republic have gone to the cemetery to decorate these two graves, and they never forget that the Confederates there had done their duty, too, and placed a wreath against the shaft over their graves. They were caught at it yesterday, that was all.

Although, as has been said, the services yesterday were nominally intended in honor of the Confederate dead, the graves of the two Union soldiers had the highest heap of flowers on them in the end, and they were put there by Southern women, too.

Mrs. L. H. Matthez, a Southern woman, saw a Confederate veteran with a monster box of flowers. She stopped him.

"Were you looking for a place to put those flowers?" she asked.

"No—yes," he stammered, "that is to say, I am looking for one of the graves up here." He pointed to the Confederate plot.

"Oh," said Mrs. Matthez, a little disappointed, "we want a few more flowers to put on a Union soldier's grave over there."

This was the tenor of the entire service. At least 500 men and women, comprising members of the Confederate Veteran Camp, the Daughters of the Confederacy, and representatives from McKinley Post, Lafayette Post, Alexander Hamilton, and other Grand Army Posts, attended. Fully 300 of the party were Southern women.

The orator of the day was Gen. George B. Loud of W. S. Hancock Post, G. A. R. Gen. Blackburn, a Confederate Veteran, is to perform the same service at the tomb of Gen. Grant on Decoration Day.

Gen. Loud emphasized the fact that the day had come when a Union soldier as well as a Confederate could realize that the soldiers of both sides had fought for the principles they believed to be right. It didn't matter whether a Southern or a Northern boy fell in the performance of his duty—it was "our boy" who fell.

The musical programme consisted of the singing of two verses of "America," and a duet, "Face to Face," by the Misses Camille Coffee and Hattie Kasey Clay.

A short address was made by J. E. Graybill of the Confederate Veteran Camp, who said, among other things, that he hoped the day was not far distant when there would be but one Memorial Day, both for the blue and the gray.

After taps the veterans left for the train, which was waiting at the Mount Hope Station, the women lingering behind to complete the decoration of the graves.

BIG ROBBERY SPOILED.

Dealer Found Some Goods Gone, but Many More Packed Up.

When four young men, who said they were Morris Hoffman, Timothy J. Cronin, Max Klein, and Michael Morris, were arraigned yesterday before Magistrate Whitman in the Essex Market Court there was disclosed a story of a burglary in which the thieves had planned to carry away about $5,000 worth of ostrich feathers and other goods from the establishment of David Litchenstein, at 54 West Fourth Street. The thieves without being detected, however, succeeded in stealing feathers worth $250. When they appeared in court David Goldman of 143 Stanton Street was also arraigned with them as a receiver of stolen goods.

The thieves broke into Litchenstein's place early Saturday morning, and, after selecting what feathers they could conveniently carry without arousing suspicion, they packed up other goods to cart away in a wagon during the night. Litchenstein closed up on Saturday, but thought that he would go to the building and see if everything was all right. He then discovered the robbery and reported it to the police of the Eldridge Street Station, and Detectives Galligan and Hart were detailed to look for the thieves. After a few hours they saw four men on Stanton Street near Norfolk, who, when they noticed the detectives, went into a basement at the corner. The detectives followed. When the men learned who their pursuers were two of the men threatened the lives of the policemen, and had to be clubbed into subcission.

When taken to the Eldridge Street Station, Cronin, it is said, made a confession to Capt. Murtha, implicating his companions and Goldman, who, he declared, bought the stolen gods from them. Hoffman, he said, was the leader of the gang and carried the "jimmy" that was used in breaking into Litchenstein's place. They had planned to go to the establishment shortly before midnight and take all the goods they could get away in a wagon. Magistrate Whitman held the four men in $1,500 bail each for examination to-morrow morning. Goldman was also held in the same amount.

DURHAM AND GAS RING THINK WEAVER WEAKENS

Philadelphia Mayor's Secretary Visits the Leader.

ATLANTIC CITY'S SURPRISE

"Stand Pat" the Order Given to City Councils in Regard to Procedure After Veto.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, May 21.—"Is Mayor Weaver weakening in his fight against the organization?" was the query ward leaders and Councilmen put to each other to-day, after they learned that Robert Grier, Mayor Weaver's private secretary, and Insurance Commissioner Durham had held a conference this morning.

The politicians came here to-day for instructions, but when they learned that the Mayor's secretary had visited Durham they concluded that amicable relations between the Mayor and the organization leader had not been severed, and planned to press on their gas lease scheme.

Grier arrived on a morning train, saying that he came to join his family. Twenty minutes later he and Durham were alone together. Politicians who were with the Insurance Commissioner left him, and for fifteen minutes Grier remained. Neither Durham nor Grier would reveal the subject of their conference.

A ward leader said:

"Grier knows that Durham lost confidence in him more than a year ago. No, Grier came here with a message from the Mayor. He would have no standing otherwise."

"Stand pat," was Durham's order to the ward leaders and Councilmen who came to him for orders in the event of Mayor Weaver using his power to have his veto sustained in the City Councils.

"Pay no attention to the Mayor; he'll come around," he is quoted as saying to one of his callers.

The visit of Grier was the absorbing topic with the politicians.

The suggestion was ridiculed that Grier came to see Durham in his own behalf to excuse himself for reporting to Mayor Weaver the presence of Noll and other ward leaders and of the insurance inspectors in the Common Council chambers last week.

Annual Spring Sale of Exchanged

ORCHESTRELLES

and AEOLIANS

At Lower Prices Than Ever Before Offered

SINCE the introduction of the new "Orchestrated Music" for the Orchestrelle a few months ago popular interest in this instrument has tremendously increased. It is not too much to say that this system of marked music more than doubles the pleasure which the Orchestrelle brings into the home.

As a result of this important innovation, many Orchestrelle owners have exchanged their instruments for more expensive styles, thus placing in our hands a large number of Orchestrelles which have been used more or less. These exchanged instruments will be placed on Special Sale during the week beginning May 23 at the very substantial reductions indicated by the following list.

Nothing could speak more eloquently of the thorough satisfaction to be derived from the Orchestrelle than the many owners who decide after actual trial in the home to increase the amount of their investment in the instrument.

		Regular Price.	Special Price.
ORCHESTRELLES,	STYLE W	$1,800	$1,350
"	STYLE V	1,500	1,000
"	STYLE C	1,500	1,000
"	STYLE S	1,100	800
"	STYLE M	950	750
"	STYLE O	600	450
"	STYLE R	450	350
ORCHESTRELLES,	STYLE P	$200	$150
AEOLIANS,	EMPIRE GRAND	850	375
"	GRAND	750	300
"	CHIPPENDALE	600	250
"	STYLE "A"	400	175
"	STYLE "1500"	500	100

Every instrument in this sale has been put in perfect order, and is sold subject to the full guarantee of the manufacturers.

Immediate possession will be given upon a moderate down payment and subsequent monthly installments.

What the Orchestrelle Is:

The Orchestrelle is a "Home Orchestra." Any one can play it by means of perforated music rolls. In size it is a little larger than an upright piano. It closely simulates the various voices of the modern symphony orchestra: Horns, Brasses, Strings, Flutes, etc.

The player controls the different tones by means of simple draw stops, having control over the instrument similar to that of a conductor over an orchestra.

Thus the great overtures, symphonies, sonatas, fugues and chamber music can be played and enjoyed in the home with all their wealth and beauty of tone-coloring.

Where the piano gives but an adaptation or reminiscence of such a masterpiece as Wagner's "Parsifal," the Orchestrelle brings it to any home in its wonderful variety of tonal effects, with its orchestral character and grandeur.

A list of Orchestrelle and Aeolian purchasers would include many of the most distinguished names in every field of human endeavor at home and abroad. Emperor William has one on his yacht the Hohenzollern and the Czar of Russia has one in his Winter Palace. The Orchestrelle has been made the subject of unstinted praise by the foremost musicians of the day. The great French composer, Massenet, writes: "To give to a musical work an absolute and exact interpretation; to make clear the composer's most intimate thoughts; to bring into play a wealth of execution which only the orchestra can give—in a word, to translate all the shades of coloring intended by the composer—this is the achievement of the Orchestrelle."

TO PERSONS fond of the best class of music or who are desirous of cultivating their taste for it, this special sale is an event of utmost importance. The prices named above are the lowest that have been named for these instruments.

Summer waist purchase—to-day 95c.

THE manufacturers in closing out their surplus stocks have sold us hundreds of Summer waists that under any other conditions would cost you double the extraordinary bargain prices at which they are here to-day for your selection. You need not hesitate to purchase for the entire Summer in the fear that prices will be lower on these splendid qualities—they are very unusual, and to miss this sale is to pay a much higher price for waists just like them. Second Floor.

They're bargains that will be immediately snapped up when the trimmings are noticed—lace and embroidery, fine tucks and new designs are used with bewitchingly good taste as in waists costing twice as much.

95c. for fine lawn waists—front of waist trimmed with 95c embroidery, lace forming yoke, clusters of tucks—new sleeve.

1.00 for lawn waists—entire front trimmed with fine embroidery, clusters of tucks between—tucked back—new deep cuff.

1.95 for fine sheer lawn waists—solid embroidery yoke, edged with lace insertion around yoke—lace trimmed collar and cuffs.

2.98 for fine dotted Swiss waists—trimmed with fine embroidery down centre of front—collar and cuffs trimmed with embroidery.

$7.95 for $15.00 all over net or chiffon taffeta silk waists—extra quality—designed with yokes and others trimmed with lace and medallions—seven beautiful models.

$3.95 for $6.00 chiffon taffeta or mousseline taffeta silk waists—beautifully trimmed with tucks—lace or side plaits—all desirable shades. Others at $10—$15—$18.95.

59c. for 95c. Japanese kimonos—beautiful designs.

75c. for kimono sacques of figured lawns, bell sleeves.

$2.95 for negligees made of dotted Swiss—with small dot.

May sale of muslin underwear to-day

THE only sale that offers soft, cool, immaculate garments at 19c.—generously and especially adapted for Summer wear. Sale of Summer shirts to-day at 65c

MEN are waiting for just such an opportunity to purchase their Summer supply of shirts. Thousands are ready to make their selection, waiting only for the right value to come along and to convince them beyond any doubt that this IS THE RIGHT VALUE—to-day we make the plain, straightforward announcement.

12,000 $1 and $1.50 negligee shirts at 65c

This sale is based on the unprecedented success of our Summer sale just a year ago, when negligee shirts were sold at 68c each. To-day the price is lower because of added buying advantages; the qualities are better, and there's a greater variety of small effects for well dressed men than any store in New York has ever shown. 65c

Continuous cool weather has forced the manufacturers to make extraordinary price concessions in order to dispose of their mammoth surplus and sample stocks. Now, when you feel the heat of Summer, the opportunity is yours to make yourself cool, comfortable and smartly dressed at half or less than half what you'd pay under any other conditions. Main Floor.

These are all new Summer shirts of the very highest grade, made to sell at $1 and $1.50—perfect in every detail—hundreds of correct patterns, dressy, conservative, elaborate—plaited and plain shirts in white, light and dark colorings—woven and printed materials—detached cuffs—full size bodies—guaranteed custom made fitting—latest styles—hand laundered, cool, light, airy materials, yet firm and strong—the best wearing shirts ever made—sale to-day at 65c.

Men's $2 underwear, 95c.—75c. underwear, 50c

THE 75c. underwear at 50c. is a splendid quality—good as ever put into the 75c underwear, but we advise you to purchase the $2 underwear at 95c. and make your selection from

$50 tailor made suits, clearing price, $25

HERE'S where we take you by surprise—practically every $50 suit on our great third floor, women's or misses', is included in this unprecedented sale, and they're suits you want to wear all Summer.

A mammoth clearing that will appeal to everybody and make the value at Simpson Crawford Co.'s to-day stand out boldly, unparalleled in the annals of merchandising.

Our sales have been so phenomenal that we have determined with one sweep to clear out every $50, $55 or $60 suit on the floor, and $25 will do it quickly. Once for all we will rid ourselves of every garment bought for Spring selling. Third Floor.

These suits are to wear all Summer. Voile is the smartest fabric of the season, but other fabrics are included, though, we are glad to say, it predominates. All sizes are included—three distinct models, in light and dark shades, reseda, Alice blue, navy, champagne and black. Coats are lined with taffeta, skirts are made over silk drop—beautifully tailored. $25.00

$25 for $50 suits for misses and small women—14, 16 or 18 years, or sizes 32, 34 or 36—a number of high class exclusive models, including those that served as show pieces—snappy new styles of the fashionable materials—one or two of a kind in many instances.

$16.50 for new outing suits in a very light shade of fine all wool homespun—long semi-fitted cutaway style—yoke and sleeves lined with white taffeta—seams tailored, with detachable collar and cuffs of white pique—skirt new 21 gore plaited model.

$13.75 for suits of light weight and light mixtures—medium length jacket—tight fitting—fly front—full plaited sleeves into turn back cuffs—coat collarless, trimmed with white linen and silk soutache braid—skirt new plaited model.

$18.75 for a variety of new $25 and $27.50 silk and wool models in demi effects or little street suits, with butterfly jackets and full skirts—also the suspender or bretelle models in all the new Summer shades—green, blue, checks, plain and changeable silks. $18.75

$15.00 for the new linen coat suits—for people leaving the city early or those who want an early selection—two special models—heavy quality linen in blue, green, oyster or natural linen shades—made long, loose box coat style of Redingote model—full plaited skirt.

$10.00 for dainty little pony jacket or "Frocks and Frills" suits—of fine quality linen in the regulation blue or all white—coat and skirt both plaited—loose plaited sleeves—detachable belts.

$14.50 for $27.50 junior and intermediate suits of serges and Panamas, in blue, black or brown, also coverts and fancy mixtures in light or dark shades—satin or taffeta lined.

$9.75 for misses' $19.75 and junior suits in beautiful light fancy mixtures—small shepherd checks and covert cloth—made with short coat or semi-fitted—also a very smart blouse style.

A Spring Trade Chorus: WANAMAKER'S

Various, important, interesting and profitable to our Public are the statements about the store, the goods, the prices, printed in the news of today. Note carefully the classification of special offerings.

First. The store at large presents numerous items, including several very important and attractive bargains.

Second. The Under-Price Store, in which every offering advertised is a very special bargain, of the sorts that are exceptional and peculiar to this business.

MAY 1905

The Store at Large

The metaphor of the double team—stale, perhaps trite—fits. Regular merchandise and regular bargains. The coming and going seasons are reflected with the certainty of natural process in our merchandise for the person—man, woman, child—and the home—town house, apartment, Summer cottage. Standard staples and passing novelties fill the house with our globe-trotters' trophies in merchandise. But remember that all the stocks are emphasized with the price-advantage that comes from contact of consumer and producer through the Wanamaker magnetism.

Hence the Basement does not hold all the bargains.

Seven Hundred SILK DRESSES

Facts, Exact and Extraordinary

They are all new—made within two weeks.

It came about thus: A great costume manufacturer, of international fame, had too many dress silks—very much too many. Not being a silk merchant he couldn't sell them. May has been cool—Spring backward. Dresses at our prices—your prices—solved his case. They're on sale today. That's all the argument. You, our great Dress and Cloak constituency, gave us the power. The price-victory is with the seven hundred that will take them.

At the head of this "news" is a picture that was composed from the actual dresses. They are made from recent Paris models exclusively, by silk dress tailors. Details are pretty and perfect; a limited number are in the Tyrolese Bretelle styles.

The materials are varied—stripes, checks, dots, fancy shots, iridescent colors. You'd pay more for making alone, or material alone. The price for the choice is

$10.75

Intelligent women need no more information upon this topic.

Second floor, Broadway.

Men's UNDERWEAR And HALF-HOSE

Good, well-made, seasonable, attractive sorts, quite inexpensive in price:

Men's Underwear

At 25c each—Ecru cotton open-mesh Shirts; white gauze cotton Shirts; ecru cotton Shirts or Drawers; white ribbed cotton Shirts.

White jean Drawers with string ties.

At 37½c each—Ecru cotton Shirts or Drawers, light weight, fine gage.

At 50c each—White ribbed lisle thread Shirts or Drawers; white English gauze cotton Shirts; American-made white gauze cotton Drawers, with double seats; French balbriggan Shirts or Drawers.

At $1 each—English lisle thread and gauze cotton Shirts or Drawers; German open-mesh cotton Shirts or Drawers; French merino or white gauze lisle thread Shirts or Drawers.

Ninth street.

Men's Half-Hose

At 12½c a pair—Of fast black cotton or tan cotton; fine gage, light-weight.

Basement.

At 18c a pair—Plain black cotton; with unbleached feet or split soles; others striped; also of imported fast black cotton, with embroidered fronts or side-clocks. Tan lisle thread, striped. Navy or cadet blue or tan cotton, with white polka-dots.

At 25c a pair—Of imported black lisle thread, plain, or with lace clocks or allover openwork. Black cotton, with white or colored embroidered fronts; all-black, or black with unbleached feet.

At 37½c a pair—Of German lisle thread, cadet blue or tan, with embroidered fronts; tan, openwork with side-clocks; navy blue, with white figures all over; tan, gray or blue, in changeable effects. Ninth street.

SILK PETTICOATS

At $6.75, worth $8 to $9

Exceedingly fine taffeta, brilliant, rustling, and strong, in rich and radiant colors. Light or dark shades, changeable combinations and black.

Broad and full with just the correct flare. In two strikingly handsome styles. Both with deep graduated accordion-plaited flounce, with full ruche, silk foundation and dust ruffle.

$6.75, Worth $8 to $9

An exceptional offering.

Rotunda Balcony.

The UNDER-PRICE STORE, Basement

Some expansion of our Basement space is possible by the approaching completion of our new South Building. Hence we are enabled to reconstruct our UNDER-PRICE STORE upon the lines that existed before building operations compelled contraction of salesrooms. The great audience that formerly filled our Basement will now and in the future find a larger number and greater variety of attractions than ever before. Today's offerings will give the keynote of present and prospective interest. They are logical. The vast trade of our expanding nation creates exceptional incidents. It is our specialty to find and to use them.

Woolen Walking Skirts Three Dollars

Four hundred.

Cheviots and cassimeres of this season's late tweed and homespun styles.

Formed upon the latest models.

Just a little arithmetic will show to even slow-going minds the price-advantage of this peculiar offering. You cannot make a skirt with less than 3½ yards of 54-inch cloth. The lowest cloths in this lot are worth 75 cents a yard.

3½ yards Fancy Cheviot, 75c.....$2.63

Making and Trimming.....$3.00

Total.....$5.63

Many are worth much more—some $9. They were marked $4 for a bargain in the regular store, but just to emphasize the day they go to the Under-Price Store at

Three Dollars

They will not linger. Basement.

Fifty Cents Each Trophies in Men's Fancy Shirts

Only 1740 Shirts in this offering. Therefore, the filling of mail orders is very doubtful.

1140 shirts of this lot bear a well-known trade-mark. They have retailed in this market at $1 and $1.50. Patterns of material are varied, numerous, elegant and not a poor style in the lot.

Six hundred shirts of this lot bear our own trade mark, and are the best we have ever produced to sell directly at fifty cents.

Sizes 14 to 17-inch neck.

All plain negligee, with one pair of separate cuffs to each shirt. Basement.

Wool Dress Goods

Each of the following merits the careful consideration of dressmakers and women buying for personal use.

Thirty Cents. All-wool Crepe Voile. Kinky wool yarns create a weave effect that gives an elegant crepe style. Very serviceable. Five shades of blues. Lot small, which may account for the half price. Our last previous bargain price was 37½c. 45 in. wide.

Thirty-five Cents. All-wool Panama Voile. You could not order 100,000 yards of the maker at our retail price today. That's the whole story. Colors: Cream, light blue, heliotrope, tan, reseda, light gray, cadet blue, cardinal, black, navy blue, green. 36 in. wide.

Thirty-eight Cents. Shepherd's Plaid Suitings, wool-mixed. Very popular. Clear black, brown, or blue and pure white. Texture perfect for tailored suits. Market price, 50c. Our last bargain price, 45c. 35 in. wide.

Fifty Cents. All-wool Batiste. 75-cent quality. The great demand for this choice fabric indicates a quick exodus. The lot is small—only four thousand yards. Twenty-eight choice colorings. 38 in wide.

Fifty-five Cents. All-wool Black French Voile. At the price, the great name of the maker is confidential. A small lot and one owner impatient for Europe made the chance for this offering. Basement.

The foregoing are incidents of today's conditions in what we regard as the greatest stock in this country of domestic and foreign dress goods.

Cheap Cotton Dress Goods

Six cents a yard for Ginghams normally sold at Ten cents. We had one million yards. Have offered them before, and are now closing a very small balance—not over 50,000 yards. If interested, be quick.

Eight cents a yard for Chambray Ginghams worth 12½c. Colors—blue, gray, champagne, tan. Widths vary, some 28-in., others 32-in. Stocks are low, and chances at this price are vanishing.

Twelve-and-one-half-cents for Printed Lawns, forty inches wide. Ought to be 18 cents—worth it, too. Beautiful Dresden designs, and many other attractive figures. Only 7,500 yards now in store. Value not expressed in price. Basement.

A Sale For All Who Need Good SHOES

A Sale that puts no price-penalty on good looks and honest shoemaking. Most of the shoes have been specially made up for us, when regular orders fell off in the factories. We had picked the leathers and styles, and accepted deliveries at the convenience of the manufacturers. They were glad to make big concessions—though the shoes are spic-span-new, and size ranges complete.

Other groups are composed of odd lots of shoes that have accumulated in our own stocks, and are now marked at half price. Then there are certain lots that were purchased from manufacturers at much below regular prices. All are sold with the WANAMAKER guarantee of good service. Quantities are large as the selling starts; but those who come early will have many advantages, of course. The items follow:

Men's Low Shoes

At $1.20 a Pair

Kid and calf Oxfords; welted soles, medium toes. $2.50 quality—a great chance.

At $1.90 a Pair

Equal to most $3 shoes—better than any $2.50 grade we can find.

Patent colt Blucher Oxfords, pointed toes; tan Russia leather Blucher Oxfords, welted soles; velour calfskin Oxfords, smooth and fine; black kid Blucher Oxfords, full toes with tips.

At $2.40 a Pair

Some small lots of Men's Oxfords, that sold at $3, $3.90 and $5 a pair. Sizes are not complete.

At $1 a Pair

White canvas Oxfords, with heavy rubber soles, sewed on. Shapely, durable and correct shoes for boating and seashore. All sizes, 6 to 10.

Children's Shoes

At $1.40 a pair—This for girls' sizes 11 to 2. Patent leather, vamp cloth top Button Shoes. All sizes in this lot—8½ to 10½. $1.20, worth $1.50; 11 to 2, $1.40, worth $2; 2½ to 4, $1.80, worth $2.50.

Fourth avenue.

Women's Low Shoes

At $1 a Pair

Worth $2 and $2.50; but sizes are broken—mostly small. Splendid value if your size is here.

At $1.20 a Pair

PERSIAN UNDER ARREST

His Brother and a Lawyer Also Taken in Kidnapping Case.

GIRL'S MEMORY IS HAZY

Says Colia Brought Her to New York, Then Back to Yonkers—Police Find Her There.

Special to The New York Times.

YONKERS, May 21.—Alice Wheelock, the fourteen-year-old daughter of Martin Wheelock, a merchant of this city, living at 85 Hawthorne Avenue, who has been missing from her home since Friday, was found in an apartment on the top floor of a flathouse at 182 Riverdale Avenue this afternoon. Malcolm Colia of 22 North Broadway is under arrest, charged with kidnapping her while his brother John and Baird C. Beatty, a New York lawyer, whose office is at 346 Broadway, are also in custody as accessories. The girl is in a serious condition as a result of shock and hunger.

The arrests of the Colias and Beatty were made this afternoon, some hours after Malcolm Colia and the girl arrived from New York, whither the man, who is a Persian, took her Friday night. According to the girl's story, she remembers very little that transpired in the two days she was away from home. She says she does not even know where it was that Colia took her in New York. She thinks it was somewhere near Sixth Avenue in the Forties. Dr. Baurberg, who was called in by Mr. Wheelock, said tonight that he did not believe the girl had been drugged.

Miss Wheelock, who, despite her years, is the soprano of the Dutch Reformed Church of this city, met Colia about two months ago. He is a member of St. Andrew's Protestant Episcopal Church, and since he was introduced to the girl it is said he followed her at every opportunity.

Friday night the Persian saw the girl in front of her father's house. They went to the rectory of St. Andrew's Church, but the Rev. James A. Freeman, the rector, refused to marry them. It was through the rector that Mr. Wheelock learned of his daughter's disappearance. The father notified the police, who, in turn, asked the assistance of the New York police.

The couple, after leaving the rectory, left for New York. Miss Wheelock declares that she has only a very dim recollection of what happened there. She says that they went to a house and that she went into the living room and sat in a chair all day and all night Saturday. Sunday morning, she said, Colia came for her and took her back to Yonkers. She got off of the train at Parkville and went to the flat of a family named Domaz on Riverdale Avenue, where it was that she met Lawyer Beatty.

"Lawyer Beatty," said Miss Wheelock, "came to me and said that I had to marry Colia. I told him that I would not, and then he told me that he was going to my father and make a proposition to him. The proposition was that if father would consent to my marrying Colia he would agree to tell him where Colia and I were. If he refused his consent, he said that he would tell him that Colia would sail for Persia with me this week. I didn't eat a mouthful all the time I was away."

It was while he was at the Wheelock house that the lawyer was arrested on a warrant issued by Judge Kellogg. The Colias are locked up, and Beatty is out on bail. The case will come up for a hearing to-morrow morning.

LAWSON DRAWS ON WALL ST.

Sight Draft for One Panic—To Draw on Public Later for All Kinds of Panic.

This is Lawson Panic Day, or to-morrow, at the latest, will be, if postponement is found to be necessary—so Thomas W. Lawson again announces in an advertisement sent to the newspapers last night. He adds:

"My next move will be to organize the entire country for the day when a public call will be made to withdraw deposits from banks and trust companies, when there will be such a crash in Wall Street as will completely and forever wipe the 'System' out of existence and return to the people the control of their own—in what manner I shall tell later, when the people are better able to understand.

"No man in all our country would hesitate longer than I before taking a chance of destroying our people's present lines of life or causing them unhappiness, but so familiar am I with the subject and so sure of the ultimate outcome, so positive that if the present conditions are allowed to remain and intensify that within a few years our people will be absolutely enslaved or our country the scene of the bloodiest revolution the world has ever witnessed, that to prevent such disastrous consequences I do not hesitate to assume the responsibility."

KNOX TO QUIT PITTSBURG.

Senator Leases His Home in That City for Three Years.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, May 21.—Some little feeling was shown here to-day when it was announced that United States Senator Knox had rented his Pittsburg home for three years to the President of the Carnegie Steel Company, and would hereafter spend his Summers at Valley Forge, near Philadelphia, and his Winters in Washington.

There is no concealment of the fact that the political leaders of Western Pennsylvania and Senator Knox are not in harmony. Only a few weeks ago Knox refused to accept the Chairmanship of the Allegheny County delegation at the Republican Convention, nor did he attend the convention.

NOT STRANGLED.

Woman with a Towel Twisted Around Her Neck Died of Disease.

All suspicious circumstances surrounding the death of the woman, variously known as Mrs. Lawrence Harnett and Myra O. Nevell, who was found dead in her room at 205 East Fifteenth Street last Saturday with a towel twisted around her neck, were completely disposed of by the autopsy made on the body yesterday by Coroners' Physician Schultz. Death was due to nephritis, superinduced by alcoholism, but the autopsy showed that the woman was suffering from half a dozen different diseases, so that it seemed a wonder death had not come to her earlier.

The towel about the woman's neck and the peculiar position of her arm when she was discovered were also explained satisfactorily. The towel had been wound about her head, apparently to allay the pangs of a headache. In her death struggle it has been pushed down until it rested about her neck.

Nothing further was learned yesterday by the police about the present whereabouts of the woman's husband or the identity of the man said to have been visiting her recently, nor do the police care to investigate either matter further.

One a Minute Arrested on Trains Early This Morning.

One prisoner a minute was the record of arrests for twenty-one minutes after 1 o'clock this morning on the cars leaving Coney Island. The prisoners were still being brought into the station house at almost the same rate at 1:30 A. M. Notwithstanding the warning of the traction people to rowdies that they would employ a large force of detectives to stop the rioting on the cars leaving the island at late hours, the toughs began their usual work with the late trains leaving this morning. Women and children were jostled and insulted and their escorts assaulted.

Here and there in each car well-dressed young men of athletic build jumped from their seats and sailed into the disturbers, the trains being backed into the stations, where the rowdies were arrested.

There were hand-to-hand fights between the detectives and the toughs, but the latter soon realized that the company had employed their betters at the game of give and take. Most of those arrested pleaded innocence and asserted that they had been assaulted.

Four Boys Held for Train Rowdyism.

Four boys were arrested last night for causing a disturbance on a Third Avenue elevated train in the Bronx. The police said the boys sang, talked loudly, and pulled the emergency brakes, bringing the train to a sudden stop. Detectives Price and Bruckridge boarded the train at One Hundred and Thirty-eighth Street and arrested the boys. They said they were Jacob Goldman of 366 Cherry Street, Jacob Seizel of 29 Second Avenue, Jacob Gotthauf of 34 First Street, and August Focher of 103 Second Avenue. Gotthauf is sixteen years old, and each of the others eighteen.

ROBBED OLD SHIPMATE.

Bowery Panhandler Was Found Wearing Two Suits of Clothes.

Formerly a sailor in "Uncle Sam's" navy, but after being twice dishonorably discharged from the service becoming a "panhandler" on the Bowery, James R. Quigley, known on that thoroughfare as "Mike" O'Donohue," yesterday was charged in the Tombs Court with robbing a former shipmate of his money and all his clothing. The shipmate was unable to appear on account of the circumstances.

It was Elmer Touhey, machinist's mate of the Tacoma, just in from a long cruise, who met the erstwhile sailor on the Bowery Saturday evening. Quigley, who used to be on the Alabama, was in a sailor's rig. He uses this rig in begging. The two recognized each other and went to a saloon at 100 Bowery.

Some time later in the night Quigley guided the genuine sailorman to a hotel at Grand Street and the Bowery, and the two took a room together. Touhey was in a mood to go to sleep at once and sleep soundly. Quigley evidently was not so sleepy.

An hour or so later the panhandler returned to the saloon at 100 Bowery. A bartender named Gallagher noticed him, and noticed also that he had on the new clothes of Touhey. Gallagher and two other bartenders asked him about the fact, and, making a rough and unceremonious investigation, discovered that the panhandler had the sailor's rig on over his own.

The men in the saloon took Touhey's things away from Quigley, who tried to put up a fight, but was overpowered. They then threw him out. Quigley went at once to the Elizabeth Street Station and complained of being robbed by Gallagher and his friends.

Two detectives went to the saloon and arrested Gallagher and two other bartenders. Quigley's complaint was his own undoing, for the three men told of his robbery of Touhey and convinced the police that they had taken the clothing to protect the real sailor. They gave it all up to the police.

Gallagher and the two bartenders were released and Quigley was arrested. When he was arraigned in the Tombs Court the detectives got Magistrate Finn to hold him in $2,000 bail till Tuesday, for the reason that Touhey's shoes and socks were missing and the sailorman refused to come to court barefooted.

STABBED BY BICYCLIST.

Rider Fought Girl's Father After Knocking the Child Down.

Louis Finetoris of 312 East Seventy-first Street was removed to the Harlem Hospital last night with a serious stab wound in the left side, which is alleged to have been inflicted by Frank Bebando of 230 East One Hundred and Eighth Street in front of the house at that address.

Finetoris, with his six-year-old daughter, Carmelina, was visiting friends there. The child was left outside to play, and Bebando, who was riding a bicycle, happened to run into her, knocking her down. The child screamed, and Bebando scolded her for getting in his way. Some one called the father of the child, and a fight ensued, during which, it is said, Bebando drew a knife and stabbed Finetoris. Then he ran away, leaving his bicycle in the street.

SAFE IN A WRECKED BUGGY.

All the Ginsberg Family in Peril When the Policeman Caught Up.

Samuel Ginsberg, a contractor of 142 Watkins Street; his wife, Gertrude, and their three children, Lizzie, eleven years old; Catherine, nine, and Benjamin, eight, had a narrow escape from being killed yesterday afternoon when a new horse which Ginsberg was driving was frightened by a red automobile.

The contractor was driving along Glenmore Avenue, bound for Queens, when the auto came along. The horse plunged and reared, then ran away, with the contractor tugging desperately at the reins and his wife and children screaming at the top of their voices. Just then Mounted Policeman McLaughlin of the Liberty Avenue Station discovered the runaway and gave chase.

When he overtook the horse the carriage was badly smashed and scarcely held together, but the whole Ginsburg family was still inside and intact.

The policeman rode in front of the frightened horse, seized the bridle, and brought him to his haunches in a jiffy. The crowd cheered. The shafts of the Ginsburg carriage lacerated the flank of the policeman's horse, but McLaughlin himself was not injured.

PAUL JONES FUNERAL SHIPS.

Hundreds View the Trio Now Anchored Off Tompkinsville.

Anchored off Tompkinsville are the three warships the most in the public mind at present—the Brooklyn, the Tacoma, and the Chattanooga, designated by the Navy Department to go to France to bring back to the land whose navy he founded the body of John Paul Jones.

When these three ships, all of the most modern type, clear Sandy Hook to begin the run across the Atlantic to bring home after a century's rest in foreign soil the body of the first hero of the American Navy, it will mark the beginning of a unique funeral.

The Brooklyn, which is to be the flagship of the John Paul Jones squadron, is with the possible exception of the cruiser Olympia, Dewey's flagship at Manila, the most appropriate vessel on the active list which could have been chosen for this service.

At Santiago she was the flagship of Rear Admiral Schley and was one of the ships in the line of Spanish fire when Cervera made his fatal dash for liberty. Later she was sent to the Far East, where she was Admiral Remey's flagship.

It was the Brooklyn that went to Australia when the Prince of Wales made his famous tour of the British possessions, and in recent months she has been the chief American sentinel along the coasts of the revolution-racked West Indian and South American Republics.

The officer whose pennant will fly from the mainhead will be Rear Admiral Charles D. Sigsbee, who as Captain commanded the battleship Maine when she was sunk in Havana Harbor. Of the other vessels the Tacoma and Chattanooga are comparatively new ships.

Yesterday hundreds of people who went to Staten Island to visit the resorts there took time to spend a few minutes along the sea wall of Fort George and admire the outlines of the trio. The Brooklyn was the greatest attraction. It is practically decided that it will be in one of her cabins that Paul Jones's coffin will be when his last voyage across the Atlantic begins.

YACHTSMEN FIGURING ON BREAKING RECORD

Prevailing Weather Conditions Justify Expectation.

SCHOONERS WELL ADVANCED

Barr Will Take Atlantic as Far North as Safety Will Permit, Says Alfred Marshall.

The arrival of each incoming ocean liner reports weather conditions met with in the journey across that give rise to the hope that the Endymion's record for the transatlantic passage under sail will be beaten by the first of the Kaiser Cup boats to arrive at the Lizard. Yesterday the two liners to reach port announced prevailing westerly winds had been encountered varying from 20 to 25 knots, with light seas, clear weather, and no ice. These are the conditions prayed for by all the schooners in the race, and suggest that those boats that took the northernmost course will find a clear path with nothing to interrupt a speedy passage. They favor the Atlantic and Hamburg most, and have delighted the yachtsmen who pinned their faith on these two favorites to win the cup.

Alfred Marshall, brother of the Atlantic's owner, said yesterday that he figured the crack schooner had covered easily 1,200 miles in the four and a half days elapsed since the start. This, allowing for the slow progress on the first day, would insure the boat arriving off the Lizard well under the record if the same rate was maintained. He said that Barr intended to go much further north than was generally supposed, taking every chance with the ice consistent with reasonable safety. He said both the owner and skipper were confident that with such conditions as they have so far encountered they could surely make fifteen knots, and that the Atlantic's speed limit was as high as seventeen knots made on several occasions.

The Hamburg, with a record of 16¼, is sure to be well advanced, while the Endymion and Fleur de Lys could not have been better suited by the weather man had they ordered their own brand. These four boats, equal in the choice of courses, should be well to the fore, with the Hildegarde, not yet heard from, likely to be showing almost as good a pace.

Neither the Apache nor the Valhalla have anything to complain of since the first forty hours' run, unless it be that the wind has not been strong enough to bother the fore-and-aft rigged yachts. Neither has the sea been heavy enough to worry them. Heavy weather these two have prayed for, with westerly gales that would drive them while compelling the others to run close-hauled, if not with almost bare poles. The Thistle, too, wanted this kind of weather, and Lord Brassey's Sunbeam as well.

LINERS MISSED THE YACHTS.

The Etruria and La Bretagne, Now in Port, Looked in Vain.

The Cunarder Etruria and the French liner La Bretagne both arrived at this port yesterday, after uneventful passages of the Atlantic. Among those who came over in the Etruria were Capt. Paynter, a representative of the Armstrongs of England, who took one of the Italian-built Japanese warships to Nagasaki, and who comes to the United States on business; Sir Thomas Wright, J. Herbert Marshall, and Charles Bennion, three British Magistrates, who come over for a pleasure tour, and J. B. Valentine.

On La Bretagne, which followed the Etruria up the river, came Brig. Gen. John R. Myrick, United States Army, and the Misses Myrick; Major Pederneiras, Brazilian Military Attaché at Washington, and Mrs. Pederneiras, and M. and Mme. Morel of Mexico. Neither the Etruria nor the Bretagne sighted any of the competing yachts in the international race on the way across, although the lookouts on both liners had orders to watch for the racing craft.

TWO DROWNED; WOMAN SAVED

Man Drags Rescuer Under After Upset in Mill Pond.

CHARLOTTE, N. C., May 21.—E. Lacey Hughes and Earl S. Faucett were drowned in the mill pond at Efland, N. C., to-day.

Faucett was boating with a young woman and the boat capsized. Hughes rescued the woman, but when he tried to save Faucett the latter pulled him under and both lost their lives.

A NUT FOR FINN TO CRACK.

Larceny Case with a Counter-Charge for New Magistrate.

City Magistrate "Battery Dan" Finn had a hard nut to crack yesterday in the Tombs Court in the case of the arrest of Robert C. Galindo, a tobacconist at 21 Fulton Street, who lives at 69 Berkeley Place, Brooklyn, on the charge of alleged larceny of $2,500, the complainant being Lewis Parker of 463 McDonough Street, Brooklyn, cashier of the Columbia Bank. Galindo's lawyer makes a counter charge that Parker is trying to get the police courts to collect a debt that has been settled already in the bankruptcy courts.

Galindo was arrested by Detective Feeney of the Tombs Court squad on a warrant. Parker charged that on Nov. 6, 1908, Galindo induced him to procure a loan of $2,500 from William H. Fleet, the security given being a quantity of tobacco, said to be worth $5,000, in a warehouse. Parker declares that Galindo, to get the loan, showed a receipt for one lot worth $2,400, signed by D. H. Delmonte, who has repudiated the receipt.

At the request of all concerned, Magistrate Finn held the defendant in $2,500 bonds for an examination at the Jefferson Market Court on June 7, when the whole matter will be thrashed out. Galindo's lawyer says that Galindo recently went through bankruptcy proceedings and paid $15,000 to his creditors, but that this is an old bill which Parker is trying to collect through the police court.

BIBLE CLASS PRAYS FOR ROCKEFELLER, JR.

Wants Him Back Strong in the Body and in the Faith.

HE HAS STOMACH TROUBLE

Thought to be Inherited from His Father—Nervous Depression and Despondency the Result.

True to the promise he made to his physician not to attend to any duties, however pleasant, John D. Rockefeller, Jr., did not appear at the meeting of his Bible class in the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church yesterday. Among the class members there seemed to be a great deal of solicitude about his health. In the prayer one of them made this request for divine aid:

"Oh, Lord, grant that our leader may gain health and strength during the Summer months and come back to us next Fall strong in the body and strong in the faith."

Exactly what Mr. Rockefeller's complaint is nobody in the class seems to know positively. It is the general opinion, however, that he must have inherited some of his father's stomach trouble, and that from it result nervous depression and despondency.

Next Sunday's will be the last session of the class until Fall. Homer Folks, ex-Charities Commissioner, will make the address. The class does not meet in the Summer.

The parable of the Pharisee, who thanked God he was not as other men, and the publican, who would not so much as lift his eyes unto heaven, was the subject of the talk by the assistant pastor, Mr. Richardson.

"We are too much inclined to take the means for the end," he said. "Religious observances, such as going to church, are all right in their way, but alone they are not worth a snap of the finger. They are a means to the real religious life, the spiritual life.

"Do you think there were more Pharisees in the time of Christ than there are now? I suppose that there are about the same proportion of Pharisees in New York to-day as there were in the Old World hundreds of years ago. They may not be religious pharisees, as the old ones were, but they are pharisees in some other direction. We are too much inclined to compare ourselves to others, to our own advantage. It is right that a man should have a fair estimate of himself, but he ought not to get it by continually comparing himself with other men."

As to the publican, commented Mr. Richardson, humility before God was a good quality, but the publican in this parable probably had too poor an opinion of his place in the world. It is not good to be too humble.

There was a new orchestra yesterday. It played Schumann's "In dem Sonnenscheim," which sounds to the uneducated ear a little like comic opera music, and the members of the class evidently liked it. There was a solo by a specially engaged singer.

Where the Foods Come From.

"Look here, waiter, honest, now, don't you dip every one of these flaked breakfast foods out of the same box?

"Well, yes, boss, we dus, all 'cept Grape-Nuts, 'cause that don't look like the others and people know 'zackly what Grape-Nuts looks like. But there's 'bout a dozen different ones named on the bill of fare, and they are all thin rolled flakes, so it don't make any difference which one a man calls for; we just take out the order from one box."

This talk led to an investigation. Dozens of factories sprung up about three years ago making various kinds of breakfast foods, seeking to take the business of the original prepared breakfast food—Grape-Nuts. These concerns after a precarious existence nearly all failed, leaving thousands of boxes of their foods in mills and warehouses. These were in several instances bought up for a song by speculators and sold out to grocers and hotels for little or nothing. The process of working off this old stock has been slow. One will see the names on menus of flaked foods that went out of business a year and a half or two years ago. In a few cases where the abandoned factories have been bought up, there is an effort to resuscitate the defunct, and by copying the style of advertising of Grape-Nuts, seek to influence people to purchase. But the public has been educated to the fact that all these thin flaked foods are simply soaked wheat or oats rolled thin and dried out and packed. They are not prepared like Grape-Nuts, in which the thorough baking and other operations which turn the starch part of the wheat and barley into sugar occupy many hours and result in a food so digestible that small infants thrive on it, while it also contains the selected elements of Phosphate or Potash and Albumen that unite in the body to produce the soft gray substance in brain and nerve centres. There's a reason for Grape-Nuts, and there have been many imitations, a few of the article itself, but many more of the kind and character of the advertising. Imitators are always counterfeiters and their printed and written statements cannot be expected to be different than their goods.

BUYING "AMERICAN" SUPPLIES.

A correspondent of The Sun in Washington points out that the magnitude of the disturbance to American trade and industry threatened by the plan of buying supplies for the canal where they can be had cheapest has been much exaggerated. The total amount of steel rails, for instance, demanded for the Isthmus Railway will not be more than 7,500 tons, which some of our mills could turn out in a day. We are constantly exporting all the variety of supplies required, excavators, engines, steam shovels, axes, saws, tools, lumber, cement. Of all the things needed on the Isthmus we draw from foreign lands less than 5 per cent., and we could readily furnish 95 per cent. of the Isthmus requirements in the ordinary course of business and not be strained in the effort. "Meanwhile," he concludes, "let American manufacturers keep cool, and when call is made for tenders for tools, machinery, and supplies, submit their bids on a basis of fair trade profits."

Whether intended or not, this is a pretty exposure of the real feeling at the bottom of the angry protest that has gone up from the fortified camps of the favored interests against the policy announced—and abandoned—by the President. Of course they can furnish the supplies as cheaply as their foreign rivals for the most part. They would do so without a murmur if the contractors for the canal were themselves foreigners with free access to the competing markets of the world. What they feared was, first, that they would be forced to furnish supplies thus cheaply and to forego the fat profits they extort from American consumers, and, second, that the great body of American consumers would take alarm at this startling proof of the extortion from which they are suffering under the operation of the swindling tariff. The favored monopolies reason: This is an American work; it should be made to yield as much as private Americans have to pay. The general public, now that the facts have been brought out, will reason: If the American Government engaged in a big enterprise on foreign soil can get its supplies 30 or 40 per cent. cheaper by buying abroad, or by getting export prices from American houses, what must be the rake-off from the tariff at our expense?

Undoubtedly the protected interests would have done much better to keep quiet and give the Government the same rates they give to other customers abroad. But they are so used to the notion that the Government exists for their benefit and is merely an instrument with which to bleed the American people, and they were so accustomed to having the officers of the Government act on that notion, that they overlooked the risk they ran in snatching for the most they could get. They made a big mistake. The public has received its impression. It will only be confirmed by the fact that the influence of the tariff monopolies has been strong enough to drive our courageous President from a position so frankly taken, so really just and honest and patriotic.

THE CZAR'S LIBERALISM.

It is not liberality but liberalism that the Czar of Russia is manifesting in these days. Undoubtedly he clings, as he must cling closely, to the principle of autocracy, and every relaxation of the harsh restrictions under which his subjects have lived and labored is a gift from one with absolute power to give or to withhold. It is quite impracticable for him to surrender in theory or in practice this idea of his attributes and obligations. All the same his recent decrees have been distinctly in the direction of greater freedom on the one hand and on the other hand in the direction of admitting the people to a share, probably a substantial share, in the government of the empire.
